University Enrollment Figures Jump Over 9,000 Mark

Freshmen Totals Hit 1,700 Plus

The University of North Carolina begins its 168th year this week with more than 9,100 students, and possibly up to 9,400, according to recent figures.

Last year at this time the top estimate was 8,500.

The milling thousands are registering today and Thursday, and classes begin Friday. There will be an estimated 1,737 freshmen.

These thousands also need a place to stay. This summer the Housing Office placed some 500 persons without rooms by placing three people in most dorm rooms, and four to a room in Battle-Vance-Pettigrew.

At present, the Housing Office has 50 students signed up for dorm rooms without available space. James J. Wadworth, chief of the Housing Office, expects about 200 other students to turn up soon wanting accommodations that are not available.

Real Problem

"The real problem is old students who have no place to stay for some reason or another. Either they thought their parents had paid their deposit, or they planned to stay in the fraternity house and did not make their average, or were going to get an apartment and couldn't find one."

Many students could and did find places off campus. Many married students had trouble finding apartments and were

OUT IN THE STREETS! This is one of the many homeless students who found that the world is cruel and the streets are hard as he walked them trying to find a dormitory or real estate agency that would take him in. Dorm rooms are hard to find and apartments are not to be had. The Housing Office staff is working nine to nine trying to file the names of the people who want dorm rooms.—(Photo by Jim Wallace)

Aycock Thinks N.C. People Will Vote For Bond Passage

UNC's Chancellor William B. Aycock thinks the people of North Carolina will vote for the statewide bond issue coming up this fall.

"I believe the people in the state realize the critical need for facilities here and that they will support the bond issue," said the Chancellor in an interview this week.

The University would receive $5,817,000 if the issue is approved, the money going for a new student union, health center, additions to the heating plant and steam mains, a cafeteria and service building, an addition to Wilson Hall (zoology) and for the renovation of Phillips Hall (mathematics).

"We will need the cooperation of the administration, faculty and students in an instructive program of interpretation in getting across to the citizens the need for more facilities," the Chancellor emphasized.

He went on to say that the need for facilities was dependent on the University's capacity to take its "fair share" in the increased number of applicants. Since 1956 enrollment has increased 2,000.

Costly Item

The costliest item in the voter's bond issue is a new student union. Some $1,622,000 of the total cost will have to be approved by the public, while a remaining million will come from student self-liquidating funds.

"We will have to work out the details on getting the million," said Chancellor Aycock. "We will try to borrow money from some appropriate source. I think we can secure it."

Graham Memorial, the present student union, was built in 1931 with contributions for a student body of 2,000.

"The present union is inadequate for the student body and for the progress of the student body," said the Chancellor. "It is just a matter of having had an inadequate building size to begin with."

Projected Site

The $5,817,000 is part of a total $7,617,100 capital improvements budget for UNC approved by the Assembly. The balance $1,800,000 will be financed by the legislative bond issue.

The latter fund will finance such capital improvements at UNC as the following: rewiring Philips Hall; renovating Murphy Hall (French); remodelling Cobb dormitory for women; renovating Bynum Hall (UNC News Bureau); storm sewer on the south campus; floor repairs at Venable Hall (chemistry); renovating Medical school areas; and air conditioning of Memorial Hospital and the School of Dentistry.

State Affairs Committee

"State Affairs Committee will be engaged this year in an informational campaign to build support for the passage of the bond issue," says Tom White, co-chairman of the committee.

He and Co-chairman Larry McDevitt will be meeting with civic organizations and principals of schools in hopes of conveying to them information about the needs of the university so that they in turn will pass it on to Parent-Teacher Associations and to the general public in the state.

The proposed student union-undergraduate library will be stressed, but all points will be covered. They will work closely with Chancellor William B. Aycock in their program to encourage passage of the bill.

Working with them on the committee will be Joe Sam Routh, Vernon Parker, and Jim Clotfelter.

Friday, Aycock Greet Freshmen At Reception

One thousand freshmen and transfer students, accompanied by about 700 friends and relatives, met at an informal reception Sunday afternoon with UNC President and Mrs. William C. Friday, Chancellor and Mrs. William B. Aycock and orientation committee chairman Al Pollard.

The two-hour affair began shortly after 2 p.m. on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial, with the Fridays, Aycocks and Pollard shaking a line of hands that stretched at times to more than 200 feet in length.

Twenty-six members of the Orientation Committee were kept busy refilling punch bowls and cookie platters. In all, 55 gallons of soft drinks—in 2700 cups—and 75 dozen cookies were consumed.

The reception heralded the start of UNC's new academic year. According to Pollard, 2800 invitations were mailed to the University's incoming 2100 freshmen and 700 transfer students.

IN UNC FACILITIES

Increases Pose Problems

An upstepped enrollment poses record problems in facilities at Carolina this fall.

Most dormitory rooms will be tripled-up and many classes will be scheduled far into the afternoon to accomodate the swelling waves of students.

Some 3,900 men students—200 more than last year—will occupy the men's dorms: there will be three students to a room in each dorm except Battle-Vance-Pettigrew which will house four to a room, and Conner, Avery, Parker and Teague which will continue to house two to a room. The latter three dorms are the newest on campus, their rooms sporting built-in furniture making triple occupancy difficult.

University Maintains

The University maintains facilities for 512 married couples in the new married students housing and Victory Village, plus apartments to take care of approximately 30 graduate women and faculty members. The housing office hopes to provide accomodations for another 100 married couples.

"We'd be lost without the people who live in the area," said James Wadsworth, head of the Housing Office. "We've had excellent cooperation from people in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area in helping accomodate the great influx of students."

The office of the Dean of Women reports no significant problem in housing women students this year. Most of the women's dorms house three to a room.

Late Classes

The scheduling of classes until 3 and 4 p.m. will probably be the trend in allowing for the expansion of the collegiate ranks. Laboratory periods will run in the morning as well as the afternoon, with some periods running up to 6 p.m.

"By scheduling more classes per day, lecture and lab rooms will be used more today than ever before," reports R. E. Strong of the Office of Records and Registration.

More Solutions

Other solutions to problems of expansion are being worked out. By this time next year, the University will have its new Romance language building completed. Additions to Swain Hall (radio-TV) and Hill Hall (music) are expected by that time. Plans include new botany and geology buildings to go under construction this year.

Now under construction are two four-winged men's dormitories situated adjacent to Manning Drive south-east of Kenan Stadium. Slated to open next fall, these dorms will house about 600 men each.

Planetarium Bills Heavens' Heroes

"Heroes of the Heavens" will open the Morehead Planetarium's new program schedule October 10, to be followed by "Meteors, Fireballs and Bolides" November 7 and the Christmas story November 28.

Currently running is "Carolina Moon," scheduled to run through October 9.

Other programs for the new year include "Scouting the Skies," beginning January 9; then "Red Giants to White Dwarfs" and "Easter, the Awakening" February 13 and March 27. "Planets on Parade" will open May 1.

Public programs are regularly scheduled at 8:30 p.m. daily with matinees Saturdays at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., on Sundays at 3 and 4 p.m., on legal holidays at 3 p.m., and football weekends at 5 p.m. The Planetarium will be closed December 25-26.

Edwards Picked To Assist Dean

Rudolph Lee Edwards has received a one-year appointment as assistant to the dean of student affairs at the University.

Edwards, who will assume duties September 14, replaces Ray Jefferies who takes a year's leave of absence to study for a M.A. degree in guidance at Columbia University.

Graduating in 1959 with a B.A. in English, Edwards had served as a dormitory president and was a member of Student Legislature, Student Party, Order of the Old Well, Order of the Grail, Order of Janus, and the Dance Committee.

Flicks Begin Friday

The Free Flicks series begins this week with two popular films, "The Perfect Furlough" with Tony Curtis, set for Friday, and "A Star is Born" with Judy Garland and James Mason, Saturday night.

Both films will be shown at the regular times—7:30 and 9:30 p.m. —in Carroll Hall.

The free flicks are sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board which selects a number of films to be shown each weekend. The films are shown on Friday, Saturday, and occasionally Sunday.

The Sunday series is a more serious selection of films including art and film classics. The Friday and Saturday series is designed for more popular entertainment.

I.D. cards are required for admission.

Library Schedule

Louis Round Wilson Memorial Library will be open Wednesday and Thursday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. On Friday, the first day of classes, the library will resume its regular schedule.

FRENCH POSTER EXHIBIT

An art exhibit of French posters is on view at the Ackland Art Center and will continue there through Monday, Sept. 18. Sponsored by the Alliance Francaise of Chapel Hill and the UNC Art Department, it includes work by Picasso, Cocteau, Matisse, Leger, and others.

Government Head Promoted At UNC

Charles Edwin Hinsdale, an assistant director of the University of North Carolina's Institute of Government, has been promoted to an assistant professor.

Assistant Director Hinsdale's teaching speciality is in the area of criminal law and procedure, administration of the courts, and in motor vehicle law. He has had 15 years of experience in federal and criminal law and procedure and legislation in Washington, D. C. and in Hawaii.

A STRUM, TRILL & BLUE NOTE

Free Programs Set

And this is the way the session begins, not with a bang, but a strum, a thrill and a blue note.

Three free programs are scheduled for this week—Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, all musical, all interesting, and all free.

Wednesday night on Emerson Field at 7, Rambling Jack Elliott will entertain with what some might refer to as "expression in the folk idiom" but what most would call just old time pickin 'n singing.

Rambling Jack has been somewhat of a "rake and rambling boy" for some 15 years, having been on the road from his unlikely home in Brooklyn, through Texas and Oklahoma and most recently in England where he charmed the traditionally staid British audiences with American folk songs and earned renown as America's most representative balladeer.

Travels With Guthrie

Mr. Elliot has been influenced by the great Woody Guthrie, with whom he traveled for five years on the folk-song circuit and who is reputed to have said that "Jack Elliot sounds more like me than I do." He has sung for Princess Margaret ("She was very hip") at a private party in London, in Left Bank coffee houses, and "in every saloon on Highway 40."

Friday night at 8:30 the Hot Nuts, who have not just returned from England, will entertain on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial. This local combo has been a constant favorite on the campus, and always promises an enjoyable evening.

Saturday night at 8 Marco Rizo, one of the foremost Cuban pianists, will give a concert in Memorial Hall.

Born in Havana, Cuba, Mr. Rizo was graduated from the National Conservatory in Havana. He worked in many orchestras and small groups until he rose to the position of pianist with the Havanna Philharmonic under the direction of Pedro San Juan.

He joined the U. S. Army in 1942 and toured the army camps with the USO. After discharge he went to California and worked on the Bob Hope show, appeared at Ciro's and the Mocambo, and before long was writing and arranging scores for Columbia and Republic Pictures.

After this he worked for eight years with Desi Arnaz as pianist, conductor and arranger for the "I Love Lucy" TV show.

The Honor System

Flung with sobering suddeness into that enigma known fondly as The Carolina Way of Life, the apprentice collegian casts about for a symbol, a known quantity to guide him through the many unknowns he is experiencing.

His plight is not novel. He, in fact, is accompanied in his gropings by many who have already weathered the initial years, yet have failed to find the key. Paradoxically, the answer is by far the most simple one to find during the first weeks of Carolina living. It is droned endlessly from orientation podiums and overflows from orientation literature. It is shouted, whispered, pictured, dramatized. It is the subject of myriad phamphlets, discussions, and in this audio-visual age, has even been explained in a movie.

Yet, with this wealth of information, with the air fairly saturated with explanation, many freshmen go on to spend four years in limbo, failing miserably to realize that the central at Carolina is one word: Honor.

But piously mouthing "Honor" is less than meaningless. If the Honor System at Carolina were perfect, its distinguishing characteristic would be silence. But the system—because Honor cannot be systematized—is neither perfect nor silent. Nor will it ever be.

The Honor Code will be broken, not once this year, but many times. And the majority of the violators will not be discovered. This does not mean that Honor is an imperfect ideal, but only that human frailty dismisses the possibility of achieving it. This frailty is what necessitates the councils and officials whose job it is to bolster whatever sense of Honor the student already possesses. In short, to attempt the impossible task of administering Honor.

The tangible side of the Honor System, the councils, unfortunately, is the only aspect that many students see. But the councils and administrators of the Honor System are not to be confused with Honor itself.

The barbs often loosed at the Honor System itself come from an improper understanding of the term. To pass judgment on the efficacy of administrating the system is valid; to attack the system itself is not. Constructive criticism of the workings of the Councils can reasonably be expected to produce good results. But to deny the practicability of the Honor system under a studied guise of "being realistic," cannot.

We have a right to ask that the administrators of the system strive for perfection: but we have no right to expect that they will achieve it. Nor do we have the right to ask more of them than we ask of ourselves.

These administrators, if they are true to the concept of Honor, must sometimes judge in a manner that seems harsh. Honor is a difficult god to worship, and must deal harshly with those who default. Any system that sets for itself a perfect ideal must be expected to act with strength and decision when it deals with those who revile it.

If, after four years, the student has not embraced the ideal of Honor, then the system has not failed. The student has.

And many, many of you will.

Welcome Freshmen

As part of that group of young men suffering under such adjectives as inexperienced, uninitiated, starry-eyed, timid or shrinking, and conveniently lumped under the heading of Incoming Freshmen, you have by this time already experienced most of the indignities of that sadistic ritual called Orientation.

You have been inundated with tons of literature, bored by a thousand speeches, herded about the campus sweat-soaked and exhausted. You have been welcomed by everyone from the Chancellor (who sincerely means it) to the Chapel Hill merchants (who want your money).

You have been warned, advised, cajoled and otherwise made to feel that you're a blithering nincompoop with not enough brains to know that the Bull's Head is not a bathroom for male cattle, or that The Rat is not an honor system spy.

And, through it all, you're probably just as inexperienced, uninitiated, etc., as you were before—which is probably not very much anyway.

All this is by way of saying that you didn't learn very much from an extensive program of Freshman Orientation—except, perhaps, that you should have skipped the whole thing in favor of talking with someone, Kemp Nye, for instance, who could tell you an earful about Chapel Hill—particularly the Merchant's Association.

But, at least, you are no longer an incoming Freshman. You are now a number in the files of the Housing Office, which is doing its dead level best to get you out of Cobb Basement.

But, given a lot of perseverence, a monumental ambition, and not a little will power, you can become a successful student. Despite first impressions, Carolina is, at least to some of us, a great University, maudlin though it may sound to say it.

A Word Of Thanks

Special thanks are due those DTH staff members who cut short their summer vacations to return early for the hectic job of producing this orientation issue: Associate Editor Margaret Anne Rhymes, News Editor Steve Vaughn, and Sports Editor Harry W. Lloyd. The editor would particularly like to thank staff members Neill Clark and Bill Weekes, who, although new to the DTH, did a commendable job, producing the bulk of the copy which appears in these pages.

We would also like to mention the advertisers who, for the first time in years, took the orientation issue out of the red.

JONATHAN YARDLEY

Beginning: The Hour Of Awakening

The following first appeared in the Sept. 13, 1960 issue of The Daily Tar Heel, edited by Jonathan Yardley. Editor Yardley titled the comment "Hark The Sound," intending it as an introduction to Carolina.

This, they say is the hour of awakening. Severing manfully his ties with the hearth, the young man strides confidently toward college, rejoicing in his new-found freedom, calling all hail to the gods of higher learning and stretching his social muscles.

Snatched thus from the comfort and joy of home, he arrives at this institution of academic pursuit, prepared to embrace warmly its traditions, its institutions and its football team. He is swept into its life and soon becomes a full and enthusiastic part of the community.

For four years—or more, if his ambitions run so high—he labors diligently at the feet of these gods of learning, plays with abandoned reserve and learns not merely to respect his fellow man but to love him. At the end of this four-year period of incubation he leaves the academic world and enters the Great Paths of Life—a full, perfect and sufficient man.

Unfortunately, very little of this is true. We do not propose to establish ourselves as a Cassandra in the midst of Hedonists, but neither can we accept the sterilized concept of College Days.

The American university has changed a great deal since the days to Tom Swift and Tom Brown. From a small, genteel community of souls sharing a passable interest in the intellect it has grown to the scope any status of Big Business. If it is not, however, a place for the shattering of illusions, so also it is a place for the building of great hopes.

You, the Freshmen to whom this first issue of The Daily Tar Heel is hopefully addressed, enter Chapel Hill at a time of great unrest in the state, nation and the world. Old values and traditions crumble daily before new and strange ones. The cloud of war hangs over you in an hour which should be given to thoughts of peace and progress. No one is handing you much to be happy about.

Do not expect to learn too much, because you will not. You, and your fellows in the classes above you, will not respond to the challenges of the classroom. The resolutions voiced before Mother will vanish when set in the perspective of beer, moving pictures, dances and football weekends. You will meet your requirements, but only a few will exceed them.

Yet we cannot be wholly pessimistic. You will learn much about yourself and your fellow man. You probably will not learn to love him but you may tolerate him. You will grow in a kind of acquired wisdom that comes only through living.

Do not start these next four years intending to set the world on fire. Set yourself on fire first; the world can wait. If you cannot find the stamina to meet academic challenges at least try to meet personal challenges. The academic challenges will ultimately influence you because you cannot escape them here.

You are entering a great university. It will not take you long to discover that most of us here love it, and it will not be much longer before you are infatuated as well. But it is not perfect, and do not ask it to be. Its facilities are not always adequate and its attitude often is reprehensible. But it is here for you to exploit until you have gained all from it that you are able. Think of it as an instrument of progress, a cornucopia partly filled but haviny much more than you can digest.

Approach this culuminating stage in your education with respect, not unbridled glee, and not with fear. Handle yourself as a responsible, partially enlightened individual and someday, somewhere, you may believe that these four years—somehow—were worth it all.

MIKE ROBINSON

Needed: Academic Shot In Arm

Why are you here at Carolina?

Some students quickly reply "to get an education," or "to have a blast, it beats working or the Army." Others think they are realistic—they say "I need a degree to make more money," or "I came here for my M.R.S."

These are typical answers, but obviously they are not the best answers, nor should they be all black or all white.

This is leading to the best answer, in this writer's opinion, which takes into account the most valuable thing this University can give its students, namely—ideas. The best answer must be "to gain as many ideas as possible in the educational process."

* * *

The best proof that ideas, in every shape, form, and hue (including pink), are the best things students can absorb, are the many students who graduate from this University with the same simple ideas that they had when they entered. For a 22 year old to think as an 18 year old is pathetic, yet it is seen in every senior class.

Ideas and concepts are lying dormant in library books and professors' minds, just waiting to be picked. Every field has a myriad of ideas for those with guts enough to go after them, Just examine, and accept or reject.

(A warning to those who may expect professors to easily debate the pros and cons of controversial topics, like Marxism, birth control, and Atheism: a thin residue of McCarthyism covers some parts of the campus along with the stench from a few religious fanatics.)

A whole litertaure of ideas can be found for any period in any country, whether it be Emerson, Spencer and Dewey at the turn of the century in the U. S., or Smith, Hume and Malthus in the late 18th century in England.

Of course, ideas and concepts are as readily found in chemistry, mathnmatics and physics books, except that these ideas are supposed to be practical rather than theoretical. The only hitch being that some so-called scientists cannot apply to everyday life what they learn in the laboratory.

The ideas that all educated men (and women) should be familiar with are not sometimes easily mastered. The way to overcome a block to understanding is by perserverance for an extended period of time. Little by little, the essence of the idea sinks in, and finally, with a feeling of exhileration, you understand it.

All this talk about get with it, boy, soak up ideas, is fine and dandy except for the ever present cloud of anti-intellectualism.

Perhaps the basis for anti-intellectualism is the idea that an aristocdacy of intellectuals will dominate the future with their superior minds. That's not such a bad idea.

Or maybe the basis for anti-intellectualism is the 'C scholars" who pervade the campus. It's probably a combination of both, in addition to resentment against snobbish eggheads.

If there can be any doubt that this campus could use a shot in its academic arm, the reader need only look around him to see that there are too many talkers and too few thinkers.

CURTIS GANS

This Will Surely Happen Unless...

(The following editorial was written by Curtis B. Gans, 1959 graduate of the University of North Carolina and former editor of The Daily Tar Heel. The present editor feels this to be an outstanding example of student expression and certainly worthy of re-printing. It first appeared in the 1958 Orientation Issue.)

The year starts and it is a new experience for many. For many, billed by their high school presidents or school superintendants in a somewhat less than eloquent commencement speech as America's future leaders or citizens of tomorrow, the change will be quite drastic. For most the change is predictable.

There will be first the interminable orientation with meetings, meetings, and more meetings, some of which some of the new class will skip. They will hear many words about the Carolina tradition of freedom, about the Honor System, and about student government and activities in general. They will be told that a proper balance between scholarship and other interests will have to be made.

With much new found wisdom the student will go to his dormitory and get ready for the first day of classes.

SOON THE STUDENT finds out that the Honor System does not work too well, and that the noise in many dormitory corridors makes study impossible and life only a little unhappy. At about this time they also find that one in five, if that many, professors that they have for freshman courses are interesting, much less stimulating.

Almost all will forget their academic load until before the quiz and then assimilate what is necessary for quick regurgitation on the next day. They will be attuned to assimilating fact temporarily without placing the fact into context. They will be attuned not to think, and even those who came here not looking for a higher paying job as the primary result of a college education, will give up their goal early.

THOSE PERSISTENT enough to continue with intellectual pursuit will find it difficult to find people to converse with about anything save liquor, sex, and past experiences. A feeble attempt wil be made by some to participate in activities, but for most this will mean lines in a yearbook rather than a personal contribution.

By the end of their sophomore year, those who have not received a high office will retire permanently to the bar stool or the uncomfortable cots that grace most dormitories and fraternities. They will content themselves with the activtiy of a Saturday night party or the intellecual pursuit of Mickey Mantle's batting average. They will be by the end of college little changed for the better by their four years.

THERE WILL BE several who will become "teachers," but there will be but one or two teachers. There will be a few who will become "lawyers," but there may be one lawyer.

There will be many writers and businessmen, but few will see their writings in print and few will rise above wanting to make the most money for themselves.

There will be some scientists, but few with the prospective to place the greatly growing body of knowledge into. There will be a few "leaders" and probably no leader. Many will not finish school.

Those that do finish will listen to a brilliant commencement speech by a famous person and comment on how brilliant the speech was largely because they know that the person must be famous for some reason. Few will question how and why he got his fame and almost no one will carry the words of the speaker into life.

EMBARKING ON the long voyage of life outside the ivory tower, "America's future leaders" will be the same generation as the last. They will plunge themselves into Spanish-American Wars, as quickly as they react "Coca-Cola" to "The Pause That Rrefreshes." They will hear the words communist, socialist, radical, non-conformist, and even individualist and react negatively not knowing what they are reacting to, but blindly taking somebody else's word for it.

In them the future leaders, as they have been called, lies not the hope of America but the promise of its annihilation in an age when annihilation can be accomplished easily.

This will happen as surely as you are reading this, UNLESS . . .

Unless they as individuals try to find what they are and preserve the uniqueness of themselves.

Unless they resist the tide that chips at and ebbs away the curiosity that should be native to students.

Unless they become actively critical of their society and work, not just gripe, towards its improvement.

Unless they realize that reality is not a social whirl but rather is a problem worth coming to grips with and working out on a day to day basis.

Unless they shake the cliches and customs that society has forced upon them and they have accepted as making it the easiest way.

Unless they refuse to subvert themselves at all times to the will of the group.

The wading against the stream is the most difficult. It demands courage and endurance. A successful passage, however, has rewards that far outnumber any of those received going another way. The road to a personal sense of well-being lies this way; the road to a personal Hell lies in the other direction.

The alternatives are clear. It is their choice. They will probably make the wrong one.

'62 Symposium Plans Underway Since Last Year

The Carolina Symposium has been planning since last year for the program of a week's lectures, debate and discussion around the topic "Today's Revolutions," scheduled April 1-5, 1962.

The Symposium is the oldest program of its kind and has served as a stimulus and model for other such groups all over the country.

The purpose is to "enrich the intellectual atmosphere of the campus by an organized program of inquiry led by authorities in all fields."

The student chairman is Joe Oppenheimer who will coordinate the multiple activities of the student board and work in conjunction with faculty and civic leaders.

COME FROM AFAR. These are a part of the large number of foreign students who come to Carolina each year. This morning a breakfast will be held for them at the Carolina Inn at 8:30. They will register on Thursday.

Graham Memorial Union Focus Of Student Activities

Graham Memorial, the Carolina Student Union, is the focus of a concentric system of services and activities designed "to enrich the social and cultural life of the campus."

Located on North campus next to the planetarium parking lot, the building itself provides a number of relaxation features such as pool, ping pong, checkers or chess or for the less active, magazines, television, free phones, and comfortable couches. Recorded music may be selected in the information office.

Another service of GM is the information office where one can find the whats, whens, wheres and whos of practically everything on campus.

The Rendezvous Room located in the basement is a place for afternoon study and evening socializing, furnished with tables and chairs, a jukebox and, at night, a little light and sometimes a combo.

In addition to providing the facilities for relaxation GM, through the agency of the Graham Memorial Activities Board sponsors a program of entertainment and activity such as the popular "Free Flicks" shown every weekend in Carroll Hall and this year has scheduled such films as "North By Northwest", "Anastasia," and "Pillow Talk."

GMAB sponsors its own production group, the Petite Dramatique, open to all students interested in theatre as actors, directors, designers, or playwrights and has produced a variety of plays ranging from "'Waiting for Godot" to "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

Marcel Marceau and the Weavers have been brought to the campus under the aegis of GMAB and this year Ferrante and Teicher are scheduled to appear.

GMAB is composed of five committees under the leadership of Inman Allen, president. The vice-presidential position is presently vacant. Secretary is Kate Oldham. The committees and their chairmen are:

Wilson Library— Important Building

Perhaps the most important single building on the Carolina campus is the Louis Round Wilson Library. It owns more than a million volumes and is ranked third among the southern colleges and universities.

The "stacks," literary catacombs where the books are stored, are open to students daily until 6 p.m. for study purposes, and permits for evening study may be obtained from the circulation desk.

All entering students must pass an examination on the use of the library and for this purpose a handbook has been prepared which explains the workings of the Wilson Library and the various services.

Morning lectures are also given in the early weeks of the semester to instruct freshmen in library usage.

Those already familiar with the workings of a large library may take the examination and become exempted from the library lectures.

Contain Material

The undergraduate library and reserve reading room contain material for specific courses. The business administration — social science division contains books and periodicals covering these areas and the humanities section on the second floor is a general reference center with hundreds of periodicals covering a wide range of topics.

Tar Heel Footballers Look Ahead; All-Senior Backfield Sparks Team

BY HARRY W. LLOYD
DTH Sports Editor

A revitalized North Carolina football team is practicing daily for its opening contest on September 30. Tar Heel coach Jim Hickey, beginning his third season as boss of the UNC gridders, has twenty lettermen on his 61 man team.

Last season, the Blue and White experienced what was almost a fruitless season. Seven losses dulled the picture, and came as a big disappointment because the Tar Heels had been predicted to rank among the leaders of the Atlantic Coast Conference. The only wins of the campaign were a 13-7 victory over Notre Dame; a 7-6 decision over Duke, and a 35-8 triumph over Virginia.

Spirits are high in the Carolina camp, but nobody has made any glowing predictions. The Tar Heels have a long road ahead, and they know well that it can be marked with many dangers. Yet, as always, players and other personnel look forward hopefully to the beginning of the new season.

The reasons for this hope are quite evident. The Tar Heels have what might well be their best backfield in ten years. Quarterbacking the first unit is senior Ray Farris, who went almost all the way on offense last year. Farris accounted for 1148 yards, 1137 of which came on the 63 passes he completed. He punted for a 37.6 average.

Lenny Beck and Gib Carson operate at the halfbacks. Beck had a 3.4 rushing average on 31 carries last year, while Carson carried 78 times for 307 yards and a 3.9 figure. Both of these go defensively as well as on offense. Beck intercepted 3 passes in 1960.

Fullback Bob Elliott was the top ground gainer last year. The Hendersonville blockbuster, who has never been thrown for a loss, picked up 356 yards for a four yard average. Joe Davies, another senior, alternates on the first unit with Elliott. Hickey doesn't call either one of them his starting fullback. Both play bangup football on defense as well as on offense.

The line doesn't have the experience that the backfield does. The only seniors in the top seven are guard Jim LeCompte, tackle John Hegarty, and end Conrad Sloop. But the four juniors in the forward wall are the real bright spots of the team.

Joe Craver is the center, Duff Greene plays at guard, Tony Hennessey is at tackle, and John Runco is at end. Coaches and other sideliners expect that the performance of this quartet will determine the degree of success enjoyed by the team this year.

The Tar Heels play a 5-game home schedule, which gets off to a bang with the N. C. State game here on September 30. Other contests in Kenan stadium are with LSU, Clemson, Tennessee, and Virginia.

On the road, they will encounter Miami, Duke, Wake Forest, South Carolina, and Maryland.

Freshman Coach George Barclay, whose players haven't been able to see much action this week during orientation, swing into full action today. Barclay has several top notch prospects.

Soccer Coach Marvin Allen Must Replace Several Men

Coach Marvin Allen of the Carolina soccer team is looking over his prospects for the coming season with an eye for finding replacements at several positions.

Last year the UNC booters finished third in the conference, behind Maryland and Duke. Losses to these two schools in the final week of the season killed Tar Heel hopes for the title.

Gone from that team is inside man Joe Perkins, the team captain, who hailed from British Honduras. Perkins, one of the top players in the conference, won the Senior Merit award at UNC last year. Bob Quakenbush, a great defensive man, is also gone, along with Tom Evins and Bill Sprinkle.

Missing from the UNC offensive attack this season will be James Reston, Jr., who is studying for a year at Oxford. Reston was the leading scorer on the team as a sophomore.

There are several bright spots for the Tar Heels, however. Captain Dick Bordogna bolsters the team at fullback. Larry Steele, a sensational goalie as a sophomore, joins Tom Griffith in the goaltending department.

Bill Shettle, who played inside last year, is a top candidate to replace Reston at center forward. Jack Horner, a sophomore, will also have a run at that position.

Kepner and Sidbury will be the top prospects in the forward line for Carolina.

Coach Allen, in his 14th season as the Tar Heel coach, has extended an invitation for all interested persons to come out for the team. "We want players with or without experience," he said.

He is especially interested in stocking his freshman squad. Art Lemery, a graduate of Brackport State, New York, will be the yearling coach. Coach Allen and Lemery invited freshmen to visit him after three o'clock in the afternoon if they are interested in playing soccer.

This fall, the Tar Heels will be playing their best home schedule in history. On the slate for Fetzer Field are Roanoke, Westchester (who played in the NCAA semifinals last year), Washington & Lee, Maryland (NCAA runnerup last year), Pfeiffer, Lynchburg (who handed UNC their first loss last year), and Duke.

Booters Have Exciting Home Schedule This Year

UNC Cross Country Should Top ACC

Since the Atlantic Coast Conference was established in 1953, the University of North Carolina has won more championships in the sport of cross country than has any other school. The 1961 Tar Heel harriers should be an odds on favorite to win their fourth title this fall.

Coach Dale Ranson's runners captured the ACC meet last November, scoring 25 points as compared to Maryland's 38, Duke's 61, and N. C. State's 120 (low score wins). Carolina's Rett Everett was the first place finisher on the Maryland course, running the 3.9 miles in 17:53. Gerry Stuver, also of UNC, was second in 18:06. Mike Folk finished fourth, and Carmine Lunetta placed sixth.

The Carolina picture is bright, naturally, because all of the aforementioned will be back this season. The returning lettermen, plus some topnotch runners off the undefeated freshman team, should make the Tar Heels one of the better units in the country.

Everett, the best long distance man in the conference last season, returns for his senior year. The Greenville boy, who has an A average in chemistry, won the two mile in both the ACC indoor games and in the outdoor meet.

Stuver, a New Jersey junior, contrasts in running style with Everett. Whereas Everett is a short fellow with a stride to match, Stuver stands well over six feet and takes much longer strides. Stuver ran the mile in track competition last spring.

Lunetta, another New Jersey native, could easily emerge as the best runner of the three. He showed tremendous improvement last spring, and was Everett's biggest challenger in the 2-mile event.

Ted Cohen and Lou Sullivan are letterman returnees who will be trying to get into the lineup for the first meet of the season, at Clemson on October 7.

Overall last year, the Tar Heels won six matches and lost one. Maryland, undefeated during the regular season, whipped the UNC runners in a triangular meet with Virginia, but Carolina brought home the bacon in the conference

The Daily Tar Heel sports department is in need of several additional writers. All students interested in joining the sports staff are asked to meet with Sports Editor Harry W. Lloyd in the GM office at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon. Those who cannot meet at this time, are asked to contact the Sports Editor at 942-2356.

Presently, there are practically no apartments to be found in Chapel Hill, especially in walking distance of the campus, according to the flat-footed apartment hunters abounding in the area. Many expect to pack up and return home. Others are trying to last a while staying with a friend until their number comes up in the Housing Office.

MARCHING TAR HEELS, 1961

Tryouts For Band Underway

Tryouts for the 1961 version of the UNC Marching Tarheels are being held through Thursday, according to Dr. Herbert W. Fred, Director.

All incoming freshmen and transfer students having an interest in instrumental band music should come by 02 Hill Hall, directly across from the Planetarium, between the hours of 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Any student with a minimum of instrumental experience can usually qualify for membership.

The Marching Tarheels present elaborate programs of music and drill maneuvers at each home football game and accompany the team and student body to one or more out-of-state games each year.

This year, plans have been made for a trip to Washington, D. C., for the Maryland game at College Park on October 14—leaving Chapel Hill on Friday and returning on Sunday with free time for sight-seeing, etc., in the nation's capital.

Receive Credit

These credits may be accumulated so that the equivalent number of hours may be substituted for elective courses.

In addition to this credit, members who meet the requirement of three semesters of creditable service are awarded a monagramed sweater.

There are no fees required of band members. The uniforms of the UNC Band are furnished free of charge to all band members and are altered as necessary to fit the wearer.

The band member needs only to provide black shoes, white shirt, and the uniform raincoat which is sold to the band members at the modest price of one dollar.

Instruments such as tubas, baritones, drums, bell lyra, and also French horns, alto and bass clarinets, oboes and bassoons are loaned free of charge to members needing them.

Few Hours

A few hours a week in a musical organization will not seriously affect study time.

Records indicate that from 15-25 per cent of the band personnel make the Dean's List and each year several are elected to Phi Eta Sigma and Phi Beta Kappa. Rehearsals are held at 4:30 p.m. on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, beginning on Thursday, September 14.

The Marching Tarheels are administered under the Department of Music of the University and governed by elected student officers under the guidance of the Direcor of Bands. This year's officers include J. Michael Barham, President; Robert D. Greeson, Vice-President; and John S. Pashcal, Secretary-Treasurer.

Yack Pictures Scheduled

Yack senior pictures will be taken Monday through Friday from 1 to 6 p.m. in the Graham basement.

Editors Jerry Tognoli and Dick Reppucci ask all seniors to come early in the week, rather than stand in long lines at the end of the week.

All new students interested in working on the year book are requested to be at the Yack office in GM Sunday afternoon at 2.

Freshman pictures will be taken the week after the seniors, followed by juniors and sophomores.

Kennedy Aided With Homework

President John Kennedy is receiving aid with his Tar Heel homework, in preparation for his visit October 12, from noted scholar Archibald Henderson and the UNC Press.

Both Henderson, official biographer of Bernard Shaw, and Lambert Davis, UNC Press director, have mailed Kennedy books dealing with N. C. and the University.

Campus Politicos Active

Glad-handing campus politicos roam the campus like men afire with ambition to lead. At times this fire is sparked by aspirations toward being labeled "BMOC."

Yet enough inidividuals show a genuine dedication to campus statemanship to provide serious and capable leadership.

* * *

Competition for the higher student government offices is keen, and the heat of campaigning sometimes results in rash statements, mudslinging and other manifestations of politics-as-usual. So intense in fact, are UNC politics that an alumnus who stepped out of UNC politics to ultimately occupy a high state office remarked that "this

NSA Posts Go To 2 At UNC

Bill Harriss, student body president, was voted to represent the Carolina-Virginia region of USNSA on the National Executive Committee.

Hank Patterson, student body vice-president and former NSA co-ordinator on campus, was elected by the National Executive Committee to serve on the National Interim Committee. This group of five acts as an interim committee of the National Executive Committee.

Executive Committee

The Executive committee is the policy making and interpreting body of USNSA between the yearly National Student Congresses, the supreme legislative body. Some 35 persons elected from the 21 NSA regions maintain posts on the Executive Committee.

USNSA, a confederation of student governments in 399 colleges, is dedicated to increasing students' recognition of their responsibilities in regard to local, national, and international affairs.

Manages $142,000 Budget

Ranging in efficiency from a potent governmental machine to a bumbling beauracracy, student government at Carolina weaves itself into almost every phase of campus living, epitomizing the ideal of student autonomy.

Like the heroine of a well-known nursery rhyme, when student government is good it's very good; when it's bad, it's horid. Its intricacies are often confusing, yet it has become known as one of the more outstanding systems in the nation, managing a budget which this year totals $142,000, at the same time carrying the bulk of disciplinary problems, studying and acting on local, state and national problems and otherwise occupying the some 600 students which comprise its myriad courts, councils, boards and associations.

Ideally, this phenomenon

NO MORE IDLING

SG Activities Clunk Into Gear

Student Government activities after idling through the summer months clunk into gear with the beginning of the fall semester and Orientation Week in preparation for the long pull.

Under the enthusiastic leadership of Bill Harriss Morehead Scholar from Columbia, S. C., president of the student body, the student government faces a full slate of activities.

As student body president, Harriss is responsible to the students of the University, who elected him to represent them to other students and colleges, and to be the ultimate authority in all business of the Student Government.

Among the president's many duties are the appointing of committees and a presidential cabinet, enforcing of laws and regulations passed by the student legislature, and using the presidential veto to control legislation which he feels is unsuited to the best interests of the students.

Operating on the premise that students are capable of exercising the responsibility needed to govern their own affairs, the Student Government has taken increasing hold of the governing process of the University and now almost all student rules are a result of student action.

Major Officers

The other major offices of the student government are vice-president, treasurer, and secretary. These officials assist the president in governing the University.

Vice-President Hank Patterson's chief duty is that of speaker of the student legislature. In addition he is next in line should the president vacate and act as the student body representative at other colleges and at official functions.

Maintains Records

Mary Townsend, student body secretary, is responsible for maintaining the records and files of the student government, recording the minutes of all student body meetings, and handling correspondence for the executive branch. She is also Harriss's personal secretary and is assisted by Miss Staples, a full-time secretary with long experience in student government.

As treasurer, Pete Thompson will handle the budget of approximately $150,000 appropriated annually by the legislature.

Inter-Dorm Council Makes More Merrier

The Men's Interdormitory Council, the second largest representative body on the campus, annually faces problems in proportion to its size and this year is no exception.

The addition of some 200 students to already overcrowded conditions will necessitate putting three people in rooms designed for two in all but four dormitories.

The IDC was created to make the more merrier by controlling the activities of dormitory men, maintaining an efficient system of government, to stimulating a fraternal relationship among dormitory residents and fostering a wholesome social program.

Elected Officers

It is composed of the president and one elected officer from each dorm who are elected for a one year period beginning in the spring. The IDC elects six executive officers. This year's president is Jim Gaulden.

One of the important branches of the IDC is the court system which handles all cases of misconduct and cases involving damage to the dormitory.

$9,000 Damage

Last year there was over $9,000 damage done in the dormitories including door-burnings and window smashings, not to mention such misconduct as the luring of innocent kittens to second story rooms and hurling them out the window to see if they really would land on their feet.

In addition to regulating dormitory life the IDC also tries to make it more enjoyable by sponsoring various social events among which is the IDC dance weekend for which efforts are being made to secure a big name band to perform at a nominal cost for students.

'Revitalize Government'—Harriss

"The coming year will be one of the most challenging and dynamic for Student Government," stated Student Government President Bill Harriss.

In referring to the campaign platform of Student Party, Harriss said that "emphasis wil be placed on expanding participation in Student Government to include any student who wishes to help."

GEORGE CAMPBELL
. . . Council Chairman

Appealing to students to "join in the effort of completely revitalizing Student government," Harriss cautioned—"This is not a job that a small group of people can do. We need the cooperation and assistance of everyone."

Harriss said "top priority will be given this fall to informing the citizens of North Carolina of the urgent need for the UNC capital improvements included in the bond issue which will be submitted to a statewide vote in early November."

The bond issue will include funds for the combination student union-undergraduate library, an addition to the University heating plant, the cafeteria and service building, an addition to Wilson Hall, renovating Phillips Hall, and various improvements in the UNC Health Center.

Meetings Held

"On campus this year, meetings will be held to discuss the UNC Honor System. These discussions should provide Carolina students with a better understanding of the system and a firmer committment to it," said Harriss. He also indicated that work was underway to clarify and codify procedures under the system.

"The Academic Affairs Committee will continue with its course evaluation program designed to improve curriculum. The Committee will also make recommen-state is a snap compared to Carolina."

Whether time had caused his memory of campus politics to grow in magnitude is open to question, yet his remark no doubt held at least a thread of truth. Certainly campaigns are feverish as the two campus political parties, the Student Party and the University Party, vie for control of student government.

Each party conducts nominating conventions which choose standard bearers for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, editors of The Daily Tar Heel and Yackety-Yack, president of athletic associations, head cheerleader and representatives to legislature. The parties also nominate candidates for class offices.

In general, the University Party represents the more conservative elements and finds most of its supporters in the fraternity population, while the Studenty Party sports a more liberal bent, catering to dormitory residents and independents for the vote.

Bloc voting and campaigns - without - issues- sometimes characterize student politics at Carolina, yet the system manages to survive these drawbacks and consistently produce good student government, at least at the upper levels, where extensive campaigning exposes the inept.

The freshman aspiring to political office usually finds the freshman class offices most enticing, although these are little more than titular positions and committee service or other offices provide more opportunity for actual activity and a more valid route to bigger and better things in campus politics.

Student legislature is perhaps the best training ground for the novice, since it is there that most activity is centered.

Student Party presently holds sway in Graham Memorial 213 where the big four—president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer are just beginning to line up a policy for the coming year. This administration follows on the heels of two consecutive terms of University Party power. University party members will no doubt be particularly active this year with an eye to the spring elections when a strong effort to depose the Student Party seems certain.

peculiar to the modern period in higher education functions with no intervention from faculty or administration, electing officers and representatives who in turn choose students to fill other offices.

By and large, autonomy is respected by the administration, although trustee action has placed complete authority in administrative hands, and student control can be maintained only so long as this control is used skillfully and responsibly.

* * *

The administration views student government with a paternal and often indulgent eye, proud that students can lead themselves and relieved that many administrative headaches are shouldered by the student body.

Much leeway is afforded students and student government has gained progressively more responsibility in the 86 years since the monitor system gave way to the honor system in 1875.

* * *

Although student government has proven itself capable of high attainment, it cannot be painted as infallible. Its pitfalls are numerous, and its course not always foreseeable. Inner tensions sometimes seem more than the legislative hall can bear.

Yet each crisis leaves the system stronger and more elastic, owing in great part to a student body which clings tenaciously to the spirit of student autonomy.

Far from being oriented solely to the campus, student government takes an active part in state and national affairs, particularly those directly affecting students.

Particularly noteworthy in this capacity is UNC's close connection with NSA, the National Student Association. As one of the few southern schools still affiliated (most southern schools have withdrawn from NSA because of its liberal leanings, notably on the integration question), Carolina delegations are respected and influential participants in discussions of national and international issues.

All students in good standing are eligible to serve in student government capacities and outstanding ideas and leadership often spring from the freshman and sophomore levels.

Modeled after federal and state government, student government has three branches—executive, legislature and judicial—with similar checks and balances.

Special Efforts

"Special efforts will be made to expand the role of Student Government in creating a concerned and informed student community—concerned with the profound and fateful problems which face this nation and world today.

"This is in line with Student Government's educational responsibility to elaborate on and make more meaningful the clasroom experience," said Harriss.

"The Student Government officers this year will do extensive work among other southern schools to effect greater southern representation in the councils of the U. S. National Student Association in order to bring about a more accurate reflection nationally and internationally of the American student voice."

Harriss States

Harriss stated that "work is continuing on establishing additional foreign exchange scholarships such as the existing one with Goettingen University in Germany. Also in the area of international understanding, "UNC will cooperate with other sections of the Consolidated University in discussions concerning the establishment by the greater University of a section abroad.

"The Campus-wide Entertainment Committee will announce within the next few weeks plans for its first concert to be held later this fall. Efforts are being made to obtain better and more off-campus parties for dormitory residents.

"Needed revisions in the Student Constitution are going to be introduced into Student Legislature this fall," said Harriss.

Harriss concluded by appealing to freshmen and transfer students "to watch and respond to the Daily Tar Heel for notice of interviews for Student Government positions."

UNC Profs Knew Evans Testified

A University History Department spokesman said today that the department knew of William A. Evans' appearance in 1955 before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Evans, who received his A.B. and M.A. degrees at UNC, resigned his job as a history professor at Mount Olive College last Friday after college officials learned that he used the Fifth Amendment in testifying before the House committee.

The information about his testimony before the committee was not mentioned in UNC's recommendation of Evans to Mount Olive College.

Evans Says

Evans said in connection with his resignation: "Some six years ago I was, in fact, an uncooperative witness before the House Un-American Activities Committee. I gave no information to the committee other than that strictly required by law.

"In so doing, I made use of the Fifth Amendment and other constitutional provisions protecting individual rights against government encroachment . . ."

Refuses to Comment

George Tindall, the faculty member advising Evans on his Ph.D., refused to comment to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday other than to say he has not heard from Evans since his resignation.

C. H. Pegg, chairman of the History Department, also declined to comment for publication and Evans himself was unavailable for further comment.

Yack Pictures

Senior pictures for the 1962 Yackety Yack will be taken 1-6 p.m. Monday through Friday this week in the basement of Graham Memorial.

Reppucci also said that these pictures will also be used for the fraternity and sorority sections and any senior not reporting may wait until a later scheduled week and pay $1.50 for Greek pictures.

The co-editor also announced that the Yack would receive new students who are interested in working on the yearbook from 1-6 p.m. any day this week.

'Eye Of Storm' Passed For Housing, Says Director Wadsworth; Few Out

"The eye of the storm has passed."

This was Housing Director Henry Wadsworth's relieved comment on the current on-campus housing shortage.

"The problem has been nearly relieved now. There are only about a dozen people living in the basement of Cobb. We think that nearly everyone that wants a room on campus has one now."

Thanks to the publicity from WCHL andT he Chapel Hill Weekly this summer, many people that had not been renting rooms before, opened them to students this year."

Expected a Crowd

Mr. Wadsworth also said that he thought that due to the advance publicity about the housing shortage this year that everyone came to school expecting to be crowded. "This kept a lot of people from being terribly dissatisfied."

"This situation will probably not arise next year since we expect to open the two new seven-story dormitories, presently under construction, by September 1962."

Rub-a-dub-dub

The shortage has been alleviated by putting three men in all the two-men rooms except in Avery, Parker and Teague which have built-in furnishings which makes adding another occupant very difficult. In BVP, four men were put into the two-room suites.

In an effort to make space for the men who were housed in the basement of Cobb dormitory, an extra occupant was added to the rooms on the fourth floors of Winston, Cobb and Jayner.

Three in Rooms

Students who are living in a two-man room currently occupied by three men may request a refund of their rent. The refund is made on the basis of how long the student has lived in the dorm. This policy allows students who have been able to find off-acmpus housing to move out of the dormitories.

"The students have been quite cooperative this fall. I would say that this has been one of my most pleasant years since I have been here," Mr. Wadsworth said.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Hammarskjold Had 'Icicles In His Veins'

By United Press International

"He is a man with icicles in his veins," an associate of Dag Hammarskjold once said, and he meant it as a compliment.

For to Dag Hkalmar Agne Carl Hammarskjold had fallen the job of Secretary General of the United Nations — a position calling for a man of tact, rare intelligence, and patience.

And in the eight years in which he held the job, Dag Hammarskjold found that those "icicles in his veins" came in handy more than once.

Hammarskjold's life was marked by irony. Born July 29, 1905, in Jonkoping, Sweden, Hammarskjold spent his first 15 years in a family that looked upon "world involvement" with distrust. Yet one day he was to be guiding spirit of the United Nations, perhaps the supreme example of "involvement" between nations.

Father Prime Minister

Hammarskjold's father Hjalmar was the Swedish prime minister who kept that Scandinavian country out of World War I. The elder Hammarskjold, ever isolationist, also fought Sweden's participation in the League of Nations, forerunner of the United Nations.

But Dag Hammarskjold, scion of an aristocratic family that played important political ropes in Swedish history for more than 200 years, was a sensitive, thoughtful, and at once hardheaded young man who looked beyond his family horizon.

He studied economics at Uppsala and Stockholm universities, receiving a doctorate from the latter in 1934. In his school days he admired the advanced economic theories of Britain's John Maynard Keynes.

As a student and throughout his life, Hammarskjold was regarded as a shy, modest and scholarly man who apparently preferred to curl up with a volume of T. S. Eliot poems or the writings of Goethe, Proust, and Joyce than to be a man-about-town.

Once, a friend and fellow economist, Bertil Ohlin, attempted to act as matchmaker between Hammarskjold and a desirable girl. The would-be romance fizzled and Ohlin shrugged "Apparently the girl didn't like T. S. Eliot."

Hammarskjold Never Married

Hammarskjold's early career was one of steady success: Secretary of the Swedish Commission of Unemployment, 1930-34; Assistant Professor of Economics at Stockholm University, 1933; Secretary of the Bank of Sweden, 1935-36 and chairman of the board, 1941-48; Undersecretary of State in the Ministry of Finance, 1938-45.

Hammarskjold, who considered himself "proudly" a civil servant, seemed to withdraw more and more from active social life as his career in public service advanced.

After World War II, he served Sweden in a variety of economic and foreign assignments. He was deputy foreign minister, 1951-53, and served also as financial advisor to the Foreign Ministry. He also served as Swedish delegate to the Paris conference in 1947, and as delegate to the Organization for European Economic Cooperation in 1948.

It was when he came to the United Nations in 1949 as a member of the Swedish delegation that Hammarskjold began, in his quiet, authoritative way, to draw the admiring attention of powers in the Secretariat.

Survivor Reports Explosion

By RAY MOLONEY
(United Press International)

NDOLA, Northern Rhodesia — Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold was killed Monday on a peace mission in thr Congo when his white United Nations plane crashed in a wood of young trees seven miles from the Ndola airport.

The one survivor among the 14 persons on the DC6B said there were explosions aboard the four-engine aircraft shortly before it smashed into the ground and burned.

The badly burned survivor, identified as Harold Julian, a U.N. guard and American citizen, also told rescuers that Hammarskjold at the last minute decided not to land at Ndola for a cease-fire rendezvous with Katanga Province President Moishe Tshombe whose warriors were still fighting U.N. troops.

Shortly after the 56-year-old Hammarskjold ordered his pilot to change his course, there was an explosion aboard the plane followed by several smaller explosions, Julian said.

Then the white-painted plane hit a ledge and caught fire.

Jacques Poujalat, Swiss U.N. assistant at Leopoldville, said two engines of the DC6B were damaged by Katanga jet fighter fire or by ground fire from the Katangese troops at Elizabethville airport early Sunday during a strafing attack.

It was not clear whether the engines had been replaced.

Death Shocks Delegates

The death of the cool, courageous Hammarskjold came as a stunning shock to the United Nations delegates assembled in New York on the eve of their critical 16th General Assembly.

The crash succeeded—where Soviet Premier Khrushchev had failed in removing Hammarskjold as secretary general, a post he had held for the past eight years.

Khrushchev had demanded Hammarskjold's removal in favor of a "troika"—a three-man directorate

DTH STAFF MEETING

All old and new members of the Daily Tar Heel staff should report to a general staff meeting to be held Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the DTH office. All persons interested in working on the paper staff should come to this organizational meeting.

Students' Helpmates In Old Rut

Husbands are going back to school and their wives are going back to babysitting, TV watching, and housekeeping—the same old rut.

However, UNC student wives have a chance to improve themselves and meet each other while their husbands are busy preparing for the future. As long as their husband is enrolled in some part of the University—regardless of the department or the class—a girl is eligible for membership in the UNC Student Wives Club.

The club will hold its first meeting Tuesday night, Sept. 19, at 8 o'clock, upstairs in Graham Memorial, according to Mrs. James Gentry, president.

The whole program will be designed to teach the student wives more about the city and the university—where to shop and save, what to do for fun, about medical and dental services. There will be gifts and prizes for the get-acquainted activities. The evening will close with refreshments and a social hour.

Among the other programs planned for this first semester are talks by Mrs. William Aycock, wife of the chancellor, and Dr. Robert Senior, local pediatrician; a make-up demonstration by a Chapel Hill cosmetician; cooking and Christmas decorating demonstrations; a Christmas bazaar, and a combination caroling-gift making session.

Informal instruction and practice in bridge, knitting, sewing, and other hobbies will be included during the social portion of the evenings.

Another phase of the club's activities is a baby-sitting co-op that doesn't cost the members anything except some of their spare time.

Other officers are Mrs. Anne Thaxton, vice-president; Mrs. Betty Donaghy, secretary; Mrs. Nancy Fawcett, treasurer, and Mrs. Sandy Modrow, program chairman.

Gardner Portrait Will Be Presented

A portrait of former Governor O. Max Gardner will be presented to the University in ceremonies at Hill Hall Saturday, September 30, at 11 a.m.

Painted by New York artist Albert Murray, the portrait is the gift to the University by the Gardner family and will be presented by Mrs. O. Max Gardner of Shelby and will be received by President William C. Friday.

Governor Gardner was in office when the three institutions, the University at Chapel Hill, State College in Raleigh and Woman's College in Greensboro were consolidated into one University. Governor Gardner considered consolidation one of the major attainments of his career. He died in 1947 after his appointment as Ambassador from the United States to the Court of Saint James and was on the point of departing from New York for London when he was stricken.

Former Presidents of the University since consolidation will speak: Frank P. Graham and Gordon Gray. Others to take part will include Governor Terry Sanford and former Governor Luther Hodges, now Secretary of Commerce.

O. Max Gardner III of Shelby will participate in the actual unveiling of the portrait. Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House of Chapel Hill will pronounce the invocation, and the Reverend Marion DuBose Jr., minister of the Kings Mountain Baptist Church, will deliver the benediction.

A large number of people inside the state will be present for the ceremonies, which will be open to the public.

The event was scheduled on the day that the University and State College play each other in football in Kenan Stadium here. Governor Gardner was an alumnus of both State College and the University at Chapel Hill. Chancellors of the three insititutions will be present, William B. Aycock of Chapel Hill; Otis Singletary of Greensboro; and John Caldwell of Raleigh.

Cardboarders Will Organize For Fall Term

The NC Cardboard Club will hold its organizational meeting of the year in Roland Parker Lounge No. 3 at Graham Memorial 7 p.m. Thursday.

Students interested in joining the club, which produces card stunts during halftime at all home football games, are invited to attend this meeting.

Officers of the organization will be present to explain its functions and to answer questions. New members will also be able to select a specific staff on which to work.

Students who miss the first meeting may join later by contacting an officer of the club in its offices on the second floor of Emerson Stadium.

Adenauer Rejects Bid

BONN—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, who lost his absolute majority in Partiament in Sunday's elections, Monday rejected an opposition Socialist proposal that an all-party coalition government be formed for West Germany.

There were strong indications that Adenauer's 12 year tenuer as chancellor may be coming to an end. The balance of power in Parliament is held by the Free Democrats whose leader said the price for their support is Adenauer's surrender of the chancellorship.

JFK Will Appear

—WASHINGTON—President Kennedy decided late Monday to make a personal address before the United Nations General Assembly to reassert U.S. support of the policies carried out by Dag Hammarskjold.

The White House said Kennedy would appear before the world organization late this week or early next week.

Kennedy's decision was reached after he expressed a "deep sense of shock and loss" over the death of Hammarskjold in a plane crash in Africa.

The precise subject of his address was not disclosed.

Traffic Rules

Traffic regulations, including a promise of stringent enforcement, have been announced for the fall semester.

All freshmen and sophomores not having a C average are not eligible to keep a car in or around Chapel Hill.

Any student who owns or operates an automobile in Chapel Hill must register it with the Dean of Student Affairs, 206 South Building, and display a sticker on the lower right hand corner of the windshield.

Failure to comply with this shall subject the student to termination of his University registration and to the usual University fee of $5 charged for re-enrollment. He also may not be eligible to have an automobile.

$2.50 Fee

A fee of $2.50 for each automobile will be collected at the time of registration.

No student shall park on the campus between the hours of 7:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday through Friday, and between the hours of 4:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

A new regulation authorizes the Dean of Student Affairs to suspend or revoke permits issued to students who commit five or more violations a year.

The business manager is authorized to suspend or revoke permits issued to staff members who commit five or more traffic offenses.

Evans And HUAC

William A. Evans, UNC graduate student and candidate for the Ph.D. in 1962 is described by a professor in that department as a student who is "brilliant, in a way."

His political ideas, as nearly as we can gather, are not always orthodox. Yet his professional qualifications merited his employment as an instructor at Mount Olive College.

Evans, in fact, received a favorable recommendation from UNC in connection with his application for a job at Mount Olive. Although it was known by the department that Evans had been queried by the House Committee On Un-American Activities in 1955, this information was not given to officials at Mount Olive. Evans had invoked the Fifth Amendment during the hearing, a right provided to him by the most American of documents, the Constitution.

Yet, when it was subsequently found that Evans had used the amendment when undergoing his inquisition, he was promptly asked to resign from Mount Olive.

If this story sounds not unfamiliar, it is because it is a repetition of similar cases. Cases in which teachers, scientists and others have experienced the Kafkan nightmare of a HUAC investigation and its subsequent taint.

Evans is the historical equivalent of victims of the Inquisition, of the Star Chamber, of the Salem Witch trials, and more recently, of McCarthyism.

He is the victim of an extra-legal body that uses half-truth as deftly and effectively as a sniper uses his rifle.

Unfortunately, the HUAC smear is not confined to the committee chamber. It gains effectiveness in direct proportion to its news radius, its effect mounting in intensity with each mouth that babbles its actions. Yet it proudly flies the American flag, selling its tarnished wares by painting them Red, White and Blue, crying patriotism while squashing freedom.

HUAC members have proudly boasted that its effectieveness lies in exposing suspected communists to the public eye. It is not a court, yet its hearings are trials—trials ungoverned by laws guaranteeing freedom. Its victims, communist or not, are indelibly branded in the public eye.

Although there is a growing movement to abolish HUAC, it has managed to survive, feeding on the fear of the American people as it continues to work its way around all barriers, slashing its opponents with cries of "pink" and blinding public opinion with mutterings of as-yet-undiscovered communist plots.

Paradoxically, the majority of Americans feel that the committee is protecting freedom, unable to understand that freedom includes all the rights denied HUAC's victims, and blind to the committee's injustices.

HUAC does not protect Americanism, it blasphemes it. Suppression of ideas and denial of freedom cannot advance Americanism. Democracy and freedom cannot be bought by denying dissenting opinion.

Democracy is founded on the principle that it can survive in a free discussion of its merits as opposed to other governmental forms. If it cannot, then neither HUAC nor any agency can save it. It is already lost.

We firmly believe that it can survive, and survive on its own merits, against any conflicting form of government, communist or otherwise. But so long as Americans let fear rule reason, democracy is vulnerable.

Willia A. Evans has already been blasted. It is too late to salvage his job at Mount Olive, but not too late to see that other Evanses are spared. And it is not too late to spare democracy.

But HUAC and democracy cannot exist in the same framework.

Which of them will die?

In Memoriam

The free world and the ideal of a peaceful community of unified nations have lost a brilliant, uncompromising and fearless supporter.

Exactly what repercussions will result from the untimely death of Dag Hammarskjold are pure conjecture. That they woill be weighty is beyond doubt.

Hammarskjold on many occasions blocked the progress of the swiftly-moving Communist dominion, although his effectiveness was all too often garroted by those nations who most profited from his influence.

The UN principle of free neutrality unhampered by fear of dominion, a principle which he so staunchly fought to defend, stands at his death sadly mutilated, mocked by totalitarians and buffeted by free nations, including the U.S., which found it "'sometimes impractical." Without his steadying hand to influence world diplomacy the UN, already unsteady on hamstrung legs, stands in danger of falling to its knees weakened not only by Russian attacks, but also by a seeming unwillingness of its member nations to bolster it by compromising narrow foreign policies.

The free world will weep at Hammarskjold's death. But they shed only crocodile tears so long as they weep from fear, not for the passing of the symbol of world freedom and unity. A symbol that gave them strength, but which they steadfastly refused to strongly support.

Reflections

Scientific progress:

An experiment concluded some time ago by scientists interested in the workings of the mind during sleep concluded persons who are not allowed to dream are nervous, irritable and given to sudden and sometimes violent fits of temper.

The conclusion was reached after several people were allowed to go to sleep, begin dreaming (dreams were shown by wavy lines on an oscilloscope fed by electrodes attached to the subject's head) and were then prodded awake.

Some patients were thus awakened as many as thirty times in a single eight-hour period.

It seems to us that anyone awakened thirty times in a night would by pretty damn irritable anyway, dreams or not.

Mourn Not McGuire's Exit

Many UNC students, faculty and friends return to the Hill this fall with mixed feelings of sadness and outraged undergrads are cursing loudly and blaming the innocent. Even yet aging, pot-bellied men, who should have something better to do, are moaning and crying with a vengeance. Women who graduated twenty years ago and women who never went to college, coeds who never understood the game and coeds who understood the game, all bemoan the University's loss. Whenever "Y" talk reverts to sports these days, these curses can be heard.

Sports writers still compose sonnets to the Dear Departed and for the moment, conceal all their vicious prose of the past. Alumni from far and near write angry letters and threaten to cut off financial support.

"The Old Gray Goose is Dead"—the goose that laid the golden eggs—Frank McGuire, phenomenally successful UNC basketball coach, left the University early last month, to go on to a professional team.

The controversial McGuire is going on to pastures where the grass is higher and perhaps easier to chew, and our purpose is not to rebuke him for his action. After months and years of abuse from the state press and pressures from various sources, his decision to leave Carolina can be understood readily. His career here had not been easy-going for either him or the University. And the recent Doug Moe-Lou Brown episode was the last straw; it undoubtedly helped to break McGuire's desire to remain here.

We respect Carolina's former basketball coach; he was, despite the overuse of the term, a "gentleman," in a field where such is a rarity.

Our contention is not with the man—it is with the mob. The mob which silently, and sometimes aloud, blames Chancellor Aycock and the administration for McGuire's leaving — the mob which lays the blame at President Friday's door because of his de-emphasis program, cutting down on the players McGuire could have signed—the mob which is even now drunkenly reeling from victim to victim, accusing those who called for de-emphasis, those who criticized the condition of Carolina basketball for producing a Lou Brown, those who made legitimate and constructive criticisms of McGuire.

Words of praise for Coach McGuire are fine and acceptable, in their place, but "let us leave the lamentations to the illiterate." TheC arolina basketball enthusiast must cease all wailing and face up to the existing and future situation:

—As the de-emphasis program catches hold UNC will have teams of lesser ability than it has had in the past, McGuire or no McGuire.

—Since McGuire is the exceptionally good coach he is, he will be better off where basketball is taken more seriously, and this University will be better off not having a coach superior to its teams.

The gentleman of the Gym is gone and there should be a feeling of loss for the man, but not for the big-time competition he represented. This is a new day in Carolina sports—for better or for worse—a new day with lesser teams, and both the University and McGuire have benefited from his leaving.

Blasts 'Carolina Way Of Life'

CAROLINA Carolina. Say it twice and savor the sound. Let the feeling sink into your nerves and let the meaning seep into your heart. You are now a part of tradition. Observe carefully the things you see for they will soon be a part of you. Look into yourself, for you will soon be an example of what they mean. When you stand alone on the Library steps gazing through pastel shadows at the stately silhouette of South Building standing like a silent giant against the twilight sky, and suddenly feel your breath leap up,y ou, too, will be a part of the Carolina Way of Life.

This is a phrase which means many things. And can never be clearly defined. It's the electric thrill of a thousand-throated yell which pulverizes the bourbon-scented air of Kenan Stadium on a Saturday afternoon; it's the secret pride of returning a loud and cheery greeting to a recently-met "buddy" in the Y-Court; it's the feeling of belonging to a great bunch of fellows in the fraternity; or the communal hilarity of short-sheeting a roommate in the dorm. It's reading the inscription underneath Davie Poplar and feeling a slightly embarrassing tingle creep up your arms. Or seeing the Old Well in a stark wash of moonlight and choking back a drunken cheer, or maybe a sob. It's buying your records at Kemp's and your clothes at Milton's and howling in the Rat over a pitcher of "dark;" it's sacredly giving a girl your pin.

YET TODAY athletics are not so important and Y-Court impressions are not taken seriously. Fraternity men are not beyond question and the Dorms are considered unbearably base. The Davie Poplar is supported by guide wires and the Old Well is nothing more than an insipid dribble of water from a fountain.

Is the Carolina Way of Life nothing more than a list of maudlin reminiscences? One might easily come to think so. Gray-haired old men speak in soft rumbling tones about "the Carolina Gentleman" but one doubts that such an animal ever existed; in southern accents quavering with feeling, they praise the glories of our Honor System, but just try leaving your door unlocked. Student leaders, fiery-eyed, ivy-clad, and up to their ears in self-importance strive desperately to make you believe they're "regular fellas" despite talking incessantly about your responsibility to the Great Blue and White Omnipotence, the Carolina Way of Life.

INTIMIDATED by all this talk, alk, talk, our bright young freshman earranges his life, longing anxiously for the day when he too can belong. His intimidation leads to imitation. He rushes downtown for a crew-cut and a three-button suit, he drinks all night in a local joint, most of which are pretentious as he is, and careens homeward with a few equally insecure friends shouting "Hark The Sound" at the top of his still cracking voice and finally he learns to suavely accept the invitation of the insipid little coed who asks him in a shrill nasal voice to "come ovah to th' house."

Carolina and Chapel Hill have long prided themselves on being bastions of liberalism in the "bigoted South." Someone is always pointing out that the Carolina Student government has served as a model for similar organizations all over the country. The Daily Tar Heel annually calls itself one of the greatest college dailies in the nation, and the University itself has never gotten over the fact that it is the oldest state-supported university in the country. In short, Chapel Hill is wont to gaze Narcissus-like at its own reflection in a peaceful aura of complacent chauvinism.

NO ONE IS trying to take pot-shots at the Carolina tradition or the Carolina Way of Life. It is certainly true that the university is a great one, and has produced great people and done great things. However, one is never so great as he thinks he is unless he doesn't think about it. Greatness is like a spring which is always pure because it is always renewing itself. The waters of a spring are always beautiful yet never the same, always fresh, but the water that puddles around it soon becomes stagnant and coated with scum. If left long enough it will clog up the spring itself and breed parasites.

To love Carolina, as most people say they do by the time they leave, is not an easy task. She is a demanding lover and requires a jealous love, a vicious love, a violent love but most of all a love unsullied by sentimentality and unblinded to her faults by the brilliance of her beauty. It doesn't mean singing "Hark The Sound" louder than anyone else, or wearing a blue and white blazer, or sticking hideous decals on every piece of property you own. "When love begins to sicken and decay, it useth an enforced ceremony."

TRADITION IS not a thing of the past. The tradition of Carolina and the Carolina Way of Life is not the Old Well nor the Davie Poplar but a vision of truth, an uncompromising image of itself, demanding all we have to give yet frustrating our greatest efforts and chiding our insufficiency, but at last immeasurably rewarding our sincerity and steadfastness. The tradition of Carolina is a perpetual challenge to strive for that which is better than ourselves, which can only be approached by that which is most genuinely ourselves. None of us singly will ever achieve it, but all of us together must continue the quest.

Comments On US, USSR & Carolina

By GARRY BLANCHARD

With Khrushchev and his collective hoods being so accomplished in matters of psychology, such masters at the art of hypocrisy and of boring from within, we have lately begun wondering the real purpose of their latest flaunting of "world opinion." It simply is not like K and his kooks to tell the world to go hang while they bang away with their radioactive firecrackers.

Was their actual purpose in doing so to scare the "neutrals" then assembled in Belgrade? Perhaps. But why should Nikkie gamble on scaring them out of the fold, when almost all of them can so easily be bought?

Was it the communist intention to terrify the U.S.? oubtful. It's tough to terrorise a nation of angry citizens, such as we seem to have at last become where Russia is concerned.

What's their angle? Can they really be that far behind in the development of their atomic arsenal?

SOMETHING ELSE . . . .

As those of you who are consistent readers of editorial pages know, syndicated inside-dopester Drew Pearson recently exchanged views with Premier Khrushchev at the latter's Black Sea bolt.

With due ceremony, and his wife along, Pearson self-appointedly undertook to inform Mr. K of many quaint Americanisms, such as our distaste for war, desire for international harmony, and so forth.

In his masterfully hypocritical way, Mr. K responded by assuring Pearson that his people share these same desires and distastes.

If K says so, we thought, it must be true. After all, he and his gangsters tell—tell, hell: order—their polysyllabic citizens what to desire and what to find distasteful.

But this mood of disgust changed a few paragraphs later, to one of tearful poignancy, as Pearson wrote of—choke, sob—saying goodbye to affable, well-intentioned Mr. K.

What really wrung our tear ducts, though, was Nikkie's parting request to Pearson to "Tell President Kennedy that if the United States and the Soviet Union stand together no country in the world can ever make war."

LOCALLY . . . .

Several super-charged blasts of enthusiasm from a Carolina invasion force of 2,000-plus freshmen and students lastT uesday night blew away the haze of stuffiness which seems, sooner or later, to engulf obligatory meetings of any kind.

The occasion was a student government orientation meeting in Memorial Hall, presided over by orientation Chairman Al Pollard. It was the third day of such "you must attend" meetings for the newcomers.

The SRO audience of mostly freshmen grabbed the musical ball of "Hark The Sound" thrown them by Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson, and ran with it to a hand-clapping end zone, then sat back down.

A short time later they were on their feet again, replying via a standing ovation to the impassioned remarks of Bill Harriss, student government president.

In a welcoming speech similar to that of past-president Charlie Gray's in the fall of 1959, Harriss told the initiates of their duty to responsibly criticize, to query, to ponder their individual roles as students. He urged participation in student government, pointing out that such action here at UNC is not considered an extra-curricular activity, but co-curricular.

But what really demolished the smog was the extended applause which came in response to the introduction of Mary Townsend, shapely secretary of the student government. She made no speech; just stood up momentarily, and visibly . . .

Seven UNC Sororities Make Plans For Rushing

Coeds will be treading well-forged paths the next week as they visit the University's seven sorority houses.

Since September 5, sorority girls have been putting in long hours of work in preparation for rushing. Rush began officially with the Panhellenic Tea on Friday, and ends bid day, Wednesday, September 27.

Supervising rush is the Panhellenic Council, the advisory governing organization which is on every campus having two or more national sororities. It is composed of sorority presidents, rush chairmen, one representative-at-large from each sorority, and two representatives from the Stray Greek organization. This year Janice Haley is the President of Panhellenic.

According to Mary Merrill, vice-president of Pan Hel and chairman of rush, "There has been an outstanding amount of enthusiasm and co-operation this year on the part of everyone concerned, which is vital to successful campus sorority life."

Last spring, coeds voted to bring another sorority to this campus, which would make a total of eight. However, due to delays in establishing the proper housing and location for the new sorority, and also because the sorority would miss the fall rushing season, it will not be established here until spring or next fall.

The sororities are:

Alpha Delta Pi (ADPi); Alpha Gamma Delta (Alpha Gam); Chi Omega (Chi O);

1st Round:

Tuesday, Sept. 19—Three 55 min. parties 6::30-9:45 p.m.

Wednesday, Sept. 20—No parties; rest day.

2nd Round: : :

Thursday, Sept. 21 — Three one hour parties 6::30-10::00 p.m.

Friday, Sept. 22—Three one hour parties 2:00-4:45 p.m.

3rd Round:

Sunday, Sept. 24—Three 45 min. parties 2:00-4:45 p.m.

Sunday, Sept. 24 — Two 45 min. parties 8:00-9:45 p.m.

4th Round:

Monday, Sept. 25—Four 45 min. parties 6:15-10:00 p.m.

5th Round:

Tuesday, Sept. 26—Three parties of 1 hour each.

Bid Day:

Wednesday, Sept. 27—Report to 202 South Building, Dean of Women's Office, 9:00-1:00.

All coeds are strongly urged to be familiar with the rush manual and observe all rush rules. Violation of rules could result in disqualification.

Particularly important is the silence regulation. A sorority girl is on her honor not to speak to a rushee outside rush parties. A rushee is defined as a girl not a member of a sorority until the Panhellenic reception when the definition is confined to only those girls going through rush. The greeting "hello" is the only word allowable to pass between sorority member and rushee.

Also important is the regulation which forbids a UNC sorority girl to ride in an automobile with a rushee and which forbids any double dating.

If rush rules are violated, a report should be turned in immediately to the dean of women's office or to Pan Hel President Janice Haley, or Vice-President Mary Merrill.

Any rushee, who does not follow her assigned party schedule in attending rush parties, shall be disqualified from rushing unless the rushee has a bona fide excuse and is excused by the Panhellenic Adviser.

University Chorus Will Meet Tuesday

The first fall rehearsal meeting of the University Chorus will be held at 4:30 p.m. this Tuesday in the choral rehearsal room at Hill Music Hall. All singers are invited to come and join the organization.

The Chorus is a group of mixed voices drawing its membership from students, employees, and faculty members of the University. Its aim is the presentation of the finest master-work of the choral literature. Its programs are drawn from representative music of all periods.

In addition, from time to time, the Chorus serves as a basic choral unit in the presentation of operas by the Department of Music. Recent productions have included Bizet's Carmen and Verdi's La Traviata, both first performances of these works on this campus. For these occasions the chorus is joined by outstanding singing stars and supported by the University Symphony to provide a stirring musical experience to those participating.

Other performances of unusual interest have been the presentations of Honegger's King David, Schutz's Christmas Story, Gershwin's Porgy and Bess in concert form, excerpts from Gounod's Faust, Offenbach's Tales of Hoffman, and Moussorgsky's Boris Goundonov.

HERE SINCE 1891

Social Fraternities Get Ready

To pledge or not to pledge, that is the question uppermost in the minds of many.

Since 1851 social fraternities have been an integral part of campus activities and are responsible for the popular phrase, "the Carolina Way of Life" which is based on fellowship, scholarship, leadership, and service . . . Or so a fraternity man would have you believe.

There is an equally vociferous group of independents who would reply with words like discriminatory, bigoted and reactionary.

The truth is probably somewhere in between but this is in essence the fraternity question, which annually is the first big controversy in campus affairs.

24 Fraternities

There are 24 social fraternities at Carolina and seven social sororities with about 50 members in each group.

They are regulated, coordinated and unified by the interfraternity council (IFC) and the Panhellenic council.

The IFC is composed of the president and one elected member of the fraternity; the Panhellenic council has three members from each sorority, and elected representative, the president and the rushing chairman. These councils control their membership but not without at least a sidewise glance from the administration.

Lose Privileges

Last year, four fraternities—Delta Psi, Phi Gamma Delta, Phi Kappa Sigma, and Kappa Alpha—lost their rushing privileges for fall, 1962, due to the "80% rule" which requires 80 per cent of a farternity's active membership to maintain a C average during the spring semester.

Acting Dean Of Women Has Two Aides

The Office of the Dean of Women has undergone a considerable turnover. Now UNC has an Acting Dean of Women and two new Assistants to the Dean.

Dr. Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women, is spending this year teaching in South Viet-Nam. Under the Smith-Mundt Act, she accepted a State Department appointment as visiting professor in the Universities of Saigon and Hue.

Since 1946, Dr. Carmichael has been a leading figure in NC affairs. A native of Birmingham, Ala., she received her A.B. at Birmingham Southern and M.A. and Ph.D. at Vanderbilt University.

She taught English at Hockaday Junior College and summer school at the University of Wisconsin before coming to UNC. Dr. Carmichael's appointment is not her first teaching assignment abroad, as she taught in Manila for a year.

She will spend the year as visiting professor of English at the University of Saigon. During this time, she will also give frequent lectures at the University of Hue.

Mrs. Arthur De Berry, Acting Dean of Women in Dr. Carmichael's absence, is a native of Miami, Fla. Mrs. De Berry attended the University of Florida where she headed the Women's Government Association. She graduated in 1953, the recipient of numerous honors. Coming to Chapel Hill, she entered the School of Law and was a graduate counselor in Smith Dorm.

n 1954, she became field secretary for Phi Mu fraternity, a post that took her to colleges and universities throughout the country. She returned to the UNC Dean of Women's Office as Personnel Adviser, and in 1958 became Assistant Dean of Women's Office as Personnel Adviser, and in 1958 became Assistant Dean of Women.

After a European trip, Mrs. De Berry returned again to UNC as Associate Head of the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction, the post she held before coming Acting Dean of Women.

Misses Nancy Adams and Anne Barber have been appointed new Assistants to the Dean of Women.

Miss Adams is an alumna of the University, receiving her B.A. degree in English in 1959. During her years as a UNC student, she was tapped into Valkyries, the highest honorary organization for women, and was awarded the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award for unselfish service.

Upon graduation Miss Adams taught in the English Department of Hermitage High School in Richmond, Va., where she also sponsored the school paper. In 1960-61 she worked with the Mental Health Society of Greater Miami.

Miss Adams, who will be in charge of Pan-Hellenic sorority rush, orientation and junior interviews, is replacing Miss Isabelle MacLeod. Miss MacLeod resigned to assume a teaching position in the Estes Hill School in Chapel Hill.

Miss Barber is a graduate of Florida State University, where she was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. She received an M.A. degree in history from Johns Hopkins University in 1954.

From 1955 to 1958 Miss Barber was a member of the faculty of Coral Gables High School. She has traveled in Europe, North Africa and the Near East. For two years she taught in the U. S. Army, Europe, at Augsburg American High School in Augsburg, Germany.

Nine Coed Graduate Students Beginning Work As Counselors

Nine women graduate students here are beginning their year's duties as graduate counselors, living in dormitories and advising undergraduate women.

Mrs. Martha Decker DeBerry, Acting Dean of Women, announced the appointment of the nine: Miss Penelope Boone, Tryon; Miss Rosa Dickinson, Winter Haven, Fla.; Miss Gayle Henrotte, San Francisco, Calif.; Miss Rebekah Brown Lee, Richmond, Va.; Miss Molly Lipke, Grand Rapids Mich.; Miss Sue Ross, Fayetteville, N. C.; Miss Donna Snyder, Charlotte; Miss Patricia Stewart, LaGrange, Ga.; Miss Virginia Temple, Champaign, Ill.

Advisors

Graduate counselors work closely with dormitory hostesses and the Dean of Women's Office. Each is assigned to an undergraduate women's dormitory where she resides and is available to advise coeds on their personal and academic problems.

Both Miss Boone and Miss Dickinson are graduates of the University. Now studying in the School of Education, Miss Boone (before her graduation) was vice-president of Spencer Dormitory.

Miss Dickinson will work toward a master's degree in English. Since graduation here she has studied German at the Goethe Institute in Murnau, Germany, and has worked with the Department of Occupations and Professions in Washington.

This will be the fourth year as a graduate student at Carolina for Miss Henrotte, as she continues advanced study in the Department of Music. Miss Henrotte received her master's degree in music from the University of North Carolina after graduating from Vassar College.

Work Toward M.A.

Miss Lee is returning to UNC for her second year. A philosophy graduate of Sweet Briar College, she will continue working toward an M.A. degree in English.

Miss Lipke received an A.B. degree from Albion College, in Albion, Mich., where she was a member of Delta Gamma social sorority and was active in WAA and the Albion Choral Society. Since graduation she has taught in the Huron Valley schools. Miss Lipke will begin work here on a master's degree in library science.

A cum laude graduate of Queens College, at Charlotte, Miss Ross will work toward a M.A. degree in mathematics. While at Queens she was elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities, was elected as college marshal, and was named Dana Scholar.

Miss Snyder was graduated from Woman's College in Greensboro, where she was a member of Phi Alpha Theta history fraternity and president of the Inter-Faith Council. She has been an exchange student at the University of Copenhagen in Denmark and a secretary at the American Embassy in Bonn, Germany. She will work toward a master's degree in history.

M.A. From UNC

Miss Stewart holds an A.B. degree from Agnes Scott College in Dacatur, Ga., and a master's degree in English from UNC. Miss Stewart will continue graduate study toward a Ph.D. in English.

Miss Temple, a graduate of the niversity of Illinois, is returning to UNC for the second year as a graduate student and graduate counselor. At Illinois she was a member of Alpha Chi Omega social sorority and the Panhellenic Council. Miss Temple will continue work toward a master's degree in history.

Aycock Backs Honor System; Points Out Opportunity Here

Chancellor William B. Aycock last week stood solidly behind the Honor System, saying it was "central to the concept of student freedom."

"You will hear now and again and from here and there that it is not feasible or practicable to have an honor system in a large university," he said in a welcoming speech to 2000 freshman last week. "In my judgment, it would not be feasible or practicable to have any other system. To conclude that students cannot be entrusted to be truthful and honest is to repudiate a basic reason for the exiistence of universities."

Opportunity at UNC

He continued to cite the University as a place of opportunity and challenge in an atmosphere of freedom.

"You will find here an atmosphere of freedom for intellectual and moral growth. It is unexcelled. This freedom is possible through the efforts of thousands of students, faculty members, administrative officials, trustees, alumni and friends over the span of many years. It is hard to maintain. It is never secure."

However, the Chancellor stressed responsibility as a corollary to freedom and warned that liberty is not license.

Suitable Environment

"There has developed in this University a suitable environment in which the weak can grow strong and the strong can grow great. This means also that one is free to fail as well as to succeed. Unfortunately, few students in every class interpret freedom to mean an absence of standards of conduct except those he chooses to establish for himself. This false notion also must be dispelled.

"Standards do exisit, and the fact that students are expected to observe those standards without close supervision is not an invitation to a life of frivolity.

"Rather it provides each student with an opportunity to develop intellectual and moral discipline in obtaining the standards set forth in the Campus Code and the Honor Code."

Dean Sitterson Holds Down Two Major Campus Posts

Most college administrators probably would regard one deanship as a handful. Joseph Carlyle Sitterson occupies two.

He is also a central figure in the growing argument over rising college standards.

Sitterson, dean of UNC's General College and its College of Arts and Sciences, is the man charged with seeing that students fulfill academic requirements for their degrees. With a few exceptions, every student must pass through two years of its General College. It is up to Sitterson and his staff to insure that they are prepared for their later specialized studies.

As dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, he is responsible for the academic affairs of 1,300 students in 22 departments, studying in 800-1000 separate classes.

Supervises Curriculum

The curriculum must be planned under his supervision, and he is charged with keeping a faculty there to teach it. Twenty-two department heads and over three hundred faculty members are responsible to him for classroom instruction. He supervises two separate office staffs, including 14 faculty advisors and an associate dean in the General College, four advisors and an associate in the College of Arts and Sciences.

He is probably the only man on campus who maintains three separate offices, with three telephone listings.

The counseling program his offices operate to see that students get the courses they need for advancement or graduation extends into each department of the College of Arts and Sciences, where each student has a departmental advisor.

Sitterson does more than supervise this process. Many students in difficulty of one sort or another want to see the dean, even after seeing a regular advisor and he may interview as many as two dozen in a day. The problems are not all academic; they can be discipilinary or emotional. As long as they interfere with academic performance, Sitterson gets them.

5,000 Students

This year an estimated 5,000 students will come under his jurisdiction, a bit more than half the expected UNC enrollment this fall.

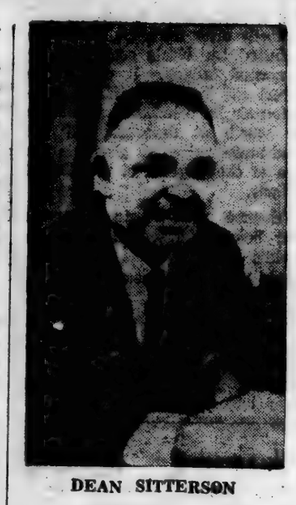
Sitterson is quick to point out that most universities have only one dean for his task, but the fact remains that he heads two distinct units of the University, with two offices, two staffs, and two administrative boards.

He is a Kenan professor of History—one of the highest academic honors available to UNC faculty—and as chairman of the UNC Commission of Admissions he oversees the setting of standards every applicant here must meet for acceptance.

In his role as chairman of the University's Admissions Committee, Sitterson is automatically in the middle of a slow-smouldering controversy over standards an intsitution may expect of the students who want to attend it.

UNC's standards, subject to the pressures of ever-increasing numbers of high school graduates in the state, have risen in the past 10 years, alarming some, pleasing others.

To Dean Sitterson, it's not a simple question, but there are few alternatives. This year, he notes, not only entrance requirements, but the minimum performance necessary for remaining in school is up.



DEAN SITTERSON
. . . academic responsibility

Prior to this, a bare passing average was required. For the coming year, students who want to remain here have to achieve and hold a certain quality point level.

Author

Demands on his time have put a crimp in another major interest—writing. He has published a volume on the North Carolina Secession movement prior to the Civil War and the book, "Sugar Country." He was co-author of the book "Military Production for World War II," and collaborated on the book, "American Society in the Changing World." He has published widely in scholarly journals, and maintains active membership in every historical association in the country.

"Education at the University has become right much of a challenge," he says. It would seem that the challenge is not for students alone.

Growth Seen For Evening College

The Evening College will become a major function of the University Extension Division in the next five years, according to Charles F. Milner, Director of Extension.

Milner predicts that the registration for the fall semester will go even higher than last year's record breaking enrollment of 235.

"In fact," quotes Milner, "the providing of opportunities for working adults to continue or improve their education is the basic purpose of an Extension Division of any University."

The Evening College at Chapel Hill reached a high point in its three year life last year when a total of 460 students enrolled in the fall and spring semesters.

Most of the students live in the Chapel Hill - Durham area but many drive in from as far away as fifty miles.

Research by the Division's Bureau of Class Instruction, which is responsible for the operation of the evening classes, shows that the vast majority of the students plan to complete requirements for a degree.

Many have already become full time students at the University or in other colleges.

Eighty-six per cent of the students are under 40 years of age with most of them falling into the 20-29 years bracket.

Library Stacks Partially Shut

Open stacks privileges have been rescinded for all except graduate students, honor students and faculty members.

Dr. Jerrold Orne, head librarian, expressed his regret but said that measures must be taken to prevent the misuse of the library.

Check points have been established at all stack and reading room exits to insure that all books are properly checked out.

All patrons are required to present ID cards each time a book is borrowed. Social Science I and II reserved volumes are on reserve in the Reserve Reading Rooom.

Smoking has been prohibited on all except the basement floor due to the disturbance of socializing in the hallway.

Dr. Orne reported that the record collection given by the class of 1960 is now available for use in the Undergraduate Library.

Cardboard Meeting

An organizational meeting of the UNC Cardboard staff will be held Thursday at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker III, Graham Memorial.

President Tom Lawrence announced that the functions of the departments will be explained, color slides will be shown and students will be eligible to join the staff.

Lawrence said interested students also may go by the cardboard Offices, 2nd Floor Emerson Stadium East Section.

Negro Students May Attend Theater

Desegregation Moves Along In Town

This summer momentous, yet quiet for Chapel Hill. The town's integration movement was brought closer to completion as 34 Negroes entered white city schools and Negro college students gained admission to one movie theater.

Both events were entirely without incident due to the long-time efforts of white and Negro community leaders and liberal elements on campus.

In 1951 the University accepted its first Negro graduate student and in 1955 the first undergraduates were accepted.

The years after 1955 saw many student leaders like Jim Scott, Norman B. Smith, David Dansby, Roger Foushee and Hank Patterson actively working toward integration in town restaurants and theaters, and on campus.

They met with success and failure. The football stadium, dormitories, restaurants and cafeterias were opened to Negro students after some prodding. Other restaurants, notably those owned by the Danzigers, had been open to all Negroes for years.

Some restaurants and the two theaters remained closed to Negroes despite student legislature resolutions supporting integration.

During the same period, Negro leaders and liberal school board members were working toward integration of town schools, which have an enrollment of more than 3,700.

Liberals made a major break through two years ago, when the Rev. J. R. Manley, the most respected Negro leader, became the first of his race elected to the school board.

The board was further changed last May, when after the election, the board was aligned five in favor of integration and two against.

The new school board set up a districting plan that sent first grade children to the school nearest them regardless of race. Parents of children in other grades could request reassignment, which was usually granted. The districting plan also sent eight white children to all-Negro schools, but they were permitted to attend white schools after they requested it.

There are now 34 Negroes in white schools, including four in the Junior High.

The fight to integrate the two movie theaters came to a head last spring when Negroes were refused admission to "Porgy and Bess," which has an all Negro cast.

Young Chapel Hill Negroes became so incensed, that they formed the Committee for Open Theaters. The committee, which included some white faculty members and students, quietly picketed the Carolina Theater, where "Porgy and Bess" was being shown, and the Varsity theater. Mary Masoh was elected committee president.

While they were picketing, the committee was negotiating with the district manager of the Carolina, which is part of a chain. The owner of the Varsity refused to talk to the committee until after he had met wih the stockholders.

The Carolina district manager W. G. Enloe, said he would not be pressured into integration, though he was sympathetic to the committee. Finally he agreed to integrate the Carolina for Negro students who show their UNC identification cards. This is a trial period. If it works, Enloe said integration would be extended to all Negroes after a "reasonable length of time."

Negro leaders, like Mary Mason, consider one month more as "reasonable." Rumors with a very authoritative ring are circulating through the Negro community, saying total integration will occur within a month at the Carolina.

Varsity stockholders will meet this week to decide whether or not to integrate.

These phases of integration in Chapel Hill stand as a model for other communities in North Carolina and the South. Integration of school children by proximity is the first of its kind in the State, as is the integration of the Carolina theater.

Duke Graduate In Peace Corps

A Duke University zoology graduate will be among 35 men and women who begin training this week at Michigan State as candidates for Peace Corps teaching assignments at Nigerian University.

Judith Lynn McKay, 23, Fayetteville, who received her B.S. last year, worked as a research assistant at the Duke Marine Laboratory last summer and later at the National Institute of Health in Bethesda, Md. She was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and president of her sorority.

The group will leave Nov. 22 for the University of Nigeria, which has a student body of almost 1,000 and a faculty of 90, exclusive of the Peace Corps.

The U.N. Security Council met in closed session in New York to discuss Hammerskjold's successor. Since the Soviet wields a veto over the choice, it appeared a deadlock might ensue.

Four Americans Aboard

There were six crew members and eight passengers—including one woman—aboard the plane. They included three other American citizensb esides Julian. They were identified as Heinrich Qeischoff, director of political affairs in the U.N. secretariat; William Ranallo, special aide to Hammarskjold, and Vladimir Fabry, Czech-born and U.S. naturalized legal expert for the U.N.

The woman was Alice Lelande, Montreal, secretary to U.N. civilian Congo chief Sture Linner. The other two guards were Irish and Haitian and the crew was all Swedish, headed by Captain Per Hellonquist, the pilot.

The crash apparently occurred sometime around 12:30 and 1 a.m. Monday (7:30-8 p.m. EDT Sunday).

The DC6B had taken off from Leopoldville with Hammarskjold and his party for the 1,000-mile flight to Ndola in the copper belt country of Northern Rhodesia which borders the Congo.

Sought End to Fighting

It was due at Ndola around 10 p.m. and Tshombe already had arrived for his conference with Hammarskjold seeking to end bloodshed between Katanga forces and the U.N. troops seeking to force the secessionist province to join the central Congo government.

Shortly after midnight, the plane contacted the Ndola control tower in normal fashion. It circled the airport and then flew off. The Rhodesian air force launched a massive air search at daybreak and the nited States put all its planes in the area at the disposal of the United Nations.

Tshombe returned to Katanaga after being informed of Hammarskjold's death.

This is very sad news," he said. "i regret it deeply.

"I had much esteem for Hammarskjold. He did much for African countries. In the crisis between the Congo and me, I hadco nfidence he would help find a solution."

12 Lettermen Bolster Forward Wall

UNC's Line Picture Is Bright

A winning football team can usually give much of the credit for its success to a strong line. Without the big men up front, all the backs in the world aren't worth a nickel.

For Coach Jim Hickey, an even dozen lettermen return to be the building blocks for the Carolina forward wall. Seven monogram winners were lost by graduation, and one highly-prized returnee was ruled ineligible for play this fall.

All positions were hit hard by the loss of players. Center Rip Hawkins, now with the Minnesota Vikings, left a hard spot to fill after three years of sparkling play. Guard Fred Mueller, out part of the '60 season with an injury, and co-captain Frank Riggs, also a guard, have departed.

Big John Stunda has graduated, leaving a starting tackle position up for grabs. Senior Ben Gallagher, counted on as a replacement for Stunda, was short on quality points and thereby ineligible to return for his final year of play.

Both of the starting ends are gone. Mike Greenday is with the pros, and John Schroeder is an assistant freshman coach. Jim Rice, a standout defensive end, has also graduated.

However, despite these losses, the Tar Heels should be able to put a stronger line on the field this year than they did last season. A look at the list of returnees should explain that statement.

* * *

Joe Craver. That's a name to remember. Craver got his experience the hard way last year, playing behind the All-America Hawkins and seeing some duty at guard. But when he was in the lineup, most spectators had to look twice to make sure that he wasn't Hawkins.

This year, as a junior, Craver is touted as a capable replacement at center. Many shrewd judges of gridiron ability say that he'll sweep the field and make the All-ACC team in his first full season of play. Coach Hickey has called him "The man who'll make Carolina fans forget Rip Hawkins."

But for the 30 pounds that he is outweighed by Craver, senior center Gary Truver could be the UNC pivotman. One of the eight men on the team with two letters, Truver could see a lot of action as a hard hitting linebacker.

Third in line at center is Bob Zaback. Although he didn't letter last fall, Zaback saw action in a few games and performed well in the spring practice game. Sophomore George Ellison, who played guard with the freshman team last season and Richie Fellman, started some games as a fullback with the Tar Babies, supply extra depth at center.

* * *

Co-captain Jim LeCompte, a lean and mean 220-pounder who looks like an end, is the most experienced of the guards. LeCompte snatched a starting role as a sophomore, lost it at the beginning of last season, and then grabbed it back when Fred Mueller was injured. A top-notch lacrosse player, Jim has good speed, and blocks and tackles with the best.

Junior Duff Greene finished last season with a flourish and captured a starting position on the basis of his performances in the Duke and Virginia games and in spring practice. Time after time he burst through enemy lines to bury the passer for a loss or smear the ball carrier.

Duff's twin brother Bruce, a red-shirt last year, mans one of the number two guard spots. The other second team guard is Jack Tillery, now at 185 pounds and 14 pounds above his playing weight of last year, but still the smallest lineman on the team.

* * *

Gallagher's loss will certainly be felt at this vital spot. He was tentatively rated the number one man at right tackle, ahead of Hegarty, Gene Sigmon, and Vic Esposito.

A likely replacement, however, is sophomore Steve Serenko, who sat out last season. Coaches think very highly of Serenko, a 200 pounder, who could well be the only non-letterman in the starting lineup on September 30 against N. C. State.

Sigmon, a red shirt last fall, injured his knee in spring practice, and it hasn't fully healed. If well, he could play regularly. Esposito is the best of last year's freshman tackles, and could well end up on one of the top two teams. Jim Naughton and Henry Hodges, a pair of husky sophomores, are being counted on to play a lot of ball in the future.

* * *

Runco, whose flashy catches in the loss to Miami brought him to stardom, saw very little defensive duty in '60. George Knox, who played a year and a half at fullback before being moved to end, should hold down a second team berth and see a lot of defensive action. Red-shirt Steve Yates, a fine potential receiver who showed up well against Virginia in his only go last year, is slated for second unit play.

Jim Ray, up from the freshman team, is probably the best of the newcomers. His speed and defensive ability could help him to break into the lineup on several occasions. Bob Lacey, the top receiver on the freshman squad last fall, and red-shirt John Hammett are also top contenders for the flankers.

Overall, the line picture seems bright. The strong points appear to be the good balance in size and speed. There is a lot of raw ability up front, but much of it has yet to be tested. Depth, except at center, is not impressive. Because there is some experience at every position, the performances of sophomores will neither make nor break the club. But they could help to bond it either way.

Fall Baseball Drills Begin Here Wednesday, Coach Rabb Announces

Baseball Coach Walter Rabb has announced that fall practice will begin Wednesday, Sept. 20. Workouts will be held daily for a period of three weeks.

Interested players have been invited to report for the practice sessions, which will last from 2 to 4 p.m. Candidates for manager are also asked to report.

Maris Goes For 59th In Baltimore

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Roger Maris, hoping to replace the immortal Babe Ruth as baseball's "Sultan of Swat," brought his home-run hitting show to the last stop Monday with time and a "jinx" bull park his biggest obstacles.

The 26-year-old New York Yankee's slugger who snapped out of a homer-hitting slump during the weekend at Detroit by connecting for Nos. 57 and 58, has three games left in which to equal or surpass the record 60 Ruth hit during the 1927 season within the 154 games prescribed by Commissioner Fork Frick.

He shoots for the mark beginning Tuesday night when the Yankees play the Baltimore Orioles a twi-light-night doubleheader in tough Memorial Stadium where he has hit only one homer this year—and that didn't count because the game was washed out.

Faces Tough Pitching

Maris, who insists he'd be happier to see the Yankees get two more victories here to clinch the American League pennant than to hit 60 home runs, faces one of the toughest pitching staffs for him in the AL, beginning with young Steve Barber and Hector (Skinny) Brown Tuesday.

In five previous games here Roger has failed to hit a single "official" homer and in fact has made only two hits in 15 at-bats for a .133 batting average. The only homer he has hit this year off the Oriole staff came off Chuck Estrada in Yankee Stadium on May 21. Maris' overall batting average against Baltimore is an unimpressive .241.

Still, Maris, a notorious streak-hitter, apparently has regained the "groove" that abandoned him during last week's four-game set against the Chicago White Sox in which he failed to hit even one homer and almost dropped out of the chase. At Detroit Sunday he walloped a 370-foot triple, that just missed being a homer shortly before No. 58 sailed up against the fecing of the upper rightfield deck for the winning hit in the Yankees' 6-4 12-inning victory over the Tigers.

Park Presents Problem

While the foul lines at memorial Stadium are not to distant—309 feet in both right and left—the grandstand curves sharply away, making it one of the most difficult parks in the majors in which to hit homers—and no one knows that better than the dead pull-hitting Maris, who seldom gets an inside pitch here to take advantage of the short foul lines.

"I don't know why it's so tough for me to hit homers in Memorial Stadium," says Maris. "I seem to hit the ball well but it just doesn't go anywhere. Maybe I'll have better luck in the next three games."

When Roger reached the 58-mark Sunday he matched the only other two challenges to Ruth's all-time record. Jimmy Foxx in 1932 and Hank Greenberg in 1938 also reached 58, but stopped right there. Foxx did it on the last day of the season but Greenberg hit no. 58 with four games to go.

Planetarium To Be Listed

Wilson Library says "The World Almanac" is the "most comprehensive and frequently useful of American almanacs of miscellaneous information."

But the last three annual issues of the authoritative publication inadvertently omitted from any listing the Morehead Planetarium and its renowned art and sciences galleries on the UNC campus.

Then came this message from the Almanac's editors:

"Your efforts shall be rewarded. Morehead Planetarium will shine again in 1962. Sorry for the eclipse."

Clinic Opens For Officials

UNC Delegates Vote Against House 'Un-American' Group At National Student Meeting

By JIM CLOTFELTER

UNC's seven-person delegation to the National Student Congress in Madison, Wisc., last month voted with the Congress majority for the abolition of the House Un-American Acivities Committee and supported other liberal measures.

Resolutions endorsing student non-violent action in the field of civil rights and condemning United States intervention and Russian arms shipments in Cuba were also passed.

The National Student Association — sponsored Congress was held August 20-30 on the University of Wisconsin campus.

UNC's six voting delegates, approved last spring by Student Legislature, were: Bill Harriss, president of the student body; Hank Patterson, vice-president; Mary Townsend, secretary; Pete Thompson, treasurer; Bill Straughn, NSA co-ordinator; and Al Cronenberg, attorney-general. Jim Clotfelter of the Daily Tar Heel staff was an alternate, non-voting delegate.

Votes HUAC Abolition

The Congress, by a vote of 209-156 with 18 abstentions, called for the abolition of HUAC because "no 'propaganda' should be restricted in a democratic society" and because congressional investigation of 'propaganda' can serve no legislative purpose which is consistent with the Constitutional guarantee that 'Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . .'

"HUAC has directly and indirectly encroached upon university autonomy," the resolution claimed, "and on the legitimate freedom of students and faculties." UNC voted 3-2 in favor of HUAC abolition, with one voting delegate absent. The Carolinas-Virginia region voted 9-14 against abolition, with two abstentions.

Reform Urged

A resolution urging reform, not abolition, of the House Committee was introduced and voted down.

In a general statement on non-violent action, the Congress majority sated: ". . . with full knowledge that a commitment to mass civil disobedience is a personal decision, (NSA) does support the right of students to protest injustice through dignified non-violent action."

UNC delegate Hank Patterson and former DTH editor and NSA officer Curtis Gans led resistance to a proposed NSA affiliation with the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, a group of Southern students working against alleged racial discrimination in the South.

Gans Speaks

Gans spoke against affiliation because "the Southern press would like nothing better than to attach the non-violent movement with 'Northern agitation'." One national group—the Student Christian Federation—has voting status in SNCC.

Patterson said he believed "the leadership of the non-violent movement, primarily directed by SNCC, should remain indigenous to the South for the good of the movement."

The Cuban resolution, which condemned suppression of student civil liberties by Fidel Castro and disapproved of outside intervention by both the U. S. and Russia, was approved in place of a more militantly anti-Castro statement. UNC voted with the Congress majority.

UNC supported by a 4-0 vote, with two absent, a resolution con-

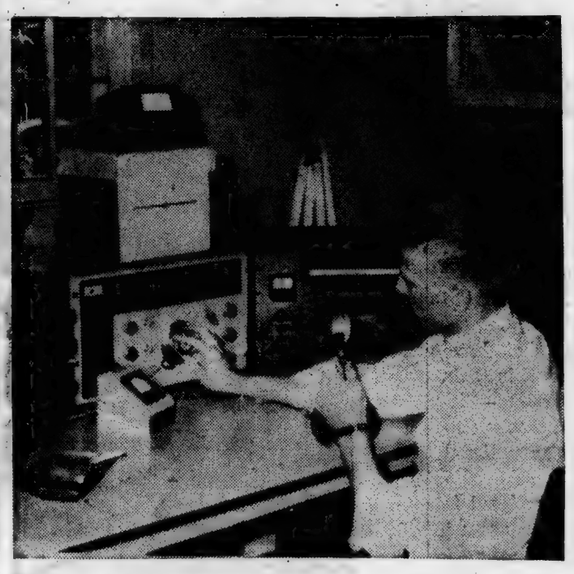
UNC Radio Club To Aid State In Hurricane Esther Crisis



Assisting In Hurricane Watch

Campus Station W4WE is part of state net

Storm Moves Inland To Cape Hatteras

By NEWT SMITH

The University Radio Club in cooperation with the State Civil Defense will operate continuously throughout the Hurricane Esther emergency. The club will handle incoming and outgoing emergency calls twenty - four hours a day until the caution period is over. The station, W4WE, assisting in the net control duties for the entire state will have message blanks distributed in Graham Memorial Y court and Lenoir Hall for students with friends or relatives in the stricken area.

Hurricane Esther, located off Cape Hatteras, is moving steadily at the rate of 13 miles per hour toward the vicinity of Hatteras with winds at a sustained 150 miles per hour. Toward the center the gusts are considerably higher.

75-Mile Winds

Winds of a full 75-mile-an-hour hurricane force will strike the outer banks Tuesday night. The hurricane was expected to hit with full force at 5 a.m. with the center a little east of Hatteras. The general direction of the storm is northwest to north-northwest the Weather Bureau said. This would mean the storm would deal the North Carolina-Virginia coast a bruising blow but could still retain its strength for another possible swipe at the mainland further north.

The Radio Club said that there would be thirty operators working in four hour shifts for Operation Esther. They will be handling all emergency calls from the area to the students and any urgent calls from the students to the area.

The Operations Esther headquarters requested that only emergency messages be sent until the crisis is over. After the crisis there will be time for personal messages which will be sent.

Message blanks will be placed in GM, Y-court, and Lenoir Hall and the Radio Club participants will be wearing Operations Esther cards on their shirts for those interested in sending a message.

The weather for Chapel Hill vicinity calls for increasing winds up to 40 miles per hour Wednesday with heavy rain early. The Radio Club said, however, that they have access to emergency generators and electric current.

In Constant Touch

The station said that they will be operating on the State Civil Defense frequency, 3.985 megacycles. They will maintain constant touch with the coastal region of the entire eastern coast. The station has the maximum legal power in accordance with FCC.

According to latest reports Esther is possibly one of the mightiest storms in recent history—on a par with 1954's Hazel. The tides kicked up by Esther so far range from four to eight feet above normal. For this reason alerts are stationed all along the eastern seaboard, especially from Myrtle Beach to Cape Mary, N. J.

North Carolina's Governor Terry Sanford urged evacuation if possible and established emergency stations in Morehead City and Beaufort. The hurricane warning is effective from Cherry Point, N. C., to the Virginia Capes.

Continue Through Crisis

Operations Esther will continue until the crisis and the aftermath is over in full cooperation with the hurricane alert system. The Radio Club is sponsored by the Student Government and will be operating from Caldwell Y. The Radio Club began one year ago and has had an active career including emergency practices during Parents Day last year.

The station is affiliated with Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Service and Amateur Radio Emergency Corps. The president of the Radio Club is Nields De-

Late Bulletins

Start Cease-Fire Talks

NDOLA, Northern Rhodesia—Kantanga cease-fire talks disrupted by the death of Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold opened Tuesday in this Rhodesian-Congo border copper center amidst reports of some of the heaviest fighting of the U.N.-Katanga campaign.

Katanga President Moise Tshombe flew here Tuesday from the village of Kipushia, outside F[illegible]abethville, and met with United Nations political expert Mahmoud Khiari. No details of their talk were revealed. Khiari, a Tunisian, tried and failed in talks with Tshombe last Tuesday to prevent the outbreak of war.

Soviets Demand 'Troika'

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—The Soviet Union moved quickly Tuesday to capitalize on the death of Dag Hammarskjold by saying it would demand the post of secretary general be replaced by a veto-ridden three-man "troika."

The Soviet intentions were voiced by Soviet foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko after the General Assembly opened its 16th annual session with a three-minute meeting and then adjourned until Wednesday morning to permit private talks on Hammarskjold's successor.

Adenauer To Stay

BONN—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer Tuesday agreed to stay in office at the request of his Christian Democratic party despite opposition from the minority Free Democrats who wield the balance of power in West German politics.

A communique issued by the Christian Democrats, who lost their absolute majority in parliament in Sunday's elections, said Adenauer "has been requested again to make himself available for the office of federal chancellor."

Senate Ends Filibuster Fight

WASHINGTON—Weary legislators Tuesday shelved a Senate anti-filibuster fight and dropped efforts to boost postal rates as the Democratic-controlled 87th Congress inched closer to adjournment.

In closing out the North-South filibuster dispute, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mike Mansfield, Mont., declared that he would make no effort to bring up the issue in the waning days of this session or even next year.

73,000 Reserves Called

WASHINGTON—The government Tuesday ordered another 73,-0000 military reservists, including two National Guard divisions, to active duty Oct. 15 as further preparation for a possible showdown with Russia over Berlin.

Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara also set up a new unified command that brought 50,000 Air Force men and 125,000 Army personnel into a single air-ground force. It will be headed by Lt. Gen. Paul DeWitt Adams, now commander of the Third Army at Fort McPherson, Ga.

Film Body Presents Program

"The best ever!" said Maggie Dent as she described the film selections of the UNC - Chapel Hill Film Society for the coming year.

Such classics as "The Phantom of Opera" with Lon Chaney, "Man of a Thousand Faces", and that classic swashbuckler "The Mark of Zorro" with Douglas Fairbanks Sr. are scheduled to appear on the fall-winter series.

Also included on the program are "art films" seldom seen in this area because of commercial reasons. "No More Fleeing", widely praised as a cimematic statement of Camusian existentialism, is an example of the type shown.

Several "Name" Stars

Among "name" stars appearing throughout the year are Garbo, Chaplin, Barrymore (test shots of his famous Hamlet), Mae West, Laurel and Hardy and Buster Keaton.

The society is extending its program this year to include a club-within-a-club of approximately 50 members who will discuss the films shown, listen to special tapes by film makers, actors, directors, etc. and to see some films not included on the program.

Grant Established

All profits this year will go to the establishment of a grant to be awarded to a UNC major in production for creative experimentation in film making.

Society memberships will go on sale at "Y" court September 21, or they may be ordered by writing the society at 506 North Columbia St. (942-1033), or obtained from committee members.

For adults, the full series is priced at $8.00, for couples at $14.00, and high school children, $6.00. Membership cards are also available for the fall-winter series now, or the spring series in January, at $4.00 for adults, couples $7.00 and high school children, $3. The price includes three guest tickets.

NC Folksinger Hall Wins Goya Festival

By LINDA BISER

Carolina's folk singing Mike Hall won the Goya Guitar Folksinging Festival at Grossinger's Hotel in New York state in competition lasting from September 4-10.

Entered by the DTH, Hall topped 12 other college entrants to be acclaimed winner by several well-known folk singers.

Persons interested in folk song collecting are requested to meet with Mike Hall in the Grail Room of GM Saturday at 1 p.m.

"You gotta sing like you feel," says the festival champ who especially respects the "durable" artistry of Burl Ives.

New York offers after his win tempted Hall but he declined so he could finish his education and get material here in the Carolinas, the "richest folk area in the country." He says he's had offers before but feels he's not ready yet. He's sung at Gertie's Folk City in Greenwich Village, in New Orleans and coffeehouses across the country, "wherever his thumb would take him."

The Hall performance is marked by variety. He specializes in no particular area but attempts to know some of all "so he can live with himself," and be as versatile as possible. Currently he's working on the blues.

"I mess with every instrument," says Hall, best known as a guitarist but also proficient on the doicimer, mandolin, auto harp and most recently the steel guitar. He had to fiberglass the fingernails on his left hand to keep them from breaking when strumming the steel strings.

A compromise between communication and entertainment is Hall's aim. "The way things went in New York, it's pretty likely I'll be a folk singer," he says. Besides the offers Hall was awarded a $400 Goya classical guitar and made a soon-to-be released album with several notable folk-singers. He'd like to make an album on his own.

Hall's biggest "beef with the world" is against people who try to pick things out of folk music rather than seeing it as a whole.

Death Of An Issue

Every college editor at some time during his countless hours behind a typewriter, views the campus and finds it serene. Bereft of his sacred and time-honored "issue" to line into the sights of his editorial popgun, he invariably falls upon the Fraternity Question.

As a subject for college editorials, the fraternity system is nearly ideal: firmly entrenched, powerful, conformist, stifling. It is tall enough to warrant whittling and wide enough to make a fat target.

As a college newspaper, The Daily Tar Heel is no exception. The reams of copy that have poured from its battered Underwoods on fraternities would fill books—most of which would make rather repetitious reading. The faults of the Carolina fraternity system have been catalogued afresh for every freshman class for decades.

Ten years, however, might well rob the 1971-72 DTH editor of the comforting presence of this seemingly immortal issue. The editor who occupies this chair 10 years hence—if that long—will be forced to aim his epithetic generalizations at another standard target.

Fraternities will no longer be a target. For, if the present trend continues, the huge system of nationally organized fraternities will be dead, perhaps replaced by local political groups or other variations of the "local." If luck accompanies the demise of the national fraternity system, it will be replaced by action groups—bodies organized around a common purpose: political or social reform, academic excellence or myriad other valid goals.

"Along Fraternity Row , local chapters are making up their own progressive house rules. They're rewriting the sacred rituals, pledging whomever they please, and beating 'the national' instead of the dean. It looks as if the whole system . . . is on the way out."

The above is quoted from the October issue of Esquire magazine. Although Esquire's comments are not as appropriate at Carolina as they are at other schools, the situation is the same, tempered only by UNC's characteristic resistance to change.

The same conditinos that have driven nationals are present in their pubescent stages at Carolina—discriminatory clauses, inflexible statutes and other unpopular national dictates.

Withdrawal from the national is still a relatively novel idea around big and little fraternity courts — novel and sometimes shocking. Rebellion is not a characteristic of Carolina fraternities.

The process will be slow here, but it will come. Sooner or later even Carolina fraternities will react to national dictatorship. Then the system must change, or die.

Which alternative will come about is difficult to predict. But in either case, the local organization that survives will not exist as it does at the present.

Most of the potential inherent in fraternities stems from generally close-knit organizations; they are held together by strong ties of friendship.

Thus they are prime breeding grounds for concerted efforts. As they now exist, they are wont to drift aimlessly, with few constructive goals to guide them.

Given a common goal, a locally organized group modeled along fraternal lines would be a potent force. Severed from strong national ties, fraternities might become such a group, with action as their goal rather than social gratification.

The editor who has been robbed of an issue will certainly feel only fleeting sorrow if they are replaced by action groups.

The death of an issue is insignificant compared to the birth of a constructive force.

Welcome 'Uncle Mot'

Benefactor of more than 140 recipients of the Morehead scholarship, Mr. Morehead has over the years contributed greatly to the enrichment of the physical facilities and academic program at Carolina.

The Morehead scholarship program has enabled Carolina to attract a large number of outstanding students who, without the program, might have gone elsewhere. During the years since the inception of the program, the Morehead scholarship has become the most coveted award granted for study at Carolina, and is highly regarded throughout the country.

Mr. Morehead's gifts and grants to the University, among them the Morehead Planetarium, have contributed immeasurably to UNC as an institution of higher learning.

Carolina is grateful for his generosity, proud that it has been justified by the furthering of Carolina's reputation as an outstanding University in the South.

Otelia Blasts Litter Bugs

The Dean of our college used to say that anybody who strewed papers around streets or lawns had a disorderly mind.

Never have I seen so much litter on East Franklin Street as I saw this afternoon when I went for my daily walk.

There were paper cups galore, chewing gum wrappers, wax paper, paper pie plates, newspapers, from Hillsboro Street on up through the business section.

* * *

I AM SURE there is an ordinance against throwing litter on the streets and sidewalks, but the problem is catching the offenders and reporting them. You can turn in the license number of an automobile, but you can't report a person whose name you don't know, and there is no way a citizen can obtain another person's name.

I have seen college students throw paper cups down, but the college students are not here now, so this litter is evidently made by children. It is mute evidence that these people, whatever their age, have had no training in their homes.

If the policemen would pick up a few litterbuggers and if the courts would fine the parents, it wouldn't take the parents long to correct this deficiency in hteir offspring's upbringing.

* * *

THE SCHOOLS could help by pointing out to the children that disorderly habits are a reflection on themselves, and that self-respecting people don't throw things down for other people to pick up.

THE CAMPUS LOOKED so beautiful and green as I walked through it, marred only by some litter beside the Vance-Pettigrew-Battle dormitory. Let's help keep our campus beautiful and our village clean of litter.

WADE WELLMAN

Eichmann, Israel & Opinions

"The case of Adolph Eichmann," said a friend of mine last April, "is the case of one man standing up before an entire nation of men who have no other thought on their minds but to hang him."

This statement whirled in my memory one night two months later, as I sat in Harry's talking with a political science major. I asked him to sum up the case for me. He shrugged slightly: "I just wish they'd hang him and stop boring us."

"Do you think they will hang him?" I inquired.

"I don't know, but it doesn't matter—they've already made complete fools of themselves."

The illegal seizure of Eichmann in Buenos Aires last year; the insulting note to the Argentine government; Ben-Gurion's long sanctimonious letter to President Frondizi, and Gideon Hausner's bombastic tirades have all created widespread annoyance.

But even the sharpest critics admit that the trial has been far more objective than they expected.

On May 23, 1960, when Eichmann's seizure was announced to the Israeli Parliament, the members gasped aloud with astonishment. Tuvia Friedmann, widely ridiculed in Israel, sneeringly dubbed "Herr Eichmann" for his rabid revenge-lust, had apparently brought off the impossible.

He had organized a search which finally resulted in Eichmann being tracked down, snatched from a public sidewalk, and, allegedly, drugged for the flight to Israel. Many had believed it impossible. Now it was a fact.

Last April, when the trial opened, the astonished gasps were replaced by exclamations of dismay.

Hearing the details of Eichmann's colossal sadism, and seeing his unrepentant smirk, the spectators looked at one another with disbelief. Many in Israel had almost forgotten the cataclysmic suffering that was visited on their people. Hearing it fully described, many were close to tears; some got up and left the courtroom, unable to stand any more.

THE PROSECUTION FINISHED its case with films of the death-camps, during which Eichmann smiled coldly. Since Israel had refused to grant safe conduct for SS witnesses, Eichmann himself was the only witness for the defense.

Questioned by Hausner, he dodged and weaved, argued verbosely, and slipped into long-winded speeches.

Hausner had difficulty keeping his temper.

Eichmann admitted to moral guilt in his co-operation with Himmler's extermination program, but insisted that he was legally unaccountable.

"Maybe what your friend really meant," someone told me dryly, "was that he wished they'd stop reminding us."

In July the trial ground to its cumbersome finish, and the court began private sessions to find the defendant guilty and decide on the sentence (the death penalty is not mandatory).

On August 2 I called on Rabbi E. M. Rosensweig, at his office in the Hillel Foundation. Hillel House is a beautiful structure; the posters, the corridors, and the esoteric books take one almost into Old-Testament Israel.

Surely it's been long since the Jewish people were carrid off by Nebuchadnezzar as slaves, but even today the Hillel Foundation, with its intimate halls and rooms, reminds us of the terrible persecutions which have driven these people into close fraternity.

RABBI ROSENSWEIG spoke calmly and politely, but with great firmness. He explained that, as an opponent of capital punishment, he did not want to see Eichmann executed.

The world press reaction, he admitted, was at first hostile to the abduction of Eichmann, but he felt that the objectivity of the trial had mellowed that resentment.

I quoted my friend's statement that the trial in Jerusalem was a bore. "The tragedy of that remark," Rabbi Rosensweig said pensively, "is that it shows how bitterly a human being resents being exposed to himself." "Do you think the West is generally anti-Semitic?" I asked. "It seems to be a deep-seated attitude of Western civilization, and especially so in Germany," he said.

HE AGREED THAT the Anglo-American powers had been remarkably unsympathetic toward Eichmann's victims. British airpower refused Jewish requests to bomb the transportation routes to the death camps, or the camps themselves. Refugees from the massacres were unwelcome in other countries, before and during the war. The entire West, by looking the other way, had shared Eichmann's guilt.

Was revenge the motive for the seizure? Rabbi Rosensweig didn't think so. Revenge for so monstrous a crime as Eichmann's was a contradiction in terms. But, when we parted company after an hour's discussion, I still disagreed on this point.

Consider a tavern in Tel Aviv. Brilliant sunlight permeates the room. In a shaded corner a young Israeli divides his attention between a solid-geometry text and a bottle of dark gleaming wine. The beverage is Rishon-LeZion, popular in Israel, and David takes it much more seriously than the assignment he's doing. At least, he turns to it frequently when a problem baffles him. His cousin Ephraim, older and ready for the university, comes up to the table.

"Hello, David," he says. "Have you heard the news?"

"I never hear any news I can steer clear of," David answers dryly.

"My heart bleeds for Eichmann, David says coolly.

"Well—from the way you've talked, I almost suspect it does!"

David smiles at that, and puts the book down. He faces his cousin more cheerfully.

"The Eichmann case did a lot of harm and no good, as far as I'm concerned. I wish he'd had the decency to kill himself in 1945 and spare us this mess."

"Weren't you glad when they got him?"

David shakes his head slowly. "No, I can't say that. Maybe I was at first. But after they brought him to Jerusalem I heard a story that made me wonder a bit. Some kids were playing a game called 'Eichmann's trial.' They sentenced an eight-year-old boy to death and hanged him from a tree. He would have been killed, if his brother hadn't run up in time to save him."

"It had some bad effects, Ephraim concedes. "But at least the trial taught the world a lesson."

David is unimpressed.

"The world never learns its lesson. You know that. And Eichmann's trial didn't weaken the anti-Semitic mood in the least. I think it stirred it up, if anything. Most people in the West thought this wasn't justice but revenge — and I'm inclined to agree. After all, Friedmann's search group called themselves 'the Avengers.'"

His expression darkens. "I saw that American movie, "OPERATION EICHMANN," in the U.S. last spring. It showed the whole thing as a revenge plot and it glorified Eichmann as a runaway. If that's what the Americans were thinking then, what do they think now that Eichmann's got the death sentence?"

"He had it coming," Ephraim argues, but David checks that with a tolerant smile.

"You're naive. There's no punishment for Eichmann, unless you believe in the Catholic or Christian hell."

"I don't think so," David says. "I just wish it had never started. I will say we've put ourselves on the spot. Ben-Gurion said the punishment Eichmann got wasn't too important. People will say, 'If that's the case, why did they execute him, with all the opposition to capital punishment?' "

"Maybe."

Southern Custom Like Pisa's Leaning Tower

THROUGHOUT THE summer months on the campus, the UNC News provided the ultimate example of what damage a free press might do. While good intentions were no doubt in the mind of those who edited the News, it appeared that some big contest was going on to see who could write the most copy on integration and the NAACP.

Now the problem involved no doubt had its due place in the news. But every issue? And what was especially disconcerting was the position taken by the writers. Certainly the editorial page is the place to express opinion, but sometimes a more subtle approach accomplishes more. We would venture to bet that the News would win no prizes in how to influence people, much less win friends.

In hopes that the Daily Tar Heel doesn't jump on this same horse and ride him to death, we would like to give a few impressions on the question which we hope aren't "out in left field."

* * *

CUSTOM AND TRADITION are as commonplace in America's heritage as they are in any nation's. Sometimes, however, this strong force which more often than not guides the present is overlooked or disregarded.

Since 1953 and the United States Supreme Court's ruling, the subject of integration vs. segregation has been batted around so much it's been nigh beat to death. Without going into the pros and cons of the question, the fact remains that some people do not and cannot appreciate the position of the white or the Negro in the South.

On a recent trip through the northern Midwest we were pleased at the number of people who would eye the North Carolina license tag on the car and venture some sort of chit-chat. More often than not, the subject got around to the problem of race relations in the South and more specifically to the then current incident in Monroe, N. C.

"Why do you people down there have so much trouble with the Negroes?" they would ask. "We get along with them alright up here."

* * *

HOW DO YOU EXPLAIN custom and tradition, hundreds of years of it, to someone? We tried to point out that blood is thicker than any Supreme Court ruling, and how people become set in their ways. It still didn't click. We explained how in pre-Civil War time it was a felony for anyone to teach a Negro how to read and how this has hampered him intellectually and socially. But it's hard to explain the whys and wherefores of the course of history and man's place in it, especially when you don't fully understand it yourself.

One point in our favor was the action by the schools in Atlanta. It gave us the opportunity to say, "Well, we ARE making progress."

* * *

IT IS EVEN more difficult to explain the situation by venturing the philosophy that the Southerners of today are the children of the third and fourth generations, and that we are perhaps suffering from the iniquities of our ancestors. This would be merely shifting the blame. But the truth of the matter remains.

Southern custom and tradition are like the tower of Pisa—leaning in the direction of ultimate destruction, but majestically holding on. Once long pants and short hair for boys and long hair and dresses for girls was a solid American custom. But this custom no longer stands on the public pinnacle.

Sacrifice For Squad?

The returning scholar is greeted with a variety of new sights around the University. Franklin Street has received a new layer of asphalt paving; the grand old Davie Poplar, abbreviated but still verdant, no longer threatens to topple upon the heads of its admirers; the new Modern Languages building is taking shape, such as it is, beneath the paternal gaze of all who watched its birth this spring. Such are the changes that remind us that the University, like a garden, grows and decays, dies and renews himself, perenially.

SOMETIMES THE CHANGES are more startling than reassuring, and suggest decay rather than blossom and renewal, as if to topple us from our complacency in the wisdom of our administrators.

Such a change is the walling off of a pen in Lenoir Hall's North Dining Room devoted to the feeding of the University's athletes.

Many of us are glad enough to be spared the company of these young gladiators, but the cost of this small blessing gives one pause.

One look at the crowding this year in Lenoir Hall is enough to make it fairly clear, even to a football player, that the large area permanently subtracted from the usable dining hall space cannot be afforded.

While the rabble scramble and stumble for a place to wolf their luncheon fare, the trusty football squad may pick their teeth and scratch at leisure in the privacy of their spacious, airy sanctuary.

NOW SOME WOULD WILLINGLY surrender the badly needed space in Lenoir Hall to an eating club for athletes if this already favored band were making any worthy contribution to the life of the University.

But no one can be happy sacrificing space to a football team which has repeatedly demonstrated its incompetence on the playing field, or to a basketball team distinguished chiefly in the past season by being barred from NCAA games and by involvement in bribery scandals.

To be brief, there is a number of cynics and ingrates who are wondering why we must make new sacrifices to a group of students which has been conspicuously impotent to make athletic, academic or moral contributions to the success of this institution, which is, I recall, a University.

About Letters

The Daily Tar Heel invites readers to use it for expressions of opinion on current topics regardless of viewpoint. Letters must be signed, contain a verifiable address, and be free of libelous material.

Brevity and legibility increase the chance of publication. Lengthy letters may be edited or omitted. Absolutely none will be returned.

Wesley Revises Program

A revised Wesley Foundation program, including new "dialogue groups," is lined up for the coming year.

The customary several course fellowship supper has been cut to a dessert course but several new courses taught via group discussion have been added.

Leading the groups will be Dr. Sam Hill, chairman of the Religion Dept.; Rev. Dewitt Myers, pastor of the United Church of Christ; Sam McGill, former Dean of Student Affairs; J. D. Phillips, Law School faculty; and Dr. Harold McCurdy, Department of Psychology faculty.

Last Sunday night approximately 80 students met in the Fellowship Hall of the Methodist Church. A model of the proposed Wesley Foundation Building was displayed. Plans were announced for a Student Movement State Retreat Sept. 23-24 at Camp Chesnut Ridge.

21 Professors Back After Year Absence

Twenty-one Carolina faculty members have returned to Chapel Hill from leaves of absence in and throughout the United States and the world.

These faculty members have been on leaves of one-half a year up to one and one-half years pursuing research, collecting material for books, stuying, an serving as visiting professors.

In the Department of Dramatic Arts, two faculty members are back, Associate Professor Foster Fitz-Simons and Assistant Professor Tommy Rezutto. Professor Foster Fitz-Simons returns from a Kenan leave for the spring semester of this year. He has been working on a future publication concerned with choreography in the theater. Professor Rezutto had a year's leave to study toward a Ph.D. degree at Northwestern University.

Assistant Professor James B. Meriwether (English) has returned from a year's leave. Professor Meriwether received one of 10 full year fellowships granted to scholars in English by the American Council of Learned Societies. He has been working on a critical study of the novels and short stories of William Faulkner which deal with the Sartoris, McCaslin and Snopes families of the author's Yaknapatawpha series.

History Prof Returns

In the Department of History, Professor Frank W. Klingberg returns from serving as a visiting professor at San Fernando Valley State College in Northridge, Calif. Two NSA Representatives Elected To National Posts demning "In Loco Parentis," the theory whereby the university is established as "paternal guardian over the moral, intellectual and social activities of the student." The total Congress vote was 239-33 in favor of the resolution.

Soviet Condemned

Bills condemning Soviet action in Berlin and recommending that the film "Operation Abolition" be taken out of circulation, among other legislation, were approved later in the Congress.

The Congress itself was preceded by the Student Editorial Affairs Conference, the Student Body President's Conference, and the NSA Coordinator's Conference.

More than 500 student representatives from colleges across the nation—including most of the major U. S. universities—met for the 14th annual Congress beginning Aug. 20. The stated purpose of the Congress is to allow student "leaders" from different parts of the country to meet and exchange ideas and programs and also to create a forum for the American student, through his elected representatives, to give his opinions on the major problems facing the student.

The first seven days of the Congress were devoted to discussion workshops, adoption of rules, speakers—such as Gov. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin, Congress of Racial Equality Director James Farmer, and former U. S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Arthur S. Flemming, and Fulton Lewis III and Mike Harrington, pro and con HUAC—and legislative committees and sub-committees.

The last four days were spent in legislative sessions and election of next year's officers. Harriss and Patterson of UNC were appointed to the National Executive Committee and National Interim Committee respectivly. These groups decide NSA policy between national Congresses and manage the implementation of Congress declarations.

Two former Carolina students—also former NSA presidents—spoke at the Congress: Richard J. Murphy, NSA prexy 1952-3 and now U. S. Asst. Postmaster General, and Al Lowenstein, 1950-1 and recently named Asst. Dean of Students at Stanford. UNC is the only university in the nation which has had two NSA presidents.

George Johnson Jr. Joins UNC Faculty

Dr. George Johnson Jr., native of Wilmington, has joined the faculty of the University School of Medicine. He will be an assistant professor in the Department of Surgery.

Dr. Johnson received his B.S. degree in Medicine at Chapel Hill in 1949, his certificate in Medicine at UNC in 1950, and his M.D. degree in 1952 at Cornell University. He was an assistant in surgery at New York Hospital, an instructor in surgery at Cornell, and has been a clinical instructor in surgery at Memorial Hospital since 1959.

Critic John Ehle Publishes New Novel On Mountain Life

John Ehle, author of a controversial article criticizing the "lack of creative talent in Chapel Hill," has had a new novel published.

The novel, titled "Lion on the Hearth," tells of the happiness and problems, the loves and deaths of the King family who came from the mountains to Asheville to open a store. It will be published on September 27th by Harper & Bros.

RTVMP Teacher

Ehle, a resident of Chapel Hill and a teacher in RTVMP, has written many documentary plays and films. In addition to the fame he achieved with his controversial article of last spring in the DTH, he has written two novels, "Move Over, Mountain" and "Kingstree Island" and two books of nonfiction, "The Survivor" and "Shepherd of the Streets."

Mr. Ehle can trace his ancestry on his mother's side back to the earliest settlers in the mountains of North Carolina. He was born and grew up in Asheville.

UNC Graduate

During World War II he served as a rifleman in the final stages of the fighting in Europe. After the war he finished his education at the University of North Carolina, where he was hired by the Communication Center to teach and write.

Mr. Ehle says, "Most of my time goes into writing and advising student writers, but I also make wine from North Carolina grapes—a rose from James grapes and a white sweet wine from the scuppernong—and I cure hams by different country methods."

C.H. Film Society Releases Schedule

A film on existentialism — the first work by the first Negro experimental film maker—a Carl Th. Dreyer classic on witchcraft—the only completely poetic film ever made in Hollywood—the original "Phantom of the Opera" with the great Lon Chaney—a short on the family life of a cat—a new Cine Club within its ranks and the establishment of a creative grant fund for individual experimentation in the film medium are some of the highlights of the 1961-62 season of the UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society which opens Monday, Oct. 2.

In programming its second full season the Film Society is offering an opportunity to see some of the latest experimental work made in this country and abroad as well as treasured rarities from private collectors, all with an eye to interesting enough people in the University-Chapel Hill community to join its ranks this year so that it can make possible a minimum grant of $300 to a student majoring in the Department of Radio, TV and Motion Pictures to do creative work in motion pictures.

To make possible the creative grant, three hundred memberships are needed to a sixteen-program series which includes "No More Fleeing," a German avant-garde feature of life made absurd by the atomic bomb—absurdity in the sense that Camus has conveyed it in literature; the epic "Alexander Nevsky," directed by the Russian film director Sergei Eisenstein; the long-lost poignant "La Maternelle" of Jean Benoit-Levy; "The Mark of Zorro," with Douglas Fairbanks (Sr.) at his most exuberant self; the brooding yet lyrical "L'Atalante," the masterpiece of Jean Vigo who in his brief, skyrocketing career gave France one of its genuine artists, and Franju's violent and controversial "The Blood of the Beasts."

Memberships will go on sale Thursday (September 21) in the YMCA lobby. For adults, the full series is priced at $8.00 or two for $14.00; high school children, $6.00. Memberships are also available for the fall-winter series now, the spring series in January, at $4.00 for adults, couples $7.00, and high school students, $3.00. Each member receives three guest tickets free with each membership.

Subscriptions are also available by writing the Society at 508 N. Columbia St. (942-1033) or from the following committee members: Walter Spearman, Tom and Mary Patterson, Ralph Sargent, Tom and Betsy Davis, Anne Queen, Robert Hilliard, Ross Scroggs, Elmer Oettinger, Phillips Russell, Sherwin Cooper, Robert Johnson, Polly Brady, JoAnn Allcott, Beth Okun, Tam Lefler, Bruce Cooper, Charles Weil, Nancy Barr, Diane Bedell, Neill Clark, Michael Carlitz, Charles Heatherly, John Safco, and Maggie Dent.

DeVere said the first emergency message carried was to Myrtle Beach advising closing a house and moving the furniture. Another message cleared weather reports for flight schedules. He urged anyone who wished to call to fill out a message blank or call 942-5613; however, he added that nothing but emergency calls can be handled now.

Cadets End 'Buildup'

"Operation Buildup" is a program designed to build up the personnel strength of the cadet corps. During orientation week members of Arnold Air Society, an honor AFROTC society, the Angel Flight and senior cadets explain the AFROTC program to freshmen and aid in registration.

This year "Operation Buildup" consisted of speeches in the dormitories, information booths, interviews, a Coke hour given by the Angel Flight and a booth in the annual freshmen carnival.

YW Opens Annual Membership Drive

A meeting of 500 new women students in Lenoir Hall last week began the annual month-long YWCA membership drive.

Jackie Day, YWCA president, and other "Y" Cabinet members spoke on the activities and program plans for this year.

The "Y" activities will vary from welfare work to international relations to the office force. The Campus Chest will again sponsor the annual charity drive on the UNC campus.

The Public Affairs, U.N. Education, International Relations and Human Relations committees will discuss and present programs on local, national and international affairs.

Two trips to New York City over school holidays are being planned as well as participation in the annual student United Nations.

Offer Aid

The Welfare, Hospital Aid, Hospital Visiting, Gravely Sanatorium and Dix Hill Committees will offer aid to local and state agencies in presenting programs and entertaining patients.

The Girl Scouts, Catholic Orphanage, Negro "Y" Teens and Blind "Y" Teens committees will help in program planning and leadership direction for the young people of Chapel Hill and nearby communities.

The Finance, Entertainment, Publicity, Office Force and Membership committees, which handle the mechanics of the YWCA program, will also be open to new students during the membership drive.

Theatre Group To Hold First Meet Today

The UNC Student Theatre Workshop will hold its first meeting of the year at 4 p.m. today in the Playmakers Theatre. Workshop officials have invited all interested students.

Plans for the Workshop's 1961-62 season will be discussed, including a proposed Student Theatre Workshop playwriting award to be offered for the first time this year.

The Workshop, an experimental drama group, is open to all students enrolled in the University. Following the business meeting this afternoon, the Workshop will show a film of an adaptation of a Japanese Noh play, "Komachi at the Holy Tree," which the group produced last year.

The All-America Pitch

Maryland sports publicist Joe Blair knows what it takes to get an All-America recognition for one of his boys. The drum beater for the Terrapins has hung the red flag on end Gary Collins, and if Blair's blueprints run true to form, Collins will be included in all of the lists of leading players when the season comes to a close.

The first six pages of the book are devoted to telling Collins' football history in flowery prose, quoting some coaches to the same effect, and listing all of his honors, records, and "possible records."

* * * * *

The statistics on Collins are factual, the quotes by the coaches are probably authentic, and the story may be only a bit overwritten. But Collins isn't an All-America yet. He hasn't played in a single game this season. However, this last fact always seems to be overlooked.

All-America players are usually made before the season begins. The publicist who can do the best selling job usually comes home with the trophy. About the only thing that can ruin the deal is a losing season, in which case another candidate, on a winning team, has the best chance.

An All-America position has come to mean more than a top-ten finish at many schools. The only problem is that there are a lot more candidates floating around than there are positions for them. True, there are scores of All-Ameica teams, and since they don't always agree, there are usually some 40 to 50 All-Americas in a season. Still, some candidates fall by the wayside, thereby playing a full season without gaining the ultimate honor.

There can only be one solution. All of the major football teams in the country must be placed on a priority list. When a given amount of time passes, then a college will be given th privilege of placing the player of its choice on the All-America team. Under this system, each school should have one bona-fide All-American about every twelve years. Then it would be up to the players to decide who should get the honor.

A lot of problems would be solved by this system. The sportswriters would be spared the chore of reading through mounds of propaganda material. The players would be spared the embarrassment of a letdown by not making the team. And maybe there would be pictures of the cheerleaders on the covers of the pre-season brochures.

Intramurals Need You

The Intramural season will be underway soon.

At Carolina, students have the benefit of one of the best intramural programs in the country. The schedule is complete with sports of every kind all through the year.

Only one thing keeps the program from perfection. That is student participation. If there is no one to compete, then a lot of time and effort is wasted.

So far, the program has not been badly hurt because of lack of participation. But several students have missed the fun and enjoyment that they might have gained in taking part. In the past, some team managers have been somewhat apathetic towards the program. In their laxity, many individuals did not get the opportunity to participate, sometimes because the team was never organized or interest was not given a chance to build.

We would urge every well-bodied student on campus to take advantage of some phase of the fine intramural program. You can find the time somewhere—and it will be well spent.

Bow 'n' Arrow Shoot To Be Staged Here

The Carolina Open Archery Tournament will be held in Chapel Hill late this month under the sponsorship of the UNC outing club. Archers from all over the state are expected to participate in this tournament.

In addition to the open event, there will be a closed competition for university students which will run throughout the semester. The scoring will be on a handicap basis, in order to allow the less experienced archers to compete on a level with the veterans.

At different occasions throughout the semester, medals will be awarded to individuals with the highest scores to date. The winner of the overall tourney will receive national recognition.

At its first meeting this year, the Outing Club decided to put more emphasis on archery in the future.

Officers elected at the last meeting were President Charlie Blumenthal, Vice-President Howard Lewis, Treasurer Max Toney, and Secretary Louise Barrett.

Anyone wishing further information about the Outing Club may inquire at the Intramural Office or call Charlie Blumenthal at 968-9141.

Baseballers Open Drills

If the weatherman permits, fall today. The first off season drills baseball practice will begin here begin on Emerson Field at 2 p.m.

Coach Walter Rabb is interested in seeing all of his returning players, plus any transfers and freshman prospects. Should rain halt the practice, then the candidates will meet in 302 Woollen Gym.

Coach Rbb has also asked the candidates for manager to report today.

Wolfpack Rated Tops Among Tar Heel Foes

The Tar Heel football team finished in a tie with Wake Forest for sixth place in the Atlantic Coast Conference, with a record of two wins and five losses.

They dealt the only conference defeat to ACC champion and Cotton Bowl winner Duke, who was 5-1. Duke was followed in order by N. C. State, Maryland, Clemson, South Carolina, UNC, Wake Forest, and Virginia.

Our pre-season look at the conference race reveals that only two teams have reasonable chances of bettering their 1960 finish in the coming campaign. The Tar Heels are one of these teams.

The Daily Tar Heel is going out on a limb to predict the finish of the '61 season—but with one exception. It is not attempting to predict the finish of the UNC team. We will not say that the Carolina team will finish first, second, third fourth, or anywhere else. We do concede that the team is capable of finishing anywhere in the top six. But lest our judgment be dulled by optimism or pessimism, school pride or fear of being too far wrong, we will not include UNC in our prognostication.

For what it's worth, here is our guess as to the finish of the other seven teams:

North Carolina State
Duke
Maryland
Clemson
Wake Forest
South Carolina
Virginia

N. C. STATE—The Wolfpack is rated best of the seven because it has Roman Gabriel, the All-America quarterback, plus the nucleus of an outstanding 1960 freshman team. Carson Bosher and Tony Koszarsky, outstanding sophomore prospects, give the Pack a blazing halfback corps. Jim D'Antonio and Roger Moore are topnotch fullbacks. Little 158-pound Bill Kriger and 165-pound Jim Ressi will be valuable replacements for Gabriel.

In the line, tackle is the strongest spot, followed by guard, end, and center. Coach Earl Edwards will need to find some more pass catching ends to go along with Johnny Morris in order to utilize the throwing arm of Mr. Gabriel to the best advantage.

DUKE—The Blue Devils have the best halfback personnel of all the ACC schools, with such ball carriers as Dean Wright, Joel Arrington, Jack Wilson, Mark Leggett, and Danny Bridges. They have solid—but not sparkling—fullbacks in Dave Burch and John Tinsell, and a lot of raw talent in quarterbacks Walt Rappold and Gil Garner. Whether or not coach Bill Murray can find a pass catcher to replace Tee Moorman will make a lot of difference in the attack. The Duke line will depend more on speed than on weight, as there aren't any real big men in the forward wall.

MARYLAND—The Terrapins have some outstanding individuals, and could pull some real surprises. End Gary Collins has been touted for All-America. There is both size and speed up front, with tackles Dave Crossan and Roger Sheals, guards Bill Kirchire and Tom Sakkovich, and center Bob Hactor. Dick Novak leads the multiple offense, which works mainly off the "T" formation. Halfback Dennis Condie will be one of the top ball carriers in the ACC. Coach Tom Nugent has switched Joe Hresk, a 160-pound guard, to fullback, hoping to plug this problem spot.

CLEMSON—The Tigers aren't the fullers that they were a few years ago, but they still carry a pretty good punch. Gary Barnes, an all-ACC end in 1959, is now a top offensive threat at halfback. Junior Joe Anderson succeeds Lowndes Shingler at the quarterback post. Fullback Ben Scrudate and halfback Wendall Black round out the backfield. Ronnie Osborne, a 275-pounder, anchors the line at tackle. The other top men up front for coach Frank Howard are center Ben Andree, guard Calvin West, and End Coleman Glaze.

WAKE FOREST—The Deacons will likely change their offense now that Norman Snead isn't around anymore. Coach Bill Hildebrand will depend more on a running game, with halfbacks Winston Futch and Dennie Frederick leading the way. Chuck Reiley will take over the quarterbacking chores. They are weak at fullback, with Bruce McDonnell the only letterman. Bill Hull, Bill Ruby, and Henry Newton are fine ends. Paul Martineau and Kent Martin lead a slender tackle corps. Sophomore Tommy Egge is the best center. Bob Irwin, a junior, is the best of a meager crop of guards. For Wake to come through, a lot of green men are going to have to mature fast.

SOUTH CAROLINA—The Gamecocks, under new coach Marvin Bass, are planning a "pro-type" offense for '61. Quarterbacks Jim Costen and Dave Sewell, who ran wild against UNC last season, will direct the attack. Billy Gambrell is the best of the halfbacks, and Dick Day is the leading fullback. End John Caskey and Tackle Joel Goodrich are the line leaders. The main problem in the forward wall will be that of inexperience.

VIRGINIA—The Cavaliers are ready to break their 28-game losing streak, but they will play in too fast a league. Now coach Bill Elias has inherited a team with a lot of offensive ability. If he can build a defensive team, he will make UVa fans happy. Stan Fischer and Gary Cuozzo quarterback the team, calling on such fine ball carriers as Ted Rzempoluch, Carl Kuhn, and Tony Ulehla. Bruce Perry is the choice to replace rushing leader Fred Shepherd at Full. Ron Gassert is one of the better tackles in the league, but many of the posts up front will be filled by unknowns.

Morehead Group Visiting Schools

The Orange County Morehead Scholarship Committee is now visiting schools qualified to nominate students for competition in the statewide selection for Morehead Scholarships to the University of North Carolina.

Committee Chairman L. J. Phipps of Chapel Hill and members W. L. Sloan and George L. Coxhead, both of Chapel Hill, and Bonner D. Sawyer and Dr. M. B. Roberts, both of Hillsboro, are scheduled to receive nominations from school nominating committees by October 15. The committee will interview and screen each applicant in their selection process. They will make their recommendations to the executive secretary of the Morehead Foundation by November 15. County nominations will then be processed and forwarded to the seven district committees for further screening and selection.

ONCE MORE, UNTO THE BREACH

With this installment I begin my eighth year of writing columns for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, as fine a bunch of men as you would meet in a month of Sundays—loyal, true, robust, windswept, forthright, tattooed—in short, precisely the kind of men you would expect them to be if you were familiar with the cigarettes they make—and I hope you are—for Marlboro, like its makers, is loyal, true, robust, windswept, forthright, tattooed.

There is, however, one important difference between Marlboro and its makers. Marlboro has a filter and the makers do not—except of course for Windswept T. Sigafoos, Vice President in charge of Media Research. Mr. Sigafoos does have a filter. I don't mean that Mr. Sigafoos personally has a filter. What I mean is that he has a filter in his swimming pool at his home in Fairbanks, Alaska. You might think that Fairbanks is rather an odd place for Mr. Sigafoos to live, being such a long distance from the Marlboro home office in New York City. But it should be pointed out that Mr. Sigafoos is not required to be at work until 10 A.M.

But I digress. This column, I say, will take up questions of burning interest to the academic world—like "Should French conversation classes be conducted in English?" and "Should students be allowed to attend first hour classes in pajamas and robes?" and "Can a student of 18 find happiness with an eco-bornish professor of 90?"

Because many of you are new to college, especially freshmen, perhaps it would be well in this opening column to start with campus fundamentals. What, for example, does "Alma Mater" mean? Well, sir, "Alma Mater" is Latin for "send money".

Next, let us discuss student-teacher relationships. In college the keynote of the relationship between student and teacher is informality. When you meet a teacher on campus, you need not salute. Simply tug your forelock. If you are bald and have no forelock, a low curtsey will suffice. In no circumstances should you polish a teacher's car or sponge and press his suit. It is, however, permissible to worm his dog.

With the President of the University, of course, your relationship will be a bit more formal. When you encounter the President, fling yourself prone on the sidewalk and sing loudly:

"Prexy is thin
Prexy is fine
Prexy has specs
Of Saks Fifth Avenue"

As you can see, the President of the University is called "Prexy". Similarly, Deans are called "Dixie". Professors are called "Proxie". Housemothers are called "Horse Moxie". Students are called "Amoebae".

This absorbing, free-wheeling column will be brought to you throughout the school year by the makers of Marlboro and Marlboro's partner in pleasure, the new, unfiltered, king-size Philip Morris Commander. If unfiltered cigarettes are your choice, try a Commander. You'll be welcome aboard.

Ward Marslender, a quarterback last year, is ust getting used to his halfback position, as illustrated by his performances of late in practice. Switched to half because of his broken-field running ability, the Washington unior is expected to be a big help now that he can carry the ball more. Marslender will also be able to pass from his halfback post.

Unknowns Create Stir In Practice

Kinney Throws Well Against Starters Ray Leads Team In Pass Receptions;

By PAUL HOUSTON

Names you don't hear much about are making news behind closed gates at North Carolina football practice.

They are not first stringers and most are below the second team. But Lacey, Ray, Boutselis, Kinney, Saffelle, McLamb, Henry, Marslender. Wellman, Serenko and Shumate have been unsung standouts lately.

Take sophomore right ends Jim Ray and Bob Lacey, who rank third and fourth. In last Saturday's full-scale scrimmage, Ray gathered passes of 18, 9, 5, and 11 yards to lead everybody there. His blocking and tackling also drew applause. Lacey, a true natural at the pass receiving art, caught two for 20 yards. And all week he was nabbing them like All-America Al Goldstein—circusy.

Also, at fifth team left end, Dana Wellman was a happy surprise Saturday. The converted fullback received three aerials, including one from quarterback Sandy Kinney for a touchdown against the second unit.

Speaking of Kinney, he and George Boutselis, who's a notch ahead, both are doing very well.

The former, a chunky lad who excels at chunking, Saturday threw eight times, hit three, and had three dropped. Boutselis went five for eight (47 yards). Kinney led the fifth team to the only score made against the first or second clubs.

"Serenko is not real big (200 lbs.)," says Coach Jim Hickey, "but he really gets the job done. And Shumate reported back 12 pounds heavier, all muscle. He's looking the best he's ever looked."

Sixty yards. That was the longest run made Saturday, and sophomore fourth team left halfback Joe McLamb was its author. One more step and it would have been 20 more yards and a touchdown. McLamb, who sat out last season with a dislocated shoulder, was the leading rusher of the day with 78 yards in 10 carries. He and Milt Saffelle, another newcomer, are jockeying for third position.

Shiftier but not as fast as McLamb are two other halfbacks—Ward Marslender and Dave Henry. Though he was much heralded last year, not as much has been reported about Marslender this season. Reason is he has been switched from quarterback to right half, where he has now worked up from third to second ranking.

Saturday he opened eyes with runs of 23, 11, and 14 yards, along with the reception of a touchdown pass from Ray Farris covering 37 yards. He also caught three others for 29 yards.

Pony-type back Henry, a Morehead scholar from Chapel Hill, ran only twice in the scrimmage, gaining eight and next time fumbling. But the Saturday previous and during succeeding days, the quick cutting speedster made several lengthy runs.

Swimmers Meet Thursday At 7:30

Swimming coach Pat Earey has announced that he will hold an organization meeting Thursday night at 7:30 in 304 Woollen Gym.

He has requested that all persons who wish to be members of the team this season be present.

Playmakers Will Present Five Plays

The first play of the group's 44th season will open at the Playmakers Theatre on October 11th for a five-night run. This season's opener is "The Matchmaker" by Thorton Wilder. The rolicking farce will be directed by Foster Fitz-Simons, associate professor of dramatic art.

"The Beggar's Opera" is the next production scheduled to open November 15 for five nights. This 18th century musical was written by John Gay. Its modern day counterpart is "The Three Penny Opera" which has been running "off-Broadway" for the past seven years—longer than any other "off-Broadway" show. Russell B. Graves, associate professor of dramatic art, will be director of this production, which will be performed at the Playmakers Theatre.

A Civil War setting is featured in a new play by Carl Hinrich entitled "Renegade." This play will open at the Playmakers Theatre beginning on January 10, and will run through January 14. Thomas M. Patterson, associate professor in dramatic art, will direct this production.

Harry Golden's famed book "Only In America" was on Broadway too. The Broadway version was done by Lawrence and Lee. This play will open at the Playmakers Theatre on March 14 to run through the 18th. Harry Davis, chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, is director of this production.

The University's Forest Theatre will be the locale for a Playmaker production of "Doctor Faustus," Christopher Marlowe's famous drama of man and the devil or Mephistophiles. Tommy Rezutto, assistant professor of dramatic art, is director of this production which will run two nights, May 18 and 19.

Milton's Traditional Suit Story

Many years ago we found that the so-called traditional suit was tailored for a pouchy successful executive but left the campus gentleman completely in the cold. If you wanted one bad enough & the store had a superb tailor you could get one butchered to fit. This didn't appeal to our better judgment and we set out to style a suit that would be flattering, comfortable and require the minimum of alterations. To this we have added our own exclusive designed patterns—a good investment that remains in style for the life of the garment. This feat is accomplished from $59.95.

His Gifts To Alma Mater Total $17 Million

MOREHEAD RAISES UNC ENDOWMENT FOR SCHOLARSHIPS BY $7 MILLION

Grant Comprised Of Stock

50,000 Shares Donated

By MARGARET ANN RHYMES

Alumnus John Motley Morehead last night brought his UNC benefactions to a total of $17 million by donating 50,000 shares of Union Carbide Corporation stock to the Morehead Scholarship Foundation.

The stock is valued at approximately $7 million on today's market, which will bring an expected annual return of $180,000.

The announcement was made by his nephews, John Lirsey Morehead of Charlotte, at a banquet held in the Morehead Planetarium, one of the donor's first gifts to the University.

The nephew explained that as the program advanced successfully, its income was supplemented by annual donations from Mr. Morehead.

The returns on the 50,000 shares of stock will replace these yearly benefactions, he said.

His other gifts to his alma mater include the Morehead Sun Dial, Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower, the Copernican Orrery, an apparatus showing the postions and motions of solar system bodies, the Morehead art gallery and $6,000,000 worth of Union Carbide stock to the scholarship fund.

As an engineer in the early 1890's, Morehead discoverd a method to make calcium carbide economically, a development that led to the industrial giant of Union Carbide.

He has been highly honored by the United States and other nations, and held the rank of Minister to Sweden under President Hoover. He was named for his grandfather, twice governor of North Carolina and founder of the North Carolina railroad.

Among those attending last night's banquet was United Nations Mediator and former UNC President Frank Porter Graham, Governor Terry Sanford, Congressman Charles Raper Jonas, President William C. Friday and Chancellor William B. Aycock.

'Uncle Motley' Labors For The University

PHILANTHROPIST JOHN MOTLEY MOREHEAD, who has been a benefactor of the University of North Carolina for many years, wheeled $7.5 million worth of Union Carbide securities into the UNC vault last night. The securities were a gift of Morehead to Carolina. Morehead, head of United Carbide and Carbon Co., now lives in Rye, N. Y. (This photo was taken at the dedication of the Morehead Sun Dial.)

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

By United Press International

W. Ulbricht

Provisional Cease-Fire Called

NDOLA, Northern Rhodesia—President Moise Tshombe of the Katanga announced Wednesday night that he and United Nations negotiators had agreed on a provisional cease-fire to become effective at one minute after midnight.

Tshombe's announcement to a news conference at Ndola airport came after a day of negotiations in which each side gloomily hinted at failure and an outbreak of civil war. Central Congolese government troops had been reported invading the breakaway province.

U. S. And U. S. S. R. In Disagreement

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—The United States and Russia announced Wednesday they were unable to agree on how general disarmament talks could be resumed or who would take part in them.

But they filed with the United Nations an agreed-upon set of aims for any future disarmament program should a way be found to the talks started again.

A full-scale general assembly debate is expected later in the current session, with the United States and Russia leaving it to the United Nations to decide who should take part in future talks and where they might be held.

Esther Spares N. C.

NORFOLK, Va.—Hurricane Esther spared North Carolina and Virginia Wednesday by swinging its vicious 130-mile-an-hour winds to a more easterly course that menaced an area from Long Island to Cape Cod.

New York City was expected to escape the brunt of the big, powerful hurricane, but forecasters warned residents of the nation's largest city to brace for gale force winds.

Slim General Assembly President

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—The United Nations General Assembly Wednesday unanimously elected Mongi Slim of Tunisia as its president and was reported veering toward selection of U Thant of neutral Burma as a caretaker successor to Dag Hammarskjold.

The unaligned powers, chiefly from Asia and Africa, were reported executing strong pressure on the Soviet delegation—and Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev—to accept U Thant as acting secretary general despite Russian demands for a three-man secretariat.

Mobilize to Guard De Gaulle

PARIS—The government Wednesday mobilized helicopters, mine-detector cars and thousands of extra police to guard President Charles de Gaulle against a possible new assassination attempt during a four-day tour of farming areas.

De Gaulle is making the tour of restive farming provinces in south central France less than two weeks after he escaped death in a bomb attack on his car on a highway in eastern France.

Ulbricht Gets New Power

BERLIN—East Germany's puppet parliament Wednesday gave Communist chief Walter Ulbricht sweeping new powers to mobilize industry, private property and the state's man power through East Germany's first draft.

The unanimous parliamentary action was the highlight of a day that saw the hard life of the average East German become even harder.

Students Study Cultures

Field work is a requirement for graduate students preparing for careers in anthropology. This summer a larger number than in any previous year spent time studying various American people.

Richard Nonas and his wife lived with Cree Indians in Attawapiskat, a trading post on the muddy shores of James Bay, Ontario. Evelyn Todd combined school teaching and anthropological research in a bush community of Cree Indians up in far northern Ontario.

The National Institute of Mental Health enabled Norman Whitten to travel to Venezuela for research on culture change. Norman Swezy visited the Sioux Indians in South Dakota to study how their culture has been transformed.

Related Research

Linguistic and related research called Arthur Rubel to Mexico and took him to a variety of local communities.

One graduate student, Frances Ferguson, is currently enroute to India under a grant from the National Institute of Mental Health. There she will study the Hindu doctrine of emotional aloofness as it fits in the context of Indian culture and personality.

Gilbert Kushner and his family left for Israel where he plans to study the assimilation of Oriental Jews into the cosmopolitan culture of the Jewish state.

The material collected by these field workers will in most cases form an integral part of their masters' theses or doctoral dissertations.

Infirmary

UNC College Sets Record In Attendance

"UNC's Evening College has had a record turnout for the evening courses being offered during the current semester," said Evening College Doctor Sim Wilde Jr. today.

"Approximatiye 400 Evening College students are now enrolled for the college's 10 courses," Wilde said, "and registrations are still trickling in."

Wilde said that response to the program's course offering was 100 per cent increase over last year's enrollment, and a record for one semester.

Evening College enrollment is proportionately ahead of regular UNC enrollment thus far, Wilde said that the increase is due primarily to increased numbers of women taking courses, and to the growing reputation of the College.

WUNC-TV Has New Program

WUNC-TV will initiate a new program, Chronicle, featuring a 45 minute series from the Consolidated University. The program will consist of fifteen minutes of news, sports, and features from each of the schools in the University.

The program will be divided into fifteen minute segments with considerable variation. The first segment will feature about five minutes of news, five minutes of sports and five minutes for variation.

The second will be video-taped from State College and will feature sports and selections from the agricultural program, Aspect. The third portion of the program will come occasionally from Woman's College but will be predominately news, sports and personality features of interest to the Consolidated University.

The station is a non-commercial educational service offered by the CU which features many educational programs.

Dean of Journalism

Luxon Chairman 50th Convention

Dr. Norval Neil Luxon of the UNC School of Journalism has been named convention chairman for the golden anniversary convention of the Association for Education in Journalism to be held in Chapel Hill August 26-30, 1962.

The seven other staff members at the UNC school will serve as chairmen of subcommittees for the convention.

R. C. Bose, professor of statistics at UNC, is currently on a year's leave of absence doing research in information theory, experimental design and combinational mathematics.

Attended Punjab

A recognized mathematician, Dr. Bose attended Punjab University, Delhi University and Calcutta University. He has served as visiting professor at Columbia University. He joined the UNC faculty in 1949.

Dr. Bose plans to spend the academic year of 1961-1962 in Europe following a series of lectures at the University of Cairo, United Arab Republic and at the Indian Statistical Institute in Calcutta, India.

John W. Scott Jr. has been appointed an associate professor of law in the UNC Law School.

Dr. Scott, a graduate of Auburn and Harvard Universities will assume duties beginning February 1, 1962. He will teach a seminar in advanced tax problems and will help with the estate planning seminar.

In Public Health

Dr. Law was appointed professor in the School of Public Health.

Dr. Erickson has been made an assistant professor in the department of psychiatry. She is a recent graduate of the University of Washington.

A former teaching fellow at Harvard, Dr. C. E. Morris is an assistant professor in the School of Medicine.

Dr. Penick has returned to the faculty after being absent for about one year.

Rightists Hit NSA

"I denounce the United States National Student Association without any reservation," the executive secretary of the extreme right-wing Circuit Riders, Inc. recently wrote to Bill Straughn, NSA co-ordinator here.

M. G. Lowman, the executive secretary, wrote in answer to a query by Straughn last month.

The reply included circulars for several recent publications of the Circuit Riders. The publications denounced 2100 Methodist Ministers, 1411 Episcopal rectors, 614 Presbyterian clergymen, 680 Baptist clergymen, plus 600 miscellaneous educators, including Albert Einstein, as being Communist or pro-Communists.

Some of the Circuit Riders literature cuts across church lines. Such as the book, "20 of the 95 Men Who Gave Use to the Revised Standard Version of the Bible." The 35 mentioned are reportedly Communists.

Deferred Rush

The offices of student government have recently been the breeding grounds for an idea aimed at solving the problems of deferred rush at Carolina. Several student government leaders, notably Vice-President Hank Patterson, are advocating a program of voluntary deferred rush.

As Patterson outlines the idea, freshmen should be encouraged to voluntarily refrain from pledging fraternities until spring semester.

From this vantage point, the idea sounds fine. Unfortunately, it won't work without the cooperation of the fraternities. And if the fraternities here display their usual lack of foresight, they are sure to veto the idea, and keep right on with their respective crash programs directed at luring as many good men as possible as soon as possible.

Carolina fraternities could hardly have been more adequately warned that deferred rush is going to come; the most recent warning came in the report prepared by the faculty committee studying the freshman year. The report suggests that deferred rush would be a good idea, and set 1963 as a likely date.

No doubt, the fraternities will choose to disregard this warning, going blindly on in a haze of studied impudence until they are slapped in the face with an administrative mandate calling for deferred rush. Then the outraged howls will begin. Each fraternity will scream of impending financial doom, totally ignoring the fact that repeated warnings were issued, giving ample time to allow for transition.

If fraternities began preparing now for what is inevitable by cooperating in a program of voluntary deferred rush, the change could come smoothly and without undue financial strain.

With the aid of student government officials like Patterson, the freshman could be encouraged to wait. But the idea would have to be accepted by every fraternity on campus to eliminate the possibility of having a few fraternities take advantage of the situation by redoubling their efforts in the fall in an attempt to grab off the most outstanding members.

As we said, it's a good idea. We only hope it can be brought to fruition.

Community Colleges

The following editorial, originally titled "Higher Education Study Group Has Big Opportunity, Problem," appeared in the Raleigh Times. It is reprinted here because of the strong interest in a system of community colleges.

Governor Sanford's appointment of a commission to study higher education in North Carolina could well be, in the words the Governor used, "one of the most important acts of my term of office."

This commission, composed of both educators and laymen devoted to the cause of education, is to prepare a blueprint of what our education after high school could be and should be during the next 15 years. It is during those years that our college enrollments will continue to swell each year.

An example of such swelling is seen at our own State College, where there are approximately 7,000 students this year, with approximately 14,000 expected within a decade.

The job faced by the new commission presents both a real problem and a real opportunity. The problem is a simple one: Providing quality education after high school for the thousands of young people who must have such education. The opportunity is equally simple: That of having the chance of providing such education for our own children.

The opportunity must be uppermost in the minds of the commission, for too much thinking only on the problem could lead the commission into a blind alley of worry over the immensity of the problem instead of into the open highway of the immensity of the opportunity.

It is unfortunate, therefore, that on the day the commission was appointed, the State Board of Higher Education decided that it would draw up a "master plan" to use in guiding the growth of North Carolina's network of community colleges.

The guidance of the Board of Higher Education will be important to this commission in its work, and it would be unfortunate if the Higher Board went sailing off majestically alone in a search for blueprints among the community colleges.

This commission must explore the same fields, and there is no point in having two explorations going on simultaneously. The Higher Board should call it off and let the larger commission get on with the larger job.

The commission will undoubtedly look into the community college angles, for the community colleges present one of the brightest parts of the future educational picture in North Carolina. A system of really good community colleges could tie in neatly with the State's present network of institutions of higher education. They could be geared into the whole system, with the university-type institutions, such as State, Carolina, and Duke, at the other end of the system.

Community colleges would be cheaper for all concerned, for the taxpayer and for the student. If they are well located and well operated, they can provide the first years of higher education for many students who now would have to take those first years on the campus of a university-type institution.

Contemporary Art Show Successful

The viewer and appreciator of contemporary art is presented with a dilemma. He is told by some that only the artist can judge and interpret art, but at the same time he knows that one of the essential qualities of any art field is communication.

It is true that art has moved away from the realm of direct and didactic communication and has become centered around expression, which is highly personal and very intricate. This development has placed the artist in a highly enviable position—he seemingly is the only authority and capable critic in his own field. However, when one realizes that not every painting is a masterpieoe nor even a work of art, the discrepancy is obvious.

That some paintings are successful and that some artists are recorded historically, indicates that there is something in the evaluation of art which is outside thte range of the artists' authority. That something is coumunication.

* * *

BY THIS STANDARD the 25th Annual Student Art Exhibition in Ackland Art Museum is one of the most successful in years. Leading the way in the sculpture of this exhibition is Robert Shannon. His group processional constructed of sheet metal and welding rods shows excellent textural variety which enhances and determines the mood of the crusade-like group. The figures' hollow heads give the piece an austerity which is indicative of the subject chosen. The flowing garments and banners unite the group horizonally and complete the development vertically. The vertical shafts and the varying heights of the individuals present intriguing variety with controlled balance.

Tim Murray has two unusual pieces exhibited. "The Goat", previously exhibited at the Presbyterian Art Show, is a metal statue with an unusual surface variation. The form is surging with power from all angles. and the different views all display. the continuity and unity of the piece. The powerful arch in the figure with the textural element present a formidable and angry image.

The other, quite unmistakable, is a paradox. When observed from several angles seems to strive to lift itself off the ground. The scoops at the top and swirlnig base push upwards and cling to the air almost holding itself in suspension. The motion within the piece is free and powerful, and the rods toward the center make the work airy and light. But that thing—a thing resembling two horns blowing into each other—defeats the effect previously established. That "whatever-it-is" beeps away, and the added weight on that side sends the sculpture crashing to the earth.

Whereas Murray was daring enough, and if there was a mistake he takes the credit for it, Bill Minschew seems to have lost some of his earlier courage. He has a frame and screen sculpture which begins well, moves well, encloses and enfolds its space without imposing on it, but never quite gets where it's going. It guides one through its area yet it doesn't complete its journey.

* * *

ALSO OF INTEREST and importance is Robert Poe's "Poet's Prison" that imparted its forbidding and lonely mood to the Presibyterian show. Since it has been reviewed once this year, it will suffice to merely mention its merit.

Poe also has on exhibit one of the most arresting paintings in the show. There are two figures seated at a table with a window behind them. The predominate figure is a woman whose position on the canvas, whose facial appearance, and whose color dominates the picture. She is larger than the male in the picture, and her expression is stern, domineering and somewhat heartless. Her arm is extended beyond the edge of the picture with a gesture which says, "Go!" Behind them there is a vase in which some flowers lean mysteriously and awkwardly in the direction of the woman's point. The man or boy has a strange wry expression on his face which boils with hatred and distaste. There are two extremely disturbing factors in this painting—the light and their fingers. The light seems inconsistent throwing shadows toward the apparent source of light. The three fingers on the hands of the two people startle and disturb one, and the painting seems to emerge as if from a Kafka nightmare world.

James Haymaker also leads one into the startling and uncomfortable world of disturbing images especially with two of his paintings. His painting of a fool is done in glowing iridescent colors which seem transient and unstationary. The brilliant green eyes and glowing tongue give the jester a frightening leer. The light tassels jutting from his cap are striking against the dark brown background. This motley fool forces one to laugh, but the laugh is one of tension and anxiety.

The landscape by Haymaker is constructed with large, bold and brilliant color areas. The combination of the colors forces one to look back at this painting again and again, for a glaring green tree against a brilliant and repelling purple mountain are unusual. The sun behind these two is squeezed between the mountains, and it relentlessly burns and blisters everything around it. The bottom of the picture detracts and is not consistent with the rest of the painting.

* * *

TIM MURRAY has one extremely interesting abstract. The upper right portion of the picture is dark gaining light as it descends and moves toward the left. The entire left side is light and grows more warm and dark as it moves toward the center. The activity and tone of this painting makes it a potential force.

Mike Hall has a carefully executed statement of the ballad, John Henry. The use of guitars and urban equipment further state the ballad. The painting tends to belabor its point.

Pat James exhibits a large fantasy in blue which is quite delightful. The freedom and flow through the space in the painting pushes the air and seems to fly. The structure, tough machine-like, possesses wonderful resiliency.

This exhibition is an excellent show which shows some of the best talents seen by this reviewer. There is a considerable amount of second rate pieces, but on seeing some of the best, these are promising themselves. It is thrilling to see such purposeful and excellent work as exhibited in this show.

Reflections

The quality of newsman turned out by the UNC School of Journalism is generally held to be high. One of the more noted alumni of that school is Charles Kuralt, who is spotlighted on the CBS news slot "Eyewitness to History."

Kuralt's eyes must have failed him Tuesday, however. He flew to Chapel Hill from New York seated near John Motley Morehead. As he stepped from the plane behind the philantropist amid the poping of flashbulbs, Kuralt queried, "What are all these photographers doing here?"

Playmakers Living Off Old Reputation?

(Editor's Note: Neill Clark, author of the following comment on the Carolina Playmakers, studied theatre arts for two years at Boston University. There he studied under Elliot Norton, one of the outstanding drama critics in the country. Clark attended Carolina previously.)

By NEILL CLARK

The Carolina Playmakers is a name well known all over the country, and yet many students on campus know little more than that name.

This time of year it is customary to dig into old files and dust off such old notables as Paul Green, Betty Smith, Andy Griffith and, unfailingly, that much-dusted giant, Tom Wolfe.

After the Playmakers have been praised for conceiving folk drama under Professor George Koch, when the innovation of woodland pageants such as "Unto These Hills" and seaside spectaculars like "The Lost Colony" have been pridefully cited and after one or two struggling actors have been mentioned as doing a few TV stints, one usually raises his eyebrows, clucks his tongue in impressed admiration and forgets about them for the rest of the year.

This is unfortunate—for the Playmakers since 1918 have not only provided a valuable service to the campus and the Chapel Hill community, but have stimulated the growth of drama throughout the state, by turning out teachers, directors of little theatres and a steady stream of young men and women who carry a sincere appreciation and understanding of drama with them into their own communities.

For years it has sponsored a statewide contest for high school and college groups, who by setting up district competition, have strung a network of dramatic activity from Murphy to Manteo.

One of the most valuable services has been their policy of producing a full-length play by a new playwright every year, in addition to three programs of new one-act plays.

This is a record that would be hard to equal by any college in the country and by most little theatre and semi-professional groups.

It is not naive to call this dedication to presenting new work courageous, for most of it is admittedly pretty bad, and usually is not a great money-maker, but with such perseverance perhaps another Paul Green will be discovered.

The Playmakers are frequently said to have gone the way of the old gray mare and some particularly harsh critics will say that they have been living off an ancient reputation and haven't produced any original creative work since Professor Koch died.

Although the actual situation is probably not so drastic there is a definite point to such criticism. The Playmakers perhaps became sidetracked by the very thing that made them famous—folk drama and outdoor theatre.

After the first few years, the outdoor drama had proved that it wasn't going to revolutionize dramatic production and now, although it is still a commercial success in many cases such as "Unto These Hills," few people deceive themselves that this is the mainstream of creative dramatic art.

In fact, it never caught on except in the south under the Carolina sphere of influence with Carolina faculty and students composing the bulk of the major companies.

This year the Playmakers propose an interesting and ambitious program in their schedule of major productions. The first is Thornton Wilder's delightful farce, "The Matchmaker," which was a Broadway success a few seasons back and promises Wilder's usually rose-colored entertainment.

"Only in America" has never been as successful in dramatic form as it was in Harry Golden's best seller, and is a disappointing choice. Choosing to do "The Beggar's Opera" is certainly a step forward and as such is admirable.

This play which is better known by Bertholt Brechts interpolation "The Three Penny Opera," could be cited as the first musical comedy without stretching a point. The last play is the magnificent Marlowe classic, "Doctor Faustus," a powerful, exciting, Elizabethan classic which easily ranks with Shakespeare for sheer beauty ofline.

GARRY BLANCHARD

Easy To Jump In, Hard To Crawl Out

East Carolina College, which has just been blessed with membership in the National Collegiate Athletic Association, plans an expansion in the field of athletics that will parallel the school's growth academically and physically.

That would seem to be a long way of saying that ECC hopes to go in for big-time intercollegiate athletics. And that would seem to make it entirely appropriate to wonder out loud if ECC would be smart to do that.

* * *

EAST CAROLINA has grown by leaps and bounds since World War II. It now has 5,500 students, which puts it right along with Duke in enrollment, and not too far behind Carolina and State.

Its growth has been respectable as well as spectacular, and its graduates have commanded more and more respect in the business and educational world.

It has grown in the hearts of the people of Eastern North Carolina in a way hard to imagine. For a wide area, it is THE educational institution, and has that stature among graduates of other and larger institutions who live in that section.

Its growth has been rapid, but those in charge have seen to it that the growth has been solid, too. That growth, it should be noted, has been accomplished without a really big-time intercollegiate program though it should be noted also that an East Carolina baseball team did win national honors.

* * *

BUT IN THE relatively modest nature of its present intercollegiate sports program, East Carolina has not run into the very hard headaches which have plagued the heads of some other institutions, notably State and Carolina.

Those men have found out the hard way just how hard it can be to keep such a big-time program within even relatively big boundaries. These men have found out that a really big-time athletic program is something like having a real live bear by the tail. There is no practical way to let go.

It is not hard to imagine that ECC officials would get this sort of advice from some leading educators now participating in really big-time athletics: Don't jump into that type program. The jumping in is easy, but the crawling out is hard if not impossible.

* * *

THERE IS ONE other angle to be considered. The news story telling of ECC's athletic ambitions included this sentence: "There are plans for a new stadium, field house and track." The story didn't say where the money would come from, but presumably the taxpayer would be asked to furnish it.

The taxpayer is going to have his hands too full for the foreseeable future providing college classrooms, college dormitories, college laboratories, etc., to be asked to provide a new stadium and a new field house.

Peace Talks Possible

MOSCOW (UPI)—Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev said Wednesday the Soviet government "is convinced there is every possibility of solving the question of a German peace settlement by means of talks," the official news agency Tass reported.

"As has been repeatedly pointed out by Comrade Khrushchev," Brezhnev said, according to Tass, "the Soviet government is convinced there is every possibility of solving the problem of a German peace settlement by means of talks, if only the Western powers are guided by the interests of strengthening peace and take account of the real situation which has come into being in Europe and Germany."

It was not immediately certain whether hey meant to take to the hills and fight against the regime or whether they would try to escape from Cuba.

University Now Considering Danforth Grant Nominations

Dr. F. M. Duffey yesterday announced that the University is now considering who it will nominate this year for Danforth Graduate Fellowships. The nominations close Nov. 1.

No prior graduate study is allowed. The fellowships are opened to male graduates under 30 " . . . with a genuine interest in religion, and potential for effective college teaching . . . "

The stipend is for one year and is renewable on satisfactory performance for three years. The awards depend on individual needs but the limits are currently $1500 for single men and $2000 for married men with $600 for each dependent child.

"It is the only fellowship I know of that practically guarantees three to four years of subsidy," said Dr. Duffey.

To be considered for a Danforth Fellowship a person must be nominated by the University. Dr. Duffey asked, however, that interested persons who believe they meet the requirements contact him in South Building.

University nominations last year were Robert G. Robertson and Robert Lawrence Cannon. Neither were awarded Danforth Fellowships, but Robertson won a Fulbright and Cannon a Woodrow Wilson fellowship.

Career Cues

"Cure for job boredom: I made my favorite pastime my career!"

Richard Bertram, President
Bertram Yacht Co., Division of Nautec Corp.

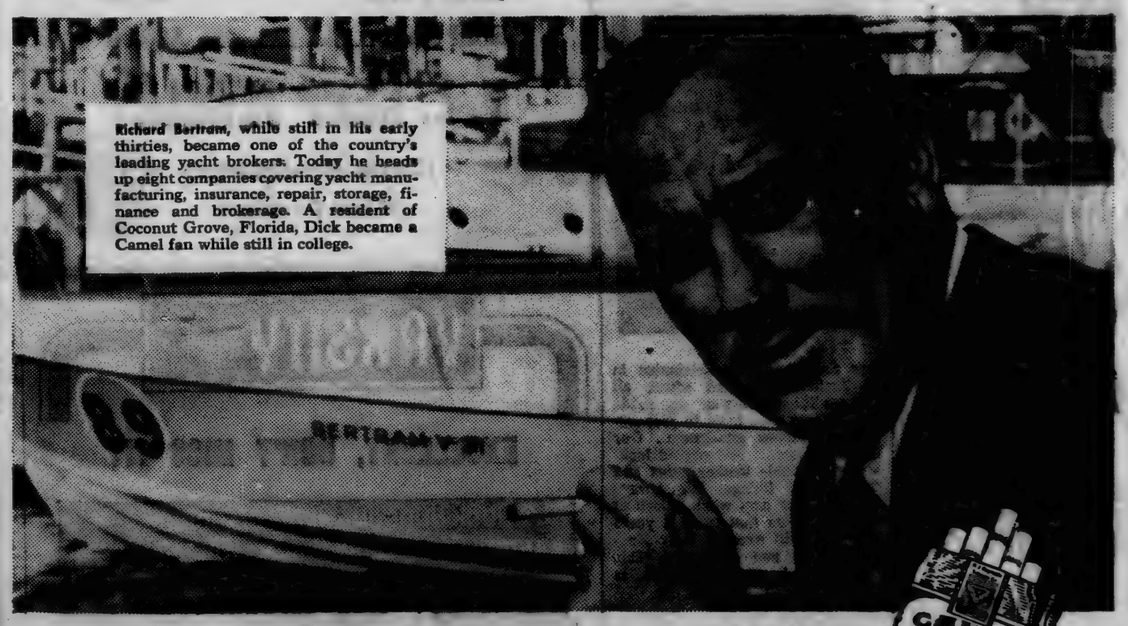
"When you stop to think what percent of our total waking hours is spent bread-winning, you realize how tragic it is for any man to work at an occupation he doesn't enjoy. Besides frittering away life, it reduces chances of success to just about zero. I know . . . because it almost happened to me!

After college, I did what I thought was expected of me and joined a solid, Manhattan-based insurance firm. I soon found office routine wasn't for me. I lived only for lunch hour when I could walk to the Battery and mentally sail with the ships that stood out in the Narrows . . . and for the summer weekends when I could go sailing. Fortunately, the company I worked for is one of the leading insurers of yachts and after two years I was transferred to their Yacht Underwriting Department. Enjoyment and interest in my work improved immediately 100%.

After World War II, I started my own yacht brokerage firm and yacht insurance agency in Miami, combining my marine insurance background with an even closer relationship with boats.

My only problem ever since has been a feeling of guilt that my work was too easy. I love boats and boating people. That affection has paid me rewards way beyond the financial security it has also provided.

The moral's obvious. You have an odds-on chance for success and happiness working at what you enjoy most — what comes naturally! And if it's not just frivolous, your life's work could well be what you now consider just a pastime. It's certainly worth thinking about, anyway!"



Richard Bertram, while still in his early thirties, became one of the country's leading yacht brokers. Today he heads up eight companies covering yacht manufacturing, insurance, repair, storage, finance and brokerage. A resident of Coconut Grove, Florida, Dick became a Camel fan while still in college.

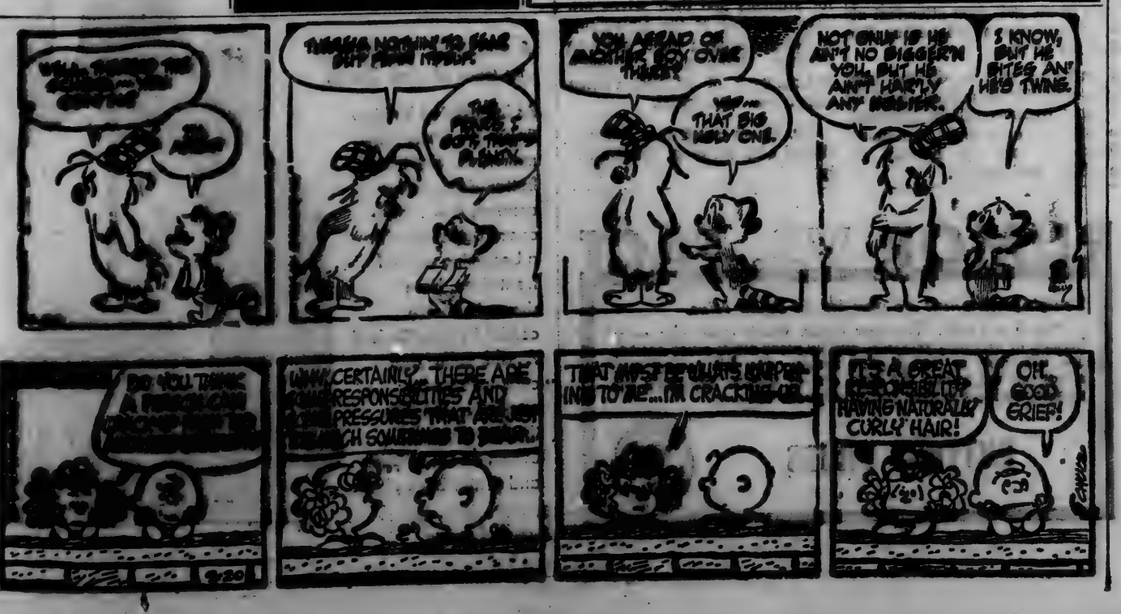
Carolina
NOW PLAYING



HARRY W. LLOYD

THE SPORTS Tabloyd

It was easy to make friends with Frank McGuire. With his warm smile and pleasant word, he had all the tools needed to be a friend.

The former North Carolina basketball coach, who vacated his post in order to take a job with the professional Philadelphia Warriors, had probably as many friends as any one connected with the university. They weren't big people—just students. For McGuire counted the UNC students among his warmest friends.

They stood by him, admired him, and trusted him. They came to his defense when he was in trouble.

McGuire did not fail to return these regards. He had a great deal of affection for the Carolina student body. "I would much rather have Woollen Gym full of students than full of people who pay two dollars a seat," he told us last year. Student cheers were not hollow cheers for him. They were unanimous voices of approval.

When Carolina basketball suffered a setback, UNC students were quick to jump to its defense. Such notable examples of this fact are the "midnight march" made after the de-emphasis ruling last spring, the support given McGuire at the final home basketball game, and the approval he received even after a disastrous ruling by the NCAA.

• • • •

Because school wasn't in session, he wasn't able to make his announcement to the student body. But at alumni meetings all over the state, he explained his decision and told of his regret at leaving UNC.

Before leaving Chapel Hill on Saturday to take the Philadelphia job, the coach left a message for the students. He asked the Daily Tar Heel to tell them of his warm regard for them. He appreciated every bit of support given him as the Carolina coach.

• • • •

While on the subject of basketball, we would like to stamp out the little rumor that this sport is "dead" at Carolina now that McGuire is gone.

There have been some unfortunate events, to be sure. The schedule was cut to 15 games plus post season activity, the out-of-state scholarships were cut, and a tenor of "de-emphasis" was put on the program.

Announcement at the beginning of the semester that two top players counted on for next season would be ineligible hit hard. But despite all these wounds, basketball is still alive and kicking.

Practice won't start before October 15, but basketball still appears to have a bright future in Chapel Hill. New coach Dean Smith and assistant Kenny Rosemond want a winner. There are some top prospects on the freshman team, and still enough varsity performers left to make the '62 team a top contender for conference honors. So don't dig a grave for Carolina basketball. It's not even sleeping.

• • • •

There was a token sprinkling of football played last week to open the collegiate sesaon, but things really got in the swing this Saturday. Most of the major colleges will be going to the post for the first time this week.

With the exception of UNC, every school in the ACC is in action. So here's the way we think they will turn out:

In the only conference game, Duke plays at South Carolina. The Blue Devils won't pull the surprise they did with their passing attack last year, but should still come through quite handily. Duke 27, South Carolina 13.

Wake Forest plays at Baylor Saturday night. The Deacons don't appear quite up to handling the Bears. Baylor 20, Wake Forest 6.

Clemson plays at Florida. Gators are mighty tough. Florida 20, Clemson 15.

N. C. State goes all the way to Wyoming. They" come back happy. State 26, Wyoming 13.

Okay, now you pick 'em.

Seven Regulars Missing From Last Year's Team

Booters Set 2 Practice Games Next Week

BY ED DUPREE

Coach Marvin Allen will get two chances to see his soccer team in action next week before the booters officially open their 1961 season.

The army and navy will furnish the opposition as the Tar Heels jump the gun on the regular season with exhibition matches at Fetzer Field. The soccermen open the set of practice contests against Fort Bragg on September 26 and take on Little Creek Naval Base two days later.

The Tar Heels have an attractive home schedule which includes Maryland, the defending ACC champions, and West Chester. Both teams finished high in last year's NCAA playoffs. The twelve-game schedule also includes a trip to Annapolis, Maryland, to battle the Naval Academy.

Captain Dick Bordogna, Herman Prakke, and Larry Steele are top-notch performers who Coach Allen will be counting on heavily this year. Other returning regulars are Bill Sidbury, John Kenrick, Bill Snyder, Bob Kepner, and Kingman Brown. Tom Griffith, who saw a good deal of action last year, should be a big man for the 1961 Tar Heels.

Allen is missing seven men from last year's squad which compiled an 8-3 record and finished third in the ACC. Joe Perkins, Bob Quackenbush, and Tom Evins have all graduated and Jim Reston, top scorer on the team, is studying for a year at Oxford. Three other men who saw regular duty last season have dropped out of school.

Three sophomores stand out in Allen's plans for the upcoming season. They are Peter Blake, George Beim, and Frank Lankford. If these three men can team up with the eight returning regulars from the 1960 team and fill the gaps left in the offensive attack by Perkins and Reston, the booters could come through with another fine season comparable to last year's.

The season does not officially open until October 3 when Roanoke pays a visit to Chapel Hill. Until then Coach Allen has two weeks and two exhibition matches to prepare his soccermen for what could prove to be their toughest schedule in Allen's fourteen years as Tar Heel soccer coach.

BILL SIDBURY, a top offensive man, is expected to be one of the big guns in the Carolina soccer attack this season. Sidbury, who played inside last year, is a senior from Garner, N. C.

FROSH

Art Lemery, freshman soccer coach, urges freshmen to come out for soccer. Experience in high school is not necessary. Practice sessions are 3-5 each afternoon Monday through Friday. Lemery presently has only 17 men on his frosh squad and additional team members would be welcomed. All interested athletes should report to Lemery at Fetzer Field.

Wolfpack Remembers 26-0 In Readiness For Pokes

RALEIGH, N. C.—With 26-0 and 29-0 scores posted on its dressing room bulletin board, North Carolina State worked to get ready for its 1961 football opener against Wyoming, Saturday at Laramie, Wyo.

These two scores mean a lot to the Wolfpack players. In 1959, Wyoming lambasted State 26-0 in the Wolfpack's homecoming game. Now the ten seniors who played in that game as sophomores want to make amends for that showing.

Backfield Problems May Be Solved Here

By HARRY W. LLOYD
DTH Sports Editor

When fifty thousand pairs of eyes are trained on the gridiron, it's usually safe to say that 49 thousand of them are watching the backfield of the offensive team. The backs do the scoring. They provide excitement. They have to be able to go.

Much of the confidence being placed in the upcoming North Carolina football team is due to the promise of a fine backfield. Eight lettermen—two full teams of veteran performers—return to form the backbone of the scoring corps.

The Tar Heels operate primarily from a split T formation, where the quarterback handles the ball on practically every play. At this position, the outlook is very good. Ray Farris, the Charlotte senior, will be back for his second year of regular duty. Farris, who does most of the punting, is probably the best running qb in the conference. Last year, he led the team in scoring with 6 touchdowns. He tossed three scoring passes. He carried the ball more than any man on the team, 126 times, and gained 396 yards. His total losses of 139 yards, mostly on fade backs for passing, gave him a net of 257 and a 2.0 average.

Another North Carolina boy, Junior Edge of Fayetteville, figures also in the quarterback picture. Edge is a sophomore in eligibility. He stands six feet tall and weighs 205. Although he didn't play any last season, he should see a lot of duty this year with his punting, passing, and place kicking ability.

Third in the order is George Boutselis, a sophomore, who is also quite a passer. Sandy Kinney, a soph who can throw one a mile, will probably be held out.

The top returnee at halfback is Gib Carson, brother of backfield coach Bud Carson. Gib, who carried 78 times for 307 yards in '60, is counted on as the bread and butter man for the Heels. With him in the starting backfield is Lenny Beck, a speedster who will probably be on the receiving end of a lot of passes.

The other two letterman halfbacks are junior Jimmy Addison and junior Ward Marslender. Addison has been outstanding in the past two Saturday scrimmage sessions, by turning in several long runs. Marslender is a breakaway threat, and also a good passer.

A couple of non-lettermen are threatening the above four. One of them is Joe McLamb, a sprinter on the track team last spring, who was out last year with an injury. McLamb is a short fellow, but he can fly with the football under his arm.

Milt Saffelle, a senior who has never played, has shown tremendous improvement. Roger Smith, a swift sophomore, will also see a lot of action.

Farris, Carson, Beck, And Elliott Lead TD Producers

Probably the fastest men on the team are a couple up from last year's freshman team, Tommy (Bullet) Brooks and Dave Henry. Both appear to be definite threats.

Two of the most important men in the backfield are listed as quarterbacks, although they won't see much offensive action. They're too important as defensive specialists. John Flournoy, a junior, and Jud Spainhour play the all important safety position. Both do a very good job at it.

• • •

Nobody else has two fullbacks as good as Carolina's. The case in point—Bob Elliott and Joe Davies. Both are experienced seniors. Both are big and strong. Both can run the football—and block, and tackle, and everything else required. If Elliott is the best in the ACC, then Davies will run him a close second, or vice versa. Coach Jim Hickey won't say. He would like to have both of them on his first team.

Third in line in the plunging post is Buddy Cozart, with three years of eligibility, who will probably play a lot if for nothing but the experience. Cozart is a hard runner in his own right, who can play a hard game at linebacker. Barry Westfall, tops with the frosh last year, is with the "scout" team and will probably be held out.

Outlook: they have the horses. Maybe not all the speed they would like, but there is a lot of experience, power, and know-how. Without too much bad luck, the UNC backfield could score a lot of important touchdowns this year.

Cake Race To Be Run On Sept. 28

The 19th annual intramural cake race and the University golf tournament highlight the opening of UNC's 1961 intramural season.

The cake race, which will be run on September 28, will be divided into two divisions, Open and Novice. The Open division is limited to members of the freshman cross-country team. Everyone except monogram winners in varsity track and cross-country is eligible to compete in the Novice division.

Cakes will be awarded the first three finishers in each division.

The cake race covers a distance of 1.55 miles. Starting time for the annual event is 3 o'clock at Fetzer Field. Individuals can enter the cake race by reporting to Fetzer Field for two practice sessions. An official will be on hand to take entries from 4-5 o'clock each afternoon through September 27.

The University golf tournament is slated for Monday, October 2. Student golfers have until September 27 to post their qualifying scores to the golf shop attendant at Finley golf course and paying the entry fee of 50c.

Players will be divided into flights after the qualifying round is over and trophies will be awarded the winner of each flight. For more information, see Ed Kenney at the Finley golf course.

Tickets

Football and basketball tickets for students and their wives are now available at the University of North Carolina ticket office in Woollen Gymnasium, business manager of athletics Vernon Crook has announced.

Mr. Crook urged that students should pick these up immediately.

Trys For 'New Look'

Petite Dramatique Organizes For 'Bigger And Better' Year

An organizational meeting for Petite Dramatique this evening at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall will kick off what is promisd to be the group's "new look" for the coming year.

"Bigger and better" is the phrase used by Don Curtis, chairman of the Graham Memorial Activities Board drama committee, to describe the six programs tentatively planned, including three full length plays and two experimental programs.

"The success of this year's program hinges largely on the turnout tonight," Curtis said.

"Desire Needed"

"No past experience is necessary," he said, "just desire. All students interested in working in any way—acting, directing, writing, working behind the scenes, are urged to attend."

Curtis emphasized that the program was not limited to drama majors and urged freshmen to attend.

October: "The Rainmaker," a popular Broadway comedy, later made into a movie.

November: An experimental program; theme not be announced. Round," another popular Broadway and Hollywood production.

February Program

February: An experimental program called "The Best of the Best." Excerpts and scenes from "Inherit the Wind," and "Showboat."

March: To be announced.

April: "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof." Tennessee Williams' classic which Curtis calls the highlight for Petite in '61-'62.

Petite Dramatique, a completely student organization sponsored by Graham Memorial lists two main and objectives:

1. To supply the student body with live drama and entertainment,

2. To give students the opportunity to display and practice their various dramatic abilities.

Dean Rusk

Jack to Speak Against Red Veto

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy will go before the United Nations Monday to spearhead the U. S. campaign against Soviet efforts to win Communist veto power over the world organization.

In his first address to the United Nations, the president will firmly reassert U. S. support for appointment of a single successor to Dag Hammarskjold, the U. N. secretary-general killed in an African plane crash.

Congo Under Queasy Cease Fire

ELIZABETHTOWN, The Congo (UPI)—A cease-fire brought an uneasy peace to Katanga Thursday. A new threat to stability was posed by 30,000 hungry Baluba tribal refugees outside this city.

The tribesmen broke out of an encampment to prowl white neighborhoods for food. They attacked two whites Wednesday and beat one to death and attacked three newsmen near the camp, shattering car windows and slashing at the tires with their spears.

DeGaulle Suggest Red Talks

RODEZ, France (UPI)—President Charles de Gaulle called Thursday for talks with the Soviets on Germany and other cold war issues. But he said they must not be held under duress and warned that concessions to the communists could cost a man his soul.

He delivered a series of speeches on the opening day of a four-day meet-the-people tour of South Central France. Thousands of xtra police guarded him against the possible threat of another assassination attempt.

UN Group Overrides Soviets

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—The General Assembly steering Committee voted Thursday over Soviet opposition for immediate United Nations discussion of a ban on ending nuclear tests after hearing a U. S. charge that Russia might poison the atmosphere for years to come.

Hannah stressed that the Workshop is open to all students and that membership requires nothing more than interest and participation. Meetings are held in the play maker theatre every two weeks.

After every production, either by the workshop or by the Playmakers, a "post mortem" is held in which the merits and demerits of the play are discussed.

To arrange a production one must contact a member of the executive committee and present his plans for approval. The director is completely free to handle the production as he desires subject only to certain physical limitations.

The next meeting will be held at 4 p.m. in the playmaker theatre on Wednesday, Oct. 4.

It was set up last spring by Student Government President Bill Harriss after a year of organizational planning. It plans to arrange three or four more such shows this year.

Tickets for this program will go on sale Monday at Kemp's, Lenoir Hall, and Y court.

Friday Praises Grant As Top Contribution

By JIM CLOTFELTER

President William C. Friday of the Consolidatd University yesterday called benefactor John Motley Morehead's recent $7 million grant "certainly one of the major gifts to the University in its long history."

"Mr. Morehead's grant," continued President Friday, "will provide magnificent resources for the development of Morehead scholars at the University."

Morehead's nephew, John Linsey Morehead, announced the donation at a banquet Wednesday night. The grant is in the form of 50,000 shares of Union Carbide Corporation stock. The stock will bring an expected annual dividend return of $180,000

The grant brings the total of alumnus Morehead's UNC benefactions to $17 million.

Now 144 Scholars

Presently the Morehead Scholarship Foundation has 144 Scholars on campus. In-state students who receive a Morehead Scholarship are awarded $5,100 for four years. Out-of-state students are given approximately $7,100.

"I am confident," said President Friday, that in the future the expanded scholarship program "will provide the state with the level of leadership that is badly needed."

All funds from the new grant probably will go toward providing new scholarships, said Robert A. Fetzer, resident secretary of the Foundation. The Foundation trustees are responsible for the use of all funds.

President Says

Speaking in a more general nature, Student Body President Harriss said:

"The contributions of Mr. Morehead in the past have definitely aided in the improvement of our University and of the caliber of our standards.

"Besides the many gifts to the physical improvement of the campus, such as the Morehead Building —including the planetarium, the art gallery, and the Copernican Orrery —, the Sun Dial, the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower, the contributions of scholars which have been brought to the campus due to Mr. Morehead's scholarships have had a lasting effect on the University, the students, and alumni around the state."

Bond Issue Noted At First SP Meet

President Bill Harriss emphasized the importance of the coming bond issue in the November election before the first meeting of the Student Party Tuesday night.

"We have worked 9 years and have gotten this far. Now the students should begin writing their congressman. This issue is crucial the students—it affects the entire Consolidated University."

In reference to the NSA proposal to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee Harriss said: "We voted the way we thought we should. Here at the University we believe in academic freedom—no ideas are blocked. We cannot support any attrocities which restrict freedom."

Harriss also mentioned the movie "Harvest of Shame" produced by Edward R. Murrow, about migration workers. We should all be aware of such educational conditions especially within this state."

SP Chairman, Bill Weeks announced the coming activities and plans of the SP. He said, "This year we intend to initiate a new program in the SP. We are going to have dormitory representatives of the SP reporting to the Party. This will form a tighter bond between the SP and the students."

Weeks also announced there will be three vacancies in the Student Legislature for the SP: Dorm Mens II, Dorm Mens V, and Town Mens IV.

Columbus Day Set

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — The American Veterans Committee AVC Thursday condemned the Soviet Union for resuming nuclear testing which is spreading fallout in the atmosphere.

The executive committee of the AVC said: "At a time when the world is beset with new tensions largely due to the unilateral actions o fthe Soviet Union, this test resumption is continued unhappy evidence of the aggressive nature of the Soviet Union."

Aid Rocket Search

LONDON (UPI)—Britain's Jodrell Bank radio telescope will help the government in the detecttion of enemy rockets, the Daily Express reported Thursday. It said Jodrell Bank could detect rockets 2,000 miles away.

Rathskeller Served As Clothing Store

By LINDA CRAVOTTA

Years ago the Rathskeller, Danziger's tavern restaurant was a soda bar, a baby apparel shop, and a dirty, damp storage area. Today it is one of the most popular and historic sites in Chapel Hill.

"Originally the Rathskeller was designed for professors to come to have a quiet place to relax, talk and drink a beer," said B. C., the amiable manager of the Rathskeller. Formerly a Tavern, the Rat was soon adopted by college students, as their special meeting place.

Sponsored by Dr. D. D. Carroll, former dean of the School of Business Administration, he came to Chapel Hill with his family and opened a candy store-restaurant where his gift shop is now located.

The Rat was in Mr. Danziger's words, "an empty, dirty terrible place" when he first saw it. It was so uninviting that the whole area of the present Rat was turned over to him with the statement that no one wanted it. Danziger used the area for making candy for his shop upstairs.

In 1949, Mr. Danziger's son, Ted, dug out the floor of the Rat and started preparing it for business. Dirt was hauled away in the trunk of his car and the present flag stone floor was laid. Ted Danziger is the overall supervisor of the Rat, the Ranch House, the Zoom Zoom—and also a proposed a new restaurant-tavern combining the features of all of them to be located on the Durham Boulevard.

The familiar face of B.C. (Benjamin Carroll) is seen in the Rat around eighty hours a week. "I don't think of this as work," said the jovial manager, who obviously has a great fondness for people.

When asked to compare the original Rathskeller with the Rat of today, B.C. admitted that the veterans who attended college after WW II consumed more beer in a couple of hours in the Rat's one original room, than students now consume in an entire day in five rooms of the expanded Rat.

The extra rooms were added over the years. The French room was designed for couples because there was not room for tables for four. The large back room, The Hole in the Wall, was originally designed to include dancing. The idea was discarded because it involved a cabaret tax. The Chicken Coop

Vandalism In Dorms

Very roughly rounded off, the figure represents the present enrollment at Carolina and accompanying everyone of these 9,400 students is a corresponding complex of individual and collective headaches. Many of the problems are purely physical: cramped dormitory space, inadequate library facilities, study areas, classroom space, etc.

These physical problems are receiving the bulk of comment, since, superficially, they are the most pressing. Fortunately, however, they appear to be transient ones. The projected plans for new dormitory, library, classroom and recreational facilities are heartening. Carolina can catch up and keep abreast of exploding enrollments.

Particularly encouraging in this respect is the confidence expressed by Gov. Terry Sanford in regard to the passage of the proposed capital improvements provisions in the upcoming bond election.

Sanford told the DTH Wednesday that he was confident that the items including the University would be supported and passed.

* * *

Other problems associated with growing enrollment cannot be so easily solved. They are intangible and unsuitde to legislation.

High on the list of these problems are those of discipline. Last year dormitory damage alone amounted to a frightening $9,000—most f this was simple viscious distruction.

Windows were deliberately broken, handrails on wooden staircases split and broken, phones ripped from walls, telephone booths and bulletin boards burned, vending machines beaten and smashed, doors kicked down and burned, furniture slashed and broken.

One of the most frightening aspects of this wholesale vandalism is the perverse genius displayed by its perpetrators. In Cobb, for instance, wooden phone booths and bulletin boards were burned in the absence of other inflammable material.

Vending machine doors were blown from their hinges with firecrackers as neatly as if the job had been done by Jimmy Valentine.

* * *

Still, amidst this fury of distruction, students have the most pious of attitudes regarding the functions of the IDC court and the Honor Council, who must deal with the small number of offenders who are caught.

Yet the consummate outrage is that perpetrated by the dorm residents themselves who allow this situation to exist.

With the high number of three and four man rooms which have resulted from the increased enrollments, the problem threatens to become completely unmanageable.

Stiffer penalties by the IDE court and the Honor Council will help, but the bulk of the restraining force must come from the students. Any student who conveniently looks the other way while property is being maliciously destroyed is not only betraying the University, but in a greater sense, betraying himself.

Thanks For Mae West

Cinema is perhaps the only truly existential art. Only on film can a smile be preserved, only on film can tears be ever fresh, only on film can a look, a posture, a tone of voice and all thetrivialities of a moment which together are the realest realities of existence itself be wrenched from time and kept alive.

The Chapel Hill Film Society has scheduled some of the greatest of

The Chapel Hill Film Society has scheduled some of the greatest of these moments for presentation this year. Garbo, Barrymore, Chaplin, Chaney are lost to time but not to art. They are among the many to be shown in Carroll Hall every Monda yevening at eight o'clock.

This is the second season of the Film Society which began last year to provide films of unusual quality and significance to Chapel Hill and the surrounding area.

Many students have the misconception that any kind of society organized under slogans like "unusual quality" or "deep significance" is extremely esoteric, extremely serious, and extremely dull.

In fact the anti-art prejudice of our whole society is pretty much a moss-covered cliche. Equally hackneyed is the generalization that those who either don't like or don't care, don't know.

Many who will take tea and see will not take art. However much that is serious is entertaining and much that is artistic is infinitely rewarding, even to john doe who doesn't much care. For instance the Marx Brothers are fine artists, they are also funny. Mae West is an excellent comedienne. She is also about the sexiest thing since Sex.

The Film Society deserves commendation and support for bringing to the Chapel Hill campus fine entertainment, great art, stimulating ideas, and Mae West.

9 In Atlanta, 18 In Dallas

It happened several weeks ago and there were only nine in Atlanta and eighteen in Dallas, but the wonder was that there were any at all.

These 27 Negro children brought the South into the Afternoon of the Agony, which is its glory, having now passed through the morning of bitterness and violent reaction. This part of the Day was dreaded by many white Southerners, and met with some degree of apprehension by all the South. For the public schools of these two "million-plus" metropolitan cities admitted pupils on a desegregated basis this fall for the first time in their respective histories.

* * *

NOWHERE WERE there the screaming mothers of New Orleans or the openly antagonistic state governments of Louisiana or Arkansas.

Atlanta and Dallas should serve as examples of what the South can do toward solving its own racial problems, although they should not be assumed to be examples of what the South will do in all cases.

The positive side is definitely heaviest in this case, however—a welcome situation after Little Rock, New Orleans, Clinton, Price Edward County, and Athens, Ga. Little Rock and New Orleans followed the examples of Atlanta and Dallas this fall by further integrating their public schools, without the violence which characterized earlier desegregation.

THE PEACE IN ATLANTA and Dallas was not just an accident, a lucky freak occurrence, but instead the result of months of public education and physical preparation. In Dallas a Citizens Council (not a White, Mississippi version) composed of both Negroes and whites guided the desegregation implementation.

In Atlanta the story began over 20 years ago when William Hartsfield, a man of considerable wisdom and understanding and a tough political in-fighter, was elected mayor; and about the same time, when Pulitizer Prize-winning editor and nationally syndicated columnist, Ralph McGill, was named editor of the ATLANTA CONSTITUTION.

These two men have worked patiently through the difficult pre-Dawn hours of the South's Day, when desegregation was still something people just read about, and not very often even read about . . . through the Morning of the Day, when the South was led by insincere politicians into a hopeless battle with the federal government . . . and now into the Afternoon, when compliance with the Law is accepted, sometimes as a necessary evil, sometimes as good in itself, but nevertheless accepted.

McGill's humane, sensible editorials and Hartsfield's consistent willingness to arbitrate differences between the white and Negro community set the stage for the successful school integration.

* * *

Civic groups in Atlanta—notably local Parent-Teacher Associations, a group called HOPE (help our public education) and other groups of the same nature—put on a concerted drive in past months to prepare Atlanta for its public trial.

This shoving of the hard facts into the faces of the people was necessary and even imperative, considering the state's political background. Georgia Governor Vandiver was elected on a "I'll close the schools before I'll let them be integrated" platform. No state official ever said there was any other alternative to massive resistance; only Hartsfield spoke out for open schools.

Then came the University of Georgia incident and the ensuing international embarassment for the state. Talk of closing the schools toned down. Then slowly, one by one, state officials began saying that maybe, just maybe, a little integration in the schools might be better than no schools at all—a statement which once would have been answered by the hanging rope.

THE POLICE UNDER the leadership of a very energetic chief, often credited with stopping race riots before they began in the past, was ready for the school integration. No one was allowed to gather around or on the grounds of the four previously all-white schools to be integrated.

No one, except the children and school personnel, was allowed inside the school buildings for the first week of school. There was no white boycott; in fact, enrollment was higher than expected because of the re-admission of children who had been going to private schools in fear of the schools being closed.

No mobs congregated. Five youths were arrested at one school for refusing to leave the premises when ordered—one, an Atlanta youth, later spoke at a Ku Klu Klan rally. Another from Virginia was a member of the American Nazi Party. Now, after three weeks of school there have been no futher incidents.

Atlanta is justly proud of itself. Letter to the editor columns have been filled with notes from former Atlantans and miscellaneous observers from around the country. Atlantans have exulted in self-praise.

President Kennedy praised the city and its officials for their "courage, tolerance and, above all, respect for the law."

* * *

BUT PROBABLY MORE important than this was a new feeling, not strong yet, but existing among Atlantans, (and probably Dallas citizens as well). A police sergeant expressed this feeling:

"I have had maybe the usual southern attitude about Negroes. (and) I guess I wish even now that things were the same (as before.) But what puzzled me was that on the morning the desegregation was to take place I was dead determined that the thing would go off without any hoodlums or fanatics, . . . doing anything to harm the children who were coming to school. And I found myself admiring, somewhat to my astonishment, the Negro kids.

"Anyhow there wasn't any trouble. I saw the young Negro kids come in, well dressed and polite as the others. And I decided this couldn't be so wrong. So, pretty soon school was out and everyone seemed glad that at last the long anticipated day had come and gone and was, really, just like any other day."

ALLEN MATLINS

Before You Join, Remember, Wait...

In just a few short weeks every freshman will have to decide whether to join a fraternity.

The new college student will be invited to partake in a series of warm and friendly get togethers during which he will observe and be observed.

The fraternity will offer him a strong security to take the place of the home he left behind.

A corporate mother will take the place of the woman he left behind.

A community mind will take the place of the adolescent mind he left behind.

After he has become a pledge, he will quickly become familiar with a set of arguments to be used in defense of the fraternity system.

* * *

1. Fraternities provide brotherhood and a sound basis for life long friendships.

This argument implies that there is little brotherhood to be found outside of the fraternity houses. Pins are not prerequisities to life long friendships. It would be safe to state that non-fraternity members have a greater opportunity to meet a more diverse cross section of our campus population.

2. Fraternities provide business and social connections which are valuable in later life.

Such connections can also be made outside of the fraternity system. Adult relationships are usually based on a degree of mutual amiability and or profit.

3. Fraternities provide the student with organized parties and with a place to take dates.

The student who is overly concerned with a place to take dates will find that the problem can be successfully solved without fraternities.

4. Fraternities have excellent quiz files which will help you complete your "education". Your brothers will help you with your work.

A non-fraternity student will have no trouble finding a teacher or fellow student who will help him with his work. Quiz files are available to non-fraternity members if such means are considered necessary.

Remember Before You Join:

Many of you will be unacceptable because of the way you dress;

Many of you will be unacceptable because of the way you shake hands;

Many of you will be unacceptable because of your parents low income;

Many of you will be unacceptable because of the way you spell your name and part your hair.

Many of you will be unacceptable because of your religion;

Many of you will be unacceptable because of your nationality;

Many of you will be unacceptable because of your race;

Many of you will be unacceptable because of your voice;

Many of you will be unacceptable because you are too independent;

Many of you will be unacceptable because you are not independent enough.

Think it over. Wait a semester before you join. You have nothing to lose and everything to gain.

GARRY BLANCHARD

The Issue, Last Man, Purge

A potential Peace Corpsman, a well-known TV personality, a general and a Southern Senator are just four of the many persons who have been bouncing in and out of the news like yo-yos for some time now. The case of each raises several interesting points, some of them humorous, most of them important.

The first personality is a Miami youth who initially broke into print months ago, chiefly on the merits of his bad taste: He jeered at a Miami Rotary Club meeting at which the highly controversial film Operation Abolition was being shown.

His second major foray into the world of news came when his draft board refused to defer him so he could join the Peace Corps. The board, in effect, ruled that the youth was in no position to teach the nebulous subject of Americanism, because he obviously didn't know it very well himself. This may or may not be true.

* * *

What aroused the ire of the youth's countrymen, however, is that no one in authority asked, or even intimated they would like to have, the draft board rule on the young man's Peace Corps qualifications.

By doing so, the board members incurred much ridicule. They ended up not only rightly accused of exceeding their authority, but also of presenting compulsory military service as a club with which those persons of draft age who are deemed in need of some straightening out can be rapped on the head and body.

* * *

Not only were the board members way off base in doing this, but they probably should be thrown out at home. Men who regard service in the military as a form of punishment have no business passing on the eligibilty of others. In effect, they are deciding who to punish.

Besides, as any veteran of active military duty can testify, the services are much too busy trying to get, train and keep good men to worry about assuming the burden of indoctrinating them in the precepts and practices of "Americanism." That is a job which should be done BEFORE allowing a man to don a uniform, not after.

The Darling Of Insomniacs . . .

Paar's latest fracas across the nation's front pages arose as a result of his quest for realism while telefilming activities in that citadel of allied prestige known as West Berlin.

They did, with oomph.

In one-two, button-my-shoe order, several members of Congress recoiled in horror, Paar assumed his familiar look of painful incredulity, and two of the officers involved in staging the affair were militarily black-balled.

As one Paar fan quipped, thus are congressmen unseated, officers relegated to supervising KP activities, and TV rating records established.

To Purge The Pentagon

Next on the four-man list is Major General Edwin A. Walker, who was removed from his command in Europe several months ago for allegedly using his position to influence the votes of soldiers under his command in the 1960 congressional elections.

The hue and cry that followed his removal charged that he was being made the victim of Communist-inspired attempts to "muzzle" campaigns against Communism.

The Last Man . . .

Leading the pack of Walker-supporters has been the last man on our list, South Carolina's Sen. Strom Thurmond, who calls himself a Democrat.

Thurmond has used the Walker episode to urge a full-scale investigation into the alleged "muzzling" of anti-Communist military personnel by the Defense Department, contending that Walker is just one of many such "muzzling" victims.

The Army, meanwhile, after an extensive investigation of the whole affair, has revealed that Walker was far from justified; that he violated not one but several rules.

* * *

In the face of these findings, the Senator from the lower Carolina has continued to hold that Walker was correct in attempting to influence his men's votes because he was anti-Communist. As one paper put it, that's the same thing as saying it's okay to rob a bank so long as the purpose is to get funds with which to fight Communism.

This is precisely the kind of logic which demonstrates how dangerous extremist organizations such as the KKK and the John Birch Society are.

The Issue . . .

Althought Sen. Thurmond and others have done their best to muddy up the issue where Gen. Walker is concerned, what it comes down to is this: It is against the law for military men to actively engage in politics—just as it is for almost everyone in the employ of the federal government.

The reason for that law should be obvious. It prevents those in power from using that power to ram their convictions and theories down someone else's throat.

Sen. Thurmond ought to know this. If he doesn't, he ought not be a Senator.

Gen. Walker, incidentally, has been commended by the Defense Department for being such a sincere, patriotic, deeply-religious and dedicated anti-Communist. He was admonished only for his poor judgment —the same quality Sen. Thurmond has been so ably demonstrating lately.

Discipline, Social Activities Stressed By IDC This Year

Addressing the Wednesday night meeting of the Interdormitory Council, IDC President Jim Gaulden said that discipline in the overcrowded dorms is the most important problem facing the organization this year. "If the IDC doesn't function properly said Gaulden, "the men's dorms may lose their student government. We're on trial this year and we'll either make or break the system."

Last year, according to Gaulden, too many disciplinary actions were handled by dorm advisors due to inefficiency of IDC members. This year, it's got to be up to the dorm officers and members of the IDC. "It's their job, not that of the advisors," said Gaulden. "Also," he added, "if they won't do their jobs, they'll be replaced by someone who will."

Monthly Meeting

To aid the dorm officers in exercising discipline, the policy has been set up that all the officers, the dorm manager and the head resident advisor should meet together at least once a month to discuss problems in the individual dormitory. This way, said Gaulden, there can be a working agreement between the advisors, officers and managers.

The social activities slated for this year, according to Gaulden and Vice President John Mitchener, should make dorm residents realize that the IDC is not entirely a disciplinary organ.

The schedule begins with a pre-State game affair on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial on Sept. 29. Jim Capps, popular Raleigh radio personality, will bring an all-live entertainment show to the Carolina campus. The Joe Tanner Combo will furnish the music and Ralph Harrington, former lead singer with the Blue Notes, will also be on hand. Capps will tape record the show for later broadcast.

Legion Hot Dances

Later in the year, several dances are to be held also in conjunction with some of the basketball games.

At the council meeting also 14 dorms requested inspection of their social rooms by the Co-Ed Visiting Committee. This committee, consisting of several university officials, must inspect each social room and rule on its being opened to women visitors. If the room passes inspection, women visitors will be allowed in the dorm on Fridays, 7-12 p.m.; Saturdays, 2-12 p.m. (except on football weekends when it's 4:30-12 p.m.); and Sundays, 2-11 p.m.

The council also voted unanimously to place official notices in the dorms concerning quiet hours.

Vets Censure U. S. S. R.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The American Veterans Committee AVC Thursday condemned the Soviet Union for resuming nuclear testing which is spreading fallout in the atmosphere.

The executive committee of the AVC said: "At a time when the world is beset with new tensions largely due to the unilateral actions of the Soviet Union, this test resumption is continued unhappy evidence of the agressive nature of the Soviet Union."

POGO PEANUTS

HARRY W. LLOYD

THE SPORTS Tablloyd

It looks as if Roger Maris will have to wait another year if he is going to enter the Baseball Hall of Fame by the front door. But before this season is over, the New York Yankee slugger will probably have found his way into the sacred chamber through another entrance, despite all the gate watching of Commissioner Ford Frick.

But the odds are that he will hit some more before the current 162-game American League season is over. The pressure is off, if it can ever be off such a widely renowned player as Maris, now that the Yankees have sewed up the American League pennant. However, as Frick declared as soon as it became apparent that Maris and Mickey Mantle were making like 60 at the mark, any record set after the 154 games were played would go into the books not as official marks, but with asterisks beside them, indicating thusly.

The commissioner's logic was strange in many ways. He did not, for example, say that any other record broken over the 162-game season would be unofficial. Mantle himself, for example, still has an opportunity to break Ruth's all time season walk mark of 138. He did not say what the record should be if Maris might break 60 before the 154-game mark, and then Mantle exceeded his total after the 154 games were up.

Frick, instead of attempting to make the records clear, merely expressed a sentimentality for the Ruth record, which many other members of the older generation have declared they didn't want to see broken.

In our opinion, the Frick decision was just backward from what it should have been. The 162-game season is now official, just as the 154-game season once was. The National League will begin playing 162 per year in 1962 when two new teams join the league. Because it is official, Frick should recognize it as such. If he deems sacred all the records set before 1961, then they are the ones that should be set into the record books with an asterisk beside them.

Tickets to the last eight games will cost just as much at the box office. Times at bat will count just as much when the batting averages are computed. Errors made during this period will pull a fielding average down the same as those made on opening day.

The Commissioner must remember that he isn't still living in the day of the legalized spitball and the handlebar moustache. Baseball fans will always remember him for what a home run hitter he was, and not just because another man's name in a record book happens to have a little star beside it.

* * * *

Once there was a halfback who couldn't stay on the team because his grades were too high. Poor kid. His quality point average was higher than his rushing average.

Students Will Be Admitted To Scrimmage

North Carolina's Tar Heels do not open their season until Sept. 30 when a possible sell-out crowd will watch them here against old opening game rival North Carolina State.

That's the opener, but Coach Jim Hickey has devised a psuedo-opener for his team next Saturday (Sept. 23) to fit the Tar Heels into a red hot contest on their normal opening date.

It's just another scrimmage, of course, a squad game. But it will be a sort of unveiling of the 1961 team when it should get the feel of competition before facing its first opponent.

This one will be open to students with their I.D. cards, faculty members, Education Foundation members and other special guests. It is not open to the general public.

Tentative plans call for scrimmage of the varsity against both the reserves and the freshmen. It will be pretty much like a regular game.

"We want our players to feel like they are opening the season in this game," says Coach Hickey. "When they meet State we want them to have the feeling of having already played one game."

Regular season opening games have been a jinx to the Tar Heels the past six years. They have lost them all—four to State, one to Clemson and one to Oklahoma. "We definitely are going to win our opener this year," says Hickey, referring to Saturday's season's overture. "Then we hope to swing into high gear and win our second game." By that he meant the game against All-American Roman Gabriel and N. C. State.

Baseballers Start Practice

By ED DUPREE

UNC's baseball team began fall practice yesterday minus a host of starters from last spring's team which compiled a 10-4 conference mark and finished second to Duke in the ACC.

Coach Walter Rabb's only returning starters are first-baseman Len Dellolio, second-sacker P. W. Swing, shortstop Larry Neal, and outfielder Heyward Hull. Dellolio and Swing were second team All-Conference selections and should be the big men at the plate for the 1962 team.

The graduation of Ferg Norton, Carroll Bolick, Tom Camp, Johnny Stott, and Bob Deaton plus the loss of Nick Warren and Jim Mooring will make this a second straight rebuilding season for Rabb. Nevertheless, a number of sophomores and transfer students gives the Tar Heel coach good reason to be optimistic for a big season in 1962.

Legislature Okays Polaroid Camera For Daily Tar Heel

Four other bills like the camera measure carried from last spring, were put aside without a vote. They are as follows:

1. A bill to recognize Parlance magazine as an official publication of UNC and to provide $1,800 for four of its issues was sent back to Finance Committee for further study.

2 A resolution advocating the withdrawal of the Yackety Yack from the Student Government budget for 1961-62 was withdrawn pending rewording.

3. A bill to appropriate $145 to buy the Student Government office a typewriter was tabled....

Amendment Approval

4. A bill which would offer for student body approval a constitutional amendment providing for the election of the head cheerleader by the other cheerleaders rather than in popular campus election was postponed until next week's session.

Six new bills were placed before the body which committees will begin hearings on this week. Judicial Committee will meet Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

One of the proposed measures is a request for $225 to buy records for Carrier C urrent, the campus radio hookup. The bill notes that membership in the RCA Victor Classical Club and the Columbia Popular Record Club would entitle the station to a minimum of 300 long play recordings in the coming year.

Seven Submitted

Names of seven students were submitted to the body for consideration to appointments to SG committees. Legislators will vote on the candidates next week. They are Walter Dellinger, chairman of the Last Lecture Committee; Henrietta Brown, Pat Ellis and Benny Carlan to the Woman's Attorney General's staff; Dave Bland to the Academic Affanrs Committee; Brownee Lee to the Campus Affairs Board; Clyde Benton to the Attorney General's Staff.

Bill Straughn, chairman of the National Students' Assn. at UNC delivered a report on past activities and plans for NSA, in accordance with the policy of having groups which use student appropriations make regular reports to the Legislature.

New Research Against Cancer To Begin Here

Dr. Margaret C. Swanton, associate professor in the department of pathology, has announcd a new program in cancer research, utilizing exfeliative cytology.

The Exfoliative Cytology Training Program, to be conducted under the auspices of the School of Medicine and the U.S. Public Health Service, has a grant from the U.S. Government.

Exfoliative cytology is a new method for the detection of cancer in women. Its advantage is that it allows early detection, diagnosis, and treatment.

Dr. Swanton announced that young women will be hired to work in the program. They must have completed at least 2 years of college, with 12 semester (18 quarter) hours in biological sciences. She added that all successful applicants for this program will receive a one-year training program in exfoliative cytology, while receiving a stipend of $200 to $225 a month.

Dr. Swanton is receiving applications now. She noted that this is an excellent opportunity for student wives and UNC graduates.

Kage Nails AF Cadets

Lt. Col. Gordon D. Kage, professor of Air Science, greeted AFROTC cadets in Carroll Hall Thursday.

The cadets assembled for their first leadership laboratory of the year, were challenged to uphold the caliber of the Air Force by being good officers themselves.

"Everything that is worth working for is not easy," the colonel said. "Look around you, one of six of you will receive a commission in the Air Force."

In stating the purpose of the AFROTC, he told cadets that the purpose of the unit is to develop leadership quality.

Language Building 55 Pct. Done

Time is running out for sidewalk engineers.

The William M. Dey foreign languages building, located near the Louis R. Wilson Library is 55% complete and progress is good, according to the University engineer's office.

Expected completion date is currently set at May 8, 1962. Plans are to open the building for the first session of summer school 1962 as reported in the capital improvements report.

The $750,000 building, a part of the 1961-1962 capital improvements will alleviate the cramped and crowded conditions in the existing facilities. There will also be more room for graduate courses.

Four Floors High

Standing four floors high, the building will be totally air-conditioned. It will contain 32 classrooms, 50 offices and 8 language laboratories. These 166 rooms will have a total square footage of 53,600, according to a spokesman for the University engineer's department.

The language laboratories will feature a recording room and a control room.

Congolese Attack Town

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo (UPI) — Hunger-crazed Balubu tribesmen shouting and screaming for food poured into Elisabethville Friday and attacked a grocery. They were beaten off by Katangese police armed with batons.

The Central Congolese government issued a commique in Leopoldville Friday saying it had informed Sture Linner, United Nations civilian chief in the Congo, it was duty bound to end by "its own means" the secession of Katanga Province. There were reports some government leaders were demanding an invasion of Katanga.

Reports reached this frightened city that tribesmen had killed two whites, slashed two others with their panga bush knives and kidnapped a white girl. White civilians were fleeing outside the city.

Moves To Adjourn

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Congress pushed ahead with its adjournment plans Friday after its leaders assured President Kennedy they could reconvene within 24 hours in case the international situation worsens.

The House and Senate hoped to quit for the year Saturday night provided they could get together on a foreign aid spending bill and resolve several less troublesome matters. The House originally voted $3,657,000,000 for foreign aid and the Senate $3,196,000,000.

A House-Senate conference committee was charged with compromising the differences but its members had trouble calling a meeting. They scheduled a bargaining session but it was cancelled at the request of House conferees who said they thought Senate members should be given a chance to clean up some other business first.

Union Leaders Meet

DETROIT (UPI)—Local union leaders met in daylong sessions here Friday in a new United Auto workers' effort to clean up local strikes against General Motors but some indicated they would not easily be pacified.

"They're trying to take away now things they gave us years ago; they're not going to do it," said John M. McCarrell, president of the rebellious UAW Local 544 at General Motors' West Mifflin, Pa., stamping plant.

There still were 26 GM plants that had not reached local contract settlements with the union despite agreement on national contract terms.

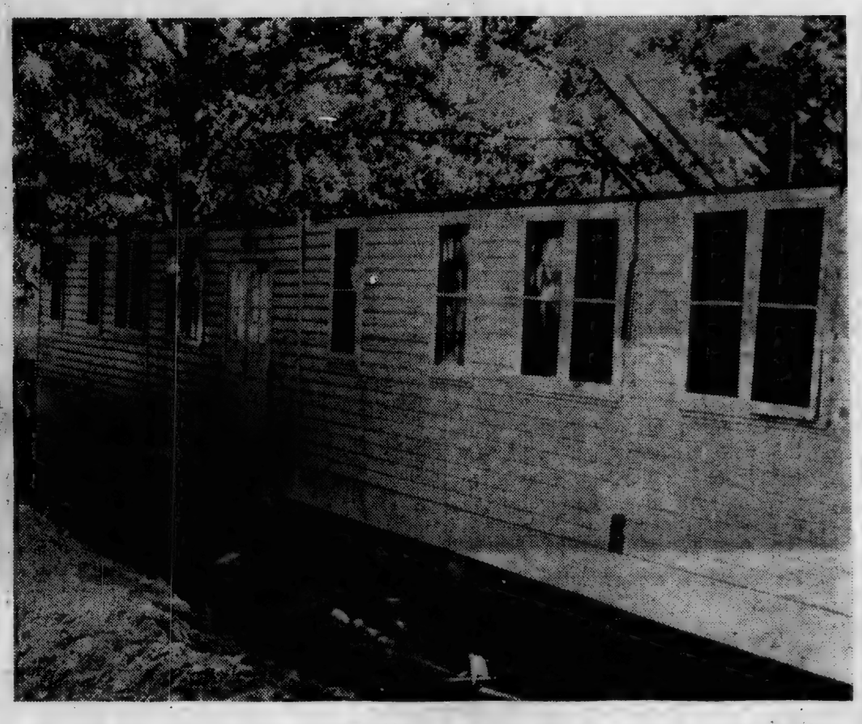
IN PLACE OF OLD 'X'

Hill Hall To Add New Annex; Complete For Music In 1963



PLAYED OUT—Hill X the Naval building which has served as an annex to Hill Hall until this year, will no longer house the sounds of music. A wrecking crew is now busy playing a symphony on its frame as Hill X gives way to newer and bigger things. The new addition to Hill Hall will be finished in January, 1963. The new annex will cost $485,000.

Old 'X' Is Being Leveled

By Bil Dowell

A new annex to the Music Department's Hll Hall will be completed in January 1963. The new bulding will be built on the site of old Hill Annex X, which is now in the process of being torn down.

Architect for the new bulding is r. Marion Ham of Durham. King-Hunter Inc. will be the contractors.

The new building will cost $485,000. It will cover 27,300 square feet and will include a main rehearsal hall, a library, stack rooms, practice halls, and classrooms.

Ground Broken

Ground for the new addition was broken Thursday, September 14. Present at the ceremony were Chancellor William B. Aycock, Dr. Glen Haydon, head of the Music Department, Walter King, the contractor, Roger Davis, assistant to Mr. Ham, and J. Arthur Branch, business manager of the University.

The passngi of Annex X marks the endng of an era. Old and musty, it once housed a piano in every room. Graduate students taught everything from trombone to voice training in it.

One of Three

Hill "X" was one of three buildings brought to the University towards the end of the war to accommodate the growing influx of veterans. Z Annex was cut in half last summer and taken away. The remaining annex, Y, will remain standing until the new addition is completed. At that time it will also be destroyed.

East Germans Hold 2 US Soldiers 6 Hours

By JOSEPH B. FLEMING

BERLIN (UPI)—The East German communists detained two American soldiers for six hours Thursday near Potsdam. It was the first case of communist interference with allied autobahn traffic since start of the latest crisis Aug. 13.

The U. S. Berlin garrison flew a three-man military police guard Friday to the isolated West Berlin conclave of Steinstuecken which retired Gen. Lucius D. Clay visited in a surprise helicopter flight Thursday. The three M.P.s immediately began patrolling the 3,000-foot barbed wire barrier the communists erected around the enclave, isolated in the Soviet zone.

Enlarge Forces

The communists disclosed they are incorporating their 50,000-man border police into the regular army, bringing its strength to an estimated 135,000 to 150,000 men, all well-trained and heavily armed.

The communists also reported that such "provocations" as American television star Jack Paar's recent appearance had brought the removal of East Berliners living along the border of this divided city.

Despite the new moves to seal the border, 14 more East Germans escaped to West Berlin Thursday night and Friday.

The two American soldiers held by the Communists were identified as Pfc. Lawrence D. Edgar of San Bruno, Calif., and Pfc. Rocco F. Tomanio of Dunbury, Conn. They were held for six hours until a Soviet officer arrived on the scene.

An Army spokesman said the two soldiers, wearing civilian clothes were stopped near Potsdam, 13 miles from here, "forced out of their privately owned vehicle bearing U.S. forces license plates" and taken to a police station.

Watson Issues Protest

After their release they completed their journey to their duty station at the West German border checkpoint at Holmstedt, 110 miles from Berlin. Maj. Gen. Albert Watson II, U.S. commandant in Berlin, protested to Soviet Commandant Col. Andrei I. Solovyev. Under four-power agreements U.S. forces are subject to control only by the Russians on the Berlin-West Germany autobahn.

Despite the Communist interference with autobahn traffic, the East German foreign ministry repeated assurances that the three Western airlines can continue operating under present conditions along the air corridors to West Berlin. But, it hinted things would change when a peace treaty is signed.

Khrushchev, in his message to East German workers, mentioned frequently the threat of war over Berlin but said a German peace treaty must be signed—"It is as necessary as it is unpostponable."

West Berlin police said a family of three East Berliners Friday jumped from the fourth floor of an East Berlin apartment house into nets held by West Berlin firemen. The flat was on the Bernuuer Stresse where the building is on the border.

Police also reported four women and seven men escaped over the concrete and barbed wire wall or slid down ropes from windows opening on West Berlin streets. One man swum from East Germany to West Berlin across a border lake.

FALSE LAW ARRESTS

HAVANA (UPI) — Cuban army intelligence agents rounded up 14 persons in Havana Friday and accused them of distributing a "false" law draft by which the government proposed to nationalize children.

New State Affairs Committee Plans Bond Issue Campaign

Committee Co-chairmen Tom White and Larry McDevitt announced yesterday that a meeting for interested students would be held next Tuesday in 111 Murphey Hall at 7:30 p.m.

The committee's campaign for passage of the November bond issue will be explained at the meeting, and students may then apply for county and district chairmanships.

White explained the Committee's approach for the campaign; "One—we're for the whole bond issue; two—we are very concerned with the part of the bond issue concerned with the Consolidated University; and three—our primary concern is with the requests for Carolina, which include the money for a new student union-undergraduate library."

Help Committee

The county and district chairmen will help the Committee generate public interest in the bond issue, and specifically, the UNC portion of the issue. Chairmen will work through Parent-Teacher Associations, school personnel, newspaper editors, radio-tv personnel, and civic clubs.

Of the $5,892,000 UNC portion of the issue, $1,622,000 is requested for the student union-undergraduate library. The remaining one million dollars needed for the building will be furnished by student self-liquidating funds.

The total bond issue is for $61,665,000. CU's portion is $13,245,000. The total amount for state-supported colleges and universities is approximately $31 million.

In addition to the student center, UNC has seven requests in the issue:

Phillips Renovation

Renovation of Phillips Hall, $205,000; addition to Wilson Hall, $570,000; a new cafeteria and service building, $730,000; addition to heating plant and steam distribution system, $1,380,200 less $680,200 self-liquidating; remodeling of Cobb dormitory (for women), $50,000; paving driveways and parking lots, $25,000; and addition to the Health Center, $3,628,000, less $1,628,000 self-liquidating.

The issue will be voted on in a statewide referendum November 7.

Rise Of Conservatism?

Where are the conservatives at Carolina?

Much has been heard of late concerning the "Rise of conservatism on the college campus." Supposedly, the traditionally liberal atmosphere pervading the academic air at colleges and universities is being countered by a rising tide of conservative reaction. Barry Goldwater is labeled the new hero of the sixties collegian, and liberals supposedly are having a tough time of it.

* * *

About the easiest thing to be at Carolina is a liberal, so much so that liberalism has become an overworked and often meaningless label. "I am a liberal" is a cliche as easy to parrot as "Mary had a little lamb."

* * *

The conservative at Carolina has become a very silent individual. His views, if he has any, are quietly expressed in the dormitory or fraternity, and the highly touted national conservative rise appears to be mostly myth at UNC.

* * *

The crux of the situation seems to be that the liberals are wont to be articulate, while the conservatives are observing a self-imposed silence.

Whether Carolina is predominantly liberal or not is a moot question. But it is evident that the conservatives have lost the power of speech. The New Left is outspoken, the New Right has yet to be organized.

In many respects, this is an unhealthy situation. Most political questions have more than one side—yet Carolina is represented nationally as being strongly liberal. The votes cast by the UNC delegation to NSA in Wisconsin this summer, for instance, were predominantly liberal on issue after issue.

* * *

We agree wholeheartedly with this vote, we are surprised to find that there has been no conservative reaction to it here. Apparently the conservative faction is either unthinking, unconcerned or scared. Perhaps it is a combination of the three.

The bulk of conservative reaction has been confined to ineffectual grumbling and half-hearted groaning.

Despite all this, we are inclined to believe that there is a strong element of conservatism at UNC, although most of its weight is sluggish mass.

The columns of The Daily Tar Heel are open to any opinion whatever its particular political orientation. If conservatism is actually on the rise, then why does the campus not hear from it? Why does student government follow an unchallenged liberal course? Why does the conservative satisfy himself with behind-the-scene mutterings?

Conservatism on the rise? We say no.

The Electoral College

The results of a recently concluded nationwide Gallup Poll indicate a growing popular dissatisfaction with the present system of determining the electoral vote in the Electorial College.

The poll showed that 6 out of 10 persons interviewed favored replacing the present method with one in which each state's division of the popular vote would determine the electoral vote split.

The poll also bore out that the extremely close vote in the 1960 election influenced popular opinion towards a proportional system of representation, since the number of persons favoring a proportional system rose by 11 per cent over a similar total in April of 1960.

It is gratifying to see that the majority of the people—if we can trust Gallup's findings—favor reform in the electoral college.

Following the 1961 presidential election, President Kennedy received 56 per cent of the electoral vote, yet he gained just over 50 per cent of the popular vote.

The drama of the final counting shook many people into a realization that the present "winner-take-all" method of vote division can and has resulted in the election of a president who had less than half the popular vote. There have, in fact, been eleven such men—Harry Truman, most recently. However, the opposing popular vote has always been split; and the total popular vote for one man has twice exceeded that of the winning candidate.

In the past, the prospect of having a "losing" candidate assume the office of President has twice inspired attempts to reform the Electoral College system along proportional lines.

A bill proposing such a reform was introduced in Congress in 1960, passed in the Senate, but failed to pass in the House. The bill was reintroduced in 1956 but failed to gain the two-thirds vote necessary on a constitutional amendment.

The issue, fortunately, is not dead, and it is probably only a question of time before a new bill to provide for proportional division is introduced.

We hope that it passes.

German Election Poses Problem

BONN, West Germany (UPI)—Unitil the middle of next month Germany will be ruled by a lame-duck government capable only of house-cleaning. After that, answers must be sought to some long-delayed problems.

The more pressing the Berlin crisis becomes, the more pressing these problems will become.

As of now, the betting is that the federal republic's next chancellor will be Ludwig Erhard, whose economic genius is credited with Germany's present prosperity, but who is no politician.

* * *

AFTER THAT THE name most prominently mentioned is that of Defense Minister Franz Josef Strauss.

Strauss is the man who has built the West German wehrmacht into the most powerful army in Western Europe and who is regarded as one of the most astute politicians in the Christian Democratic party.

Strauss is one of the few present cabinet ministers who ever dared talk back to the old man, and is regarded as a good possibility for foreign minister in the new lineup.

NOW TO SOME of the problems:

West Germany's immediate problems arise from the new Soviet pressure on Berlin and Khrushchev's announced intention to sign a separate peace treaty with Communist East Germany. This includes questions of increased defense spending, stepped up conscription and a longer term of service.

The long-range problem springs from the fact that West Germany is aligned firmly with the West, both militarily through NATO and economically through its membership in the West European Common Market.

In the same way, East Germany is tied just as firmly to the Soviet zone.

* * *

BUT THERE remain areas of negotiations.

West Germans as a whole appear resigned to many years of division between East and West, even though no West German politician yet has dared to say so.

So the West could live with a separate Soviet treaty with East Germany even while not recognizing it.

Between the East and West zones are strong economic ties which require open communications. The same principle could be a decisive bargaining point when applied to Berlin.

* * *

THE ADENAUER government took tentative, but never decisive steps toward an accommodation with Poland over the lost-Oder-Nesse territories.

It seems probable the mood of the new government will be more positive.

LUDWIG ERHARD

WHY HAVEN'T THEY ASKED CHURCHILL?

Who Let The Reds Take Berlin?

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Democrats and the State Department are disputing with Dwight D. Eisenhower and the Republicans the answer to this question:

"Who made the decision permitting the Russians to take Berlin single-handed at the end of World War II."

It seems odd that neither side has called the best informed and only decision to relate the circumstances qualified surviving participant in that and to assess the blame. That witness is Sir Winston Churchill. His testimony is in the "Triumph and Tragedy" volume of his history of the Second World War, pages 456-468.

Reading those pages, it becomes understandable why Ike didn't summon Churchill to testify in his behalf and why the State Department and the Democrats also overlooked Churchill. Churchill's account of the colossal Berlin goof does not make Ike look good, nor the Democrats either.

* * *

THE IMPLICATION of Church ill's account is that General Eisenhower was ignorant of the political meaning of the wind-up campaign in Western Europe. Churchill rates the U. S. Joint Chiefs as equally ignorant of what the political objectives of that wind-up campaign should have been.

The jolt to the Democrats is that Churchill says President Roosevelt in March—April, 1945 was incapable of comprehending or dealing with the political implications of the swift Russian advance westward .

Churchill gives Stalin high marks for understanding these political implications and for taking advantage of exhaustion in Washington and political ignorance in the Allied military high command.

The State Department is retreating under pressure of Republican protests from a public statement implying adverse criticism of Eisenhower for failing to go all-out for Berlin in the closing days of the war.

* * *

IKE HOLDS THAT the Berlin decision was political; that is, made by the politicians in Washington and London. This Churchill seems directly to challenge. As for his own point of view, Churchill quotes in "Triumph and Tragedy," page 467, from a memo he sent to General Eisenhower April 2, 1945:

"I am all the more impressed with the importance of entering Berlin which well may be open to us. I deem it highly important that we should shake hands with the Russians as far east as possible."

Churchill also warned the general of what he regarded as the Russian objectives with respect to Berlin.

TO FDR ON APRIL 1, 1945—11 days before FDR's death—Churchill addressed a long message including the following:

"Berlin remains of high strategic importance. The Russian armies will no doubt overrun all Austria and enter Vienna. If they also take Berlin will not their impression that they have been the overwhelming contributor to our common victory be unduly imprinted in their minds, and may this not lead them into a mood which will raise grave and formidable difficulties in the future."

Churchill's book has a footnote to that message: "Actually, although I did not realize it, the President's health was now so feeble that it was General Marshall who had to deal with these grave questions."

And that, children, is how we began to lose the peace.

On September 19, William Evans became an immortal martyr in the cause against the House Un-American Activities Committee. The Daily Tar Heel's readers will always remember that a fine fellow named Evans lost his job because of the HUAC. Due to a twisting of reasoning everyone is misled.

Mr. Evans did not lose his job because of the HUAC, but because of the narrow-midnedness of the administration of Mt. Olive College. Evans was not convicted, but accused of Un-American Activities. A man is innicent until proven guilty, and William A. Evans was not proven guilty. Perhaps it might behoove all concerned to ponder this fact and not the validity of the HUAC.

Reflections

The saying "stiff in opinion and always wrong," characterizes the rural Southerners who are calculating how many "colored folks" will be killed if their schools integrate.

Its not necessary for them to be concerned. Negroes are fast moving to urban centers where they can obtain decent educations, and those who remain are too far gone to be helped by integration.

A good many of the two-thirds of the freshman class that flunk out every year come from rural white high schools, so one might conclude that Negroes would not gain very much by integration of schools. They'd do better to up-grade the facilities they have, rather than waiting for integration to do it for them.

COMPLETELY SATISFACTORY TO NO ONE IN BRAZIL

Quadres' Successor Faces Snags

By United Press International

When Bazil's President Janio Quadros took the office from which he resigned in a fit of temper last month, he did so on a pledge of internal austerity and an independent foreign policy.

The government replacing him after days of chaos which nearly erupted into civil war, is pledged to a similar program.

But it faces the same difficulties as those which plagued Quadros, and suffers the additional misfortune that it is completely satisfacory o no one.

* * *

WHEN QUADROS TOOK office, he did so by virtue of the largest vote in Brazilian history. But the honeymoon was shot. In less than a year in office, he vetoed Congress 19 times and quit after Congress overrode his 20th.

Mounting restiveness against tough austerity measures contributed to Quadros' troubles, but important factors were his flirtations with Castro's Cuba and Red China and a growing suspicion that he would seek ways to free himself of congressional restrictions.

If by his sudden resignation, he sought to obtain this latter point a cry for his return, he miscalculated.

* * *

FROM THIS, THEN, erupted the crisis exposing the deep divisions within Brazil which merely were patched over in the hastily-contrived solution.

Brazil's constitution clearly provided for the succession of Vice President João Goulart, a man totally unsatisfactory to leaders of Brazil's armed forces who suspected his Communist sympathies.

But the armed services also had one of the best records in Latin America for staunch support of the Constitution.

From this came the unsatisfactory compromise wherein the constitution theoretically was preserved by a switch to a European-type parliamentary government which stripped the president of his powers and rested it in the hands of a premier elected by Congress.

* * *

GOULART, POSSIBLY with fingers crossed, accepted the change but insisted the new premier be a man of his choice. His choice was small, balding, thin-lipped Tancredo Neves, a 51-year-old banker who also is regarded as one of Brazil's most able politicians.

Should Brazil tumble into the arms of Castroism or Communism, or should it resume its reckless dash toward bankruptcy, then the whole progam would have to be e-surveyed.

Conference Games Involve 7 Teams Today

Tar Heels To Scrimmage In Kenan Stadium At 2

By HARRY W. LLOYD
DTH Sports Editor

While the other seven Atlantic Coast Conference teams are engaged in battles of their own, the North Carolina Tar Heels will be carrying out their version of the Civil War in Kenan Stadium.

Coach Jim Hickey has scheduled a full scale scrimmage this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The lineups haven't been announced (but if it follows the form of the past Saturday afternoon affrays, the first and second team will be taking on all comers.

Students and faculty members will be admitted free to the game—and they will make up the extent of the spectators. No outside tickets will be sold. However, most ACC fans will be busy enough keeping up with the rest of the league activity.

Six games involving conference teams will be played today. Virginia gets underway by playing host to William & Mary. The Cavaliers, losers of 28 straight games will be favored to break their streak in the debut of coach Bill Elias.

In another afternoon game, Clemson plays at Florida. The host Gators, who had a 9-2 record last season, have been given a slight nod over the rebuilding Tigers, who were 6-4. Florida, running behind qb Larry Libertore, has 23 lettermen and is rated near the top of the SEC.

With the exception of the N. C. State-Wyoming game, which will be starting late in the afternoon, the remainder of the ACC teams will be playing at night.

The defending champion Blue Devils, who depend heavily on speed, have been made favorites over the Gamecocks.

Maryland's up-and-coming Terrapins will be under the lights at SMU. Tom Nugent's Terps, led by end Gary Collins, will rule as favorites over the Mustangs, who won only one game all last season.

Wake Forest is another team that goes to Texas for a night contest. The Deacons will be facing a strong Bear team that was 8-1-1 last year and lost in the Gator Bowl. All-America candidate Ronnie Bull, now at fullback, will lead the favored Baylor team.

State, who may have to compete with snow as well as thin air, will rely on the passing of Roman Gabriel in its contest against the Wyoming Cowboys. The Pokes were 8-2 overall last year.

Back in Chapel Hill, the probable starters for the UNC first team are as follows: E-Conrad Sloop and John Runco; T-Tony Hennessey and Jim Shumate (John Hegarty is injured); G-Jim LeCompte and Duff Greene; C-Joe Craver; QB-Ray Farris; HB-Gib Carson and Lenny Beck; and FB-Bob Elliott.

Freshman Prospects Are Good

By ED DUPREE

If hard work, hustle, and the desire to play ball are the trademarks of a good football team, then Coach George Barclay's freshman squad has the makings of a top-flight ball club.

Barclay, back at UNC after a one-year tenure at Tulane, has 53 men on his Tar Baby squad. Thirty-two Tar Babies are on football scholarships and one is a Morehead scholar.

Twenty-four boys, less than half of the team, are North Carolina natives. Pennsylvania heads the list of out-of-state players with ten, while seven hail from Virginia.

"We have some good, hard-working boys this year," Barclay said, "A lot of the boys are good varsity prospects. We could have a pretty fair team."

Among these top prospects are Clint Eudy, a 6-2, 205-pound guard from China Grove; Ron Tuthill, 178-pound quarterback from Rockingham; John Hill, a 5-11, 210-pound tackle from Greensboro; and Frank Gallagher, a 218-pound end from Chester, Pennsylvania.

Barclay pointed out that the non-scholarship boys are as important to the team as the 33 who are on scholarships: "here are several non-scholarship boys on this team that could be a big help to our varsity in the future. Some of them have been practicing only a week and have been coming along real well."

Murals Program Complete For Year

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Intramurals Direcor Tom Johnson and his staff have been quite busy the past few weeks, laying the foundation for what they hope will be another successful intramurals program. After serving as assistant director for three years, John steps up to the directorship this year, replacing Walter Rabb who last spring was elevated to the post of assistant director of athletics.

Coach Rabb served as intramurals director for 15 years, guiding the program into the position of broad stature which it holds today. He has summed up the purpose of the program in this statement, "The primary function of the Department of Intramural Activities is to promte, organize and administer a broad program of competitive and recreational activities for the voluntary participation of the Carolina student body, both men and women."

The core of the program is the campus-wide point competition in 11 sports. Team activities are conducted in four divisions: dormitory, graduate, fraternity blue, and fraternity white. The difference between the latter two is that the Blue Division includes the more experienced players from each fraternity, whereas the White Division is comprised of those less experienced.

The team in each division which has compiled the highest point total at the end of the year is declared the winner. Last year's champions were Alexander in the dorm league, Peacocks in the grad circuit, Zeta Psi in the fraternity blue race and ATO in the white division. A student may participate with only one organization, in accordance with the rules printed in the Intramural Handbook.

In addition to the point-system activities, a large and varied number of other sports activities are offered. This fall's calendar of events lists competition in swimming, golf, handball and squash as open to all students. There will also be five special events this season: Cake Race, Co-Rec Sports Carnival, Co-Rec Volleyball, Rod and Gun Field Meet and Grail-Mural Holiday Basketball Festival. Organized clubs are University Volleyball, Outing Club and Fencing Club.

The point competition begins on Monday with tag football, followed later in the fall by track, wrestling, volleyball, basketball and handball. All-campus tournaments will be held in tag football, volleyball and basketball, as well as softball in the spring.

Each of the participating organizations will have an intramural manager who attends the meetings of the Joint Council. All of the necessary information about each activity is given to the managers at these meetings and students can become familiar with the activities through their manager. The entire program is financed by the fees which each student pays at registration. The Intramurals Department urges everyone to exercise his privilege and use these fine facilities made available to him.

Ole Miss Favored In TV Game Today

By JOHN GRIFFIN
(United Press International)

Mighty Mississippi, a 6-point favorite over Arkansas in a nationally-televised contest, leads the winners of last season's four biggest bowl games in action Saturday when the 1961 college football season moves into high gear. Mississippi, the reigning Sugar Bowl champion, is favored over Arkansas, last year's Southwest Conference champon, even thiough 1960 All-America Jake Gibbs has graduated.

Doug Elmore is expected to fill Gibbs' quarterback shoes for the Rebels, who will be trying to improve on a 10-7 victory margin over the Razorbacks last year. But Arkansas also is improved and is ready to display Lance Alworth, a hard-running, high-touted halfback. The game will be televised by ABC at 4:30 p.m., EDT, from a new stadium in Jackson, Miss.

Washington, Purdue Even

Washington, last year's Rose Bowl champion, is only even money against invading Purdue; Orange Bowl winner Missouri is a heavy 14-point choice over Washington State; and Cotton Bowl champion Duke is a 7-point choice over South Carolina at night.

Purdue will be out to revenge the surprising defeat of the Big Ten's Minnesota at the hands of Washington in the Rose Bowl. Purdue had only a 4-4-1 record, but Washington, minus quarterback star Bob Schloredt from last year's team, is not supposed to be as strong.

Penn State, Alabama, Kansas, and Syracuse are favored in other games featuring teams which have been highly rated in the advance dope for this season.

Penn State, the pre-season pick as the East's top team, starts out as a 14-point favorite over Navy, which is rebuilding after the loss of Joe Bellino through graduation. The spotlight is on Roger Kochman, the Littany Lions' speedboy trying to come back after leg injuries.

Shooting For Third

Alabama, which is shooting for its third straight bowl trip, is a 7-point pick to open with a win over rebuilding Georgia. Kansas, touted as the Big Eight Conference favorite, is favored by only 7 over a Texas Christian team that may be extra tough. Syracuse built around All-American halfback Ernie Davis, is a 6-point favorite over Oregon State.

As usual in the opening weeks of the season, intersectional games dominate the schedule.

In other leading games in this category, Indiana is a 12-point favorite over Kansas State; Texas 12 over California; Iowa State (1-0) is 7 over Oklahoma State; Maryland is a 2-point pick as a Cotton Bowl visitor against SMU at night; Baylor is favored by 15 over Wake Forest at night; Tulane is 5 over Stanford; and UCLA 13 over the Air Force.

Army is a heavy favorite to stop Richmond, but will have to stop the passing of Mel Rideout, who torpedoed West Virginia last week.

Roman Gabriel, who is being hailed in advance as perhaps the best passer in the nation, leads a heavily-favored North Carolina State team against once-beaten Wyoming.

Rabb Optimistic Over Baseballers

BY ED DUPREE

Coach Walter Rabb is highly optimistic about his baseball team's chances next season, despite the loss of seven important men from last year's strong team. Every season seems to be a rebuilding year for Rabb, but by the end of May his forces are always in the thick of the fight for the ACC championship.

Last year, when fall practice began, Rabb had only two experienced men, Ferg Norton and Carroll Bolick, on hand. He added Len "Woogie" Dellolio, Paul Swing, Larry Neal, Tommy Camp Heyward Hull and Jim Mooring to the lineup and his "greenhorn" Tar Heels set the conference afire. They won their first six ACC contests and ran up a 10-2 record before dropping a disastrous double-header to the Virginia Cavaliers. UNC's double loss enabled Duke to back into the conference championship with an 11-3 record. Duke went on to finish 5th in the NCAA playoffs at Omaha.

The situation is basically the same this fall. Rabb has four veterans returning from the 1961 squad and each is a top-notch performer. Infielders Dellolio, Swing, and Neal —all .300 hitters—return along with fly-ball chaser Hull.

Even though he lost pitchers Johnny Stott and Bob Deaton by graduation and ace hurler Nick Warren to the Los Angeles Dodgers, Rabb has high hopes for his pitching staff. He is counting on sophomore right handers Spencer Willard and Andy Billesdon to take up some of the slack left by the three departed hurlers. Southpaws Dave Murr and Larry Jenkins and right handers Jack Rees, Bob Wacker and John Kouri are Rabb's five mound returnees. In addition, he has Junior Edge, who doubles as a quarterback during football season. Edge was held out in both spors last year, making him a sophomore on the athletic fields.

The only vacancy left in the infield is Norton's spot at third base. Despite his .205 batting average last year, Ferg was named to the ACC first team for the second straight year. Two homers, 15 runs batted in, and sharp fielding earned him the honor. Jim Speight, the top hitter on last year's frosh team, and Pete Rose, Norton's understudy last spring, are the top candidates for the position.

Dellolio, Swing, and Neal have the oher infield positions all but nailed down on the basis of their top performances in 1961, but Rabb has four able men to back them up in Cronin Byrd and sophomores Milford Cox, Tommy Wright and Bill Brown.

Dave Pope and sophomore George Lockhart could join Hull in the starting outfield. The UNC coach says that he has several junior college transfers who could help fill the gap left by Camp and Mooring, the ACC's leading hitter with a .427 average. The Detroit Tigers signed the husky outfielder to a bonus contract after a sparkling sophomore season in which he led the club in batting, homers, triples, doubles and rbi's.

Rabb is pleased with the added depth he has this year. The Tar Heels should be two-deep with first-rate performers at each position and the pitching staff has the makings of an excellent mound corps.

Coach Rabb's record speaks for itself. Last year was the first time since 1957 that his team failed to win the regular season championship in the ACC. The first pitch of 1962 is many months away and by then the Lenoir, N. C., native may be fielding another championship contender for UNC.

Coach Predicts Improved Team Of Carolina Booters

By MARTIN KRUMING

Crisp, decisive shots drilled swiftly towards the loosely hanging nets; a low line drive handled cleanly by a tall, rangy goaltender; enthusiastic cries emitted from a fired-up squad of seasoned veterans and semi-experienced rookies. Gazing into the future of the 1961 varsity soccer team, these first few impressions help furnish an optimistic outlook for the long, tough season ahead.

Marvin Allen, head coach of the Tar Heel eleven, predicts a good, if not better campaign than 1960. His only cause to be somewhat depressed is the loss of Jim Reston, who will be continuing his studies at Oxford during the coming year. While spearheading last season's offensive attack, this sophomore sensation drove 14 shots past bewildered enemy net tenders.

Allen, a man not to be discouraged for any length of time, may find a more adequate center forward in brilliant sophomore Peter Blake. Other standouts who can be counted on by the fans to provide many colorful moments on Fetzer Field are Dick Bordogna, the exciting senior who will captain the '61 squad, George Beim, a versatile halfback with plenty of exceptional ability, and Ward Hamilton, a number one aggressor with two good scoring feet.

Included on the schedule for the fall campaign are such nationally recognized teams as Westchester College, Middle Atlantic Conference champions; the Naval Academy, whose game will be played in Annapolis; Maryland, last season's winner of the Atlantic Coast Conference; and of course the always-dangerous Blue Devils from Duke. Incidentally, Maryland's Terrapins went all the way to the finals in the NSAA only to lose to powerful St. Louis University, 3-2.

Finding Dick Bordogna alone one afternoon standing by a goalpost, I asked him about the future of this Tar Heel varsity. In a calm and soft-spoken manner he mentioned that the team was concentrating on a short passing game as compared to the long passes and fast breaks which characterized the 1960 unit.

In his estimation, this strategy, combined with the spirit and hustle which the players have demonstrated thus far, would be a prime factor in carrying the squad to the top of the ladder in the ACC during 1961. Surprisingly enough, that was the same opinion voiced by Coach Marvin Allen.

The Water Works, about which now revolves a legal battle

On Fluoridation Issue

UNC Seeks To Dismiss Suit

The University will seek a hearing soon on its motion to dismiss a lawsuit against the fluoridation of the Chapel Hill water supply.

The suit was brought in the summer of 1960 by Manning Simons of Chapel Hill in an effort to halt the proposed fluoridation by the University which owns the Chapel Hill water works.

"I'm against it for health reasons," said Simons.

The University's legal counsel, Horton Roundtree, state assistant attorney general, said Wednesday he would request a hearing in the second week of the two-week term of Orange County Superior Court that opens in Hillsboro Monday.

The motion of dismissal will be based on improper service of the lawsuit in that the University is controlled by its board of trustees, and the trustees were neither named or served in the suit," Roundtree said.

Simons filed the suit against the University, Consolidated University President William C. Friday, UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock, Business Manager J. A. Branch, and also against all three persons as individuals.

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen publicly requested the fluoridation treatment for the second time in the past 10 years in the winter of 1960.

Later the University took a poll of local water customers on the fluoridation issue. The survey showed the customers who answered to favor fluoridation by a four-to-one margin.

The University then announced the decision to fluoridate, and the lawsuit by Simons was filed, stalling the water treatment.

Fallout Traces Small

LONDON (UPI) — British officials reported "very small traces" of radioactivity over London on Thursday and scientists here and in most European capitals appeared unperturbed by the possible health hazard.

The London County Council said the radioactivity recorded Thursday came from Soviet n uclear tests over Central Asia but said "no effect of public health significance is to be expected in this country."

Correction

The Daily Tar Heel wishes to correct two items of information printed in yesterday's issue concerning the exfoliative cytology training program of Dr. Margaret C. Swanton.

First, it is not a research program, but a laboratory training program for young women.

Second, Dr. Swanton is not hiring young women to work in the cytology laboratory, but offering them a chance to learn while receiving a stipend.

Folk Singers Joining In New Organization

A group of folksinging enthusiastists led by Mike Hall gathered in GM yesterday to form an organization for the promotion of interest in folksinging on the Carolina campus.

After the meeting the group adjourned to the lawn where they sang and swapped songs for more than an hour. The group, originally consisting of about 25, was joined by strollers, shoppers and curious passers-by until it swelled to more than 60.

Mike Hall announced that anyone who is interested should contact him or leave their name and phone number with The Daily Tar Heel, which is assisting the group.

Power Co. Gaining In Dispute

The Duke Power Company made an outstanding gain yesterday in its right of way dispute with four Chapel Hill residents when the Orange County Superior Court announced that three court-appointed commisisoners would appraise the land needed for condemnation.

The dispute stems from the expanding University of North Carolina's needs for more electrical power. To obtain this power, lines must be brought into the UNC power plant to supplement its output.

As the power company's witnesses indicated, the best route for the line lies over the Chapel Hill residences of William L. Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Ness, Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Heer, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Gray.

Mr. Hunt is the donor of an arboretum to UNC. He stated that he intends to give more land for an extension of the present arboretum. The proposed power line would pass within one hundred feet of this land, damaging its scenic beauties, according to Hunt.

The other residents claim that the line would appreciably reduce the values of their property, and that the company's decision was a "capricious and arbitrary" one.

Sporadic Sniping Is Listed

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI)J The United Nations announced Saturday that jet fighters and bombers—comprising the world organization's first offensive air force since the Korean War—would arrive in the Congo Monday.

Ireland's Gen. Sean McKeown, U.N. Congo military commander, told a news conference that 14 warplanes are being sent by Sweden, India and Ethiopia.

He said that Ethiopian P86 jets will arrive on Monday as will four Swedish Lansen jets. Indian Canberra bomber-interceptors will fly in later in the week, he added.

McKeown said the jets will be used primarily to escort U.N. transport planes—including American-manned cargo carriers placed at U.N. disposal by the United States—on trips in the Congo.

However, during the conference, McKeown reefrred to the attacks on U.N. forces by a single Katanga jet during the fighting in the secessionist province of the Congo.

U.N. spokesmen reported that calm generally prevailed throughout Katanga, with both sides honoring the cease-fire which went into effect three days ago. The Silent Sam's A Yankee

Silent Sam

By Chuck Mooney

Silent Sam, a monument to Confederate soldiers, was created by a Canadian sculptor using a Yankee as a model.

In 1909 the North Carolina Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy commissioned Canadian John Wilson to design and fashion a statue to demonstrate the Carolina students who enlisted in the Confederate Army.

Wilson, using Harold V. Langlois (an ex-policeman) of Boston, molded Sam from bronze and placed him on a granite base.

He symbolized the conflicting emotions of students torn between country and school with a bas relief on the base.

Infirmary

Uneducated Educators

An eitorial in the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times recently deplored the fact that so few outstanding students are entering the field of education. While the overall number of students taking doctor's degrees has been steadily rising over the years, the number of doctoral dissertations being prepared in the field of education has been on a rapid decline. In a sing'e year the number has dropped by more than 25 per cent, according to figures obtained by Phi Delta Kappa, the national professional educational fraternity.

According to the editorial, the decline is attributable to more generous grants which draw the outstanding men capable of obtaining doctor's degrees into other fields.

Certainly this is a factor. But more important, and more upsetting, is the fact that education is no longer considered the most appealing field for the young man of intellect.

Teaching has become a profession that is entered, too often, because the young man or woman who enters it does so because other fields appear too difficult. Education no longer attracts the "bright young man."

"If you cannot do, teach." This has become more than a joke among educators. Many teachers today enter the field not because it was the first choice, but because it was arrived at through process of elemination.

Brilliance is more ardently sought by schools of mathematics, engineering and the physical sciences than by schools of education. Today's schools of education want methodologists, not educators with imagination, brilliance and a thorough knowledge of subject matter.

Education is fast becoming the field for the insufficiently educated. More and more schools and colleges are being forced to waive requirements in order to staff their classrooms in education

As Dr. Maynard Bemis, executive secretary of Phi Delta Kappa pointed out, "if the trend continues, college and university administrators will be increasingly hard put to staff their teacher-preparatory schools."

The image cast by the school of education today is certainly not one to bolster confidence. There is not enough genuine stimulation in many of these courses to keep the average student mildly interested, much less to activate the searching mind of the brilliant student.

The lack of grants, as pointed out is a major contributor to the decline in the number of doctor's degrees awarded. But the root of the problem lies with the graduate departments which aren't substantial enough to attract grants and fellowships to shore up their sagging enrollments.

Revising the curricula along more intellectually rewarding lines might help to give education a much-needed shot in the arm.

Get In Step

The conclusion that the University has no business in the utilities business was reached by a number of people a long time ago. The primary purpose of a university is education, so the argument goes.

And few, if any, dispute that argument. The point is, the University, whether we like it or not, is in the utilities business, and there is very little that can be done about it. If a reasonable offer was made, and such a move was practical, the University would no doubt sell.

But until such a blessing befalls them, President William C. Friday and Chancellor William B. Aycock are faced with the problems of administering among other things, the local water supply.

The latest bugaboo stemming from this unfortunate ownership is the suit brought by Chapel Hill resident Manning A. Simons to forestall the University's plan to add fluoride to the water. Simons filed the suit almost one year and four months ago. Last week the University started action to pursue a motion it made to dismiss the suit shortly after Simons filed it.

So, after more than a year of haggling, some sort of action will be made on whether Chapel Hill will have fluoride in its water supply.

It is unpleasant for many of us to see the University involved in long, drawn-out and much-publicized legal actions. It seems a far cry from the purpose of a university.

Of course, there can be little doubt that the decision to add fluoride to the water supply was a wise one, firmly based in facts gained from study.

Representatives from the Medical School, the School of Public Health and other officials appeared wholeheartedly. Water users themselves voted four-to-one in favor of fluoridation in a postal poll conducted by the University.

There seems to be little real basis for opposition to the plan. The battle has been fought many times over in towns and cities throughout the country. The conclusion has almost always been the same: Fluoridation is safe and beneficial.

Simons should relent in his efforts to block it here. The University has no time to spend fighting dead issues.

The decisions were made long ago. It only remains for Simons and a few others to get in step—and allow Chapel Hill to do the same.

Where Is Comment On News

"Let us never negotiate out of fear, but let us never fear to negotiate"

President Kennedy: Inaugural address, January, 1961.

It is dissappointing to see that during the first few days of this semester virtually no spontaneous comment on the world situation has appeared in this newspaper. Is it possible for us to ignore this situation which has clearly become synonomous with our very survival?

Calamity upon calamity mounts up. By simply picking up the daily newspaper the events are clear, and they need no enumeration here. Perhaps the public is simply discouraged and frustrated by the fruitlessness of negotiation. One cannot blame them.

BUT STILL THE uncertain course of peace is sought in the hallowed halls of the United Nations while an undetermined amount of harmful fallout menacingly filters through our atmosphere. Meanwhile, our diplomats untiringly continue to seek a solution to the Berlin deadlock over rights we should never have recogonized. That is, Berlin is inherently a Soviet-concocted propaganda front and therefore a situation in which we do not carry on negotiations.

Negotiation constitutes a compromise where concessions are made and where the basis of discussion is clearly understood: that an agreement must be achieved. On both counts the Russians have consistently demonstrated that they are interested in neither.

The Kenan-Lippman philosophy must then be seriously challenged. The pathetic examples of recent history are all too cruel for us to forget. Was it not our miscalculation of Hitler that led us into the second continental war within 50 years?

* * *

THEREFORE ONE WOULD seriously doubt the objectives that we might attain through negotiations. The Goldwater-Buckley philosophy—that hostility alone will dominate the world's peace conferences—is much more appropriate for us today. At a time when our greatest peacemaker, the late Dag Hammarskjold of Sweden, is dead, is it not time for serious reflection?

How long are we to wait, hoping that one day the tide will turn our way? Or will it all end in that absurd scene that was depicted in "On the Beach"?

That we should not be concerned is inconceivable.

Nations Burning Candle At Both Ends Not Fools, But Clever Opportunists

As concerned Americans appraised the recent Belgrade conference of non-aligned countries, long overdue thoughts popped to the surface.

Many Americans, President Kennedy among them, are thinking now about what good it does to pour billions of dollars into foreign aid. What do these countries produce? What is their military strength? What power do they possess?

Last week, the President, incensed by their gutless stand against Russia's resumption of atomic tests, asked for a reappraisal of which countries should receive the $4.2 billion in U. S. foreign-aid next year. He hinted strongly that countries with our point of view would be favored. Tito's support of Russia's position in Berlin, particularly angered the President. Yugoslavia has received $1.4 billion in economic aid since 1948.

* * *

THE NEUTRALS, like selfish, grasping children, take everything we give them, and then ask, beg or threaten for more. Why should they get anything more than technical aid to help themselves?

The have deluded themselves into believing that because they are weak and ineffectual and backward they possess great moral strength. Is moral strength limited to those with no other strength? Rockefeller and a pauper are not equal because they are each the ultimate in their sphere.

The neutrals have nothing and are nothing, therefore, they think themselves supreme, at least morally. Nasser and Sukarno have visions of dominating their parts of the world, while hiding behind the cloak of neutralism.

* * *

SPEAKING HONESTLY, America wants the resources of these neutrals in the East-West struggle. The government also has thoughts of itself as a humanitarian benefactor to the nations that have little or no developed resources ,other than ill-fed populations and vociferous politicians. Why give money to people who do not appreciate it and do nothing for us, is a question answered only by those who think our resources limitless.

Favorable results from foreign aid have come only when the country was on our side to start with. We do not change anyone's opinion of the U. S. by giving them food and other things that it hurts their pride to accept. Congress should have realized this long ago.

By bolstering the economies European countries after the war, the U.S. was priming the pump, which was beneficial to all. But to start from scratch to raise the living standards of a billion people in Asia and Africa and Latin America is absurd.

U. S. ECONOMIC advisors balk when foreign leaders are not willing to use their own people to work on projects financed by the U. S. If these people do not help themselves, why should we? If they come back and say, "If you won't help us, the Soviets will," then we should be glad because the Russians will be getting liability, rather than an asset.

From Roosevelt down to Kennedy, the U. S. has let good sense be swept aside by tenuous hopes. The millions funneled into the Good Neighbor policy did little for the Latin American peons, but much for the policitians; neither did aid to Iraq where a nationalist coup overthrew a pro-Western government and is striving to shed itself of all Western influence; nor has aid to Cuba, India, or Poland, to name but a few, done the U. S. any good to speak of.

* * *

AID TO COUNTRIES decidedly on our side, like Greece, Israel or England, have strengthened our position. These countries trade with us and could be depended upon in a hot war. They have moral principle, that countries like Ghana, Mali or Indonesia do not have.

However, countries that burn the candle at both ends by accepting anything from either side are not fools. They are clever opportunists that have duped naive Americans.

Should Carolina Continue Membership In NSA Group?

(Editor's Note: The Carolina delegation was not "in full agreement" on the HUAC resolution. Student Body President Bill Harriss, Vice-President Hank Patterson, and NSA Co-Ordinator Bill Straughn voted for abolition. Secretary Mary Townsend and Attorney General Al Crombery voted against abolition. Two other delegates favored abolition reform: Jim Clotfelter of the DTH staff, who was a non-voting delegate; and Treasurer Pete Thompson, who was absent at the time of the vote.)

The top echelon of Carolina student government is at it again. Some weeks ago president Bill Harriss, vice-president Hank Patterson, treasurer Pete Thompson, secretary Mary Townsend and others attended the national convention of the National Student Association. The Carolina delegation purportedly entered the convention in good standing with the NSA, and it obviously left in like manner.

The Daily Tar Heel did not present an individual boxscore for each member of the Carolina delegation, but it is known that our "representatives" were in full agreement on one thing: That the House Un-American Activities Committee should be abolished.

This effort has received enthusiastic NSA endorsement in other years, indicating that their naivete is nothing new. That the elected officials of our University would collaborate in and even applaud such vituperation may be indicative of poor choosing of officials on our part.

* * *

THROUGHOUT ITS HISTORY, the NSA has espoused causes abominable to any who dare to have a conscience in this age of the courageous HUAC, the NSA has plugged for diplomatic recognition of Red China, "academic freedom"—for Communists—removal of all loyalty oaths on taxpayers' money, and for all-out attacks upon the sensible and legal traditions of the South.

It is in this last category that vice president Patterson has made his greatest contribution. Patterson takes himself seriously as an expert on "civil rights" and, hailing from Manhasset, New York, he is, naturally, well-qualified to speak out on Southern problems.

* * *

IT WAS HE WHO, last spring, helped organize agitation for the integration of Chapel Hill theaters, freely associating with various and sundry "intellectuals" representing "the people" of Chapel Hill, the nation and, they would have you believe, the world itself.

These same groups engage in sit-ins, kneel-ins, etc., etc, etc., and etc., and have done wonders in disrupting race relations nation-wide. But Patterson embraces these aliens and reaps the only satisfaction that his heart holds dear: A kind pat on the back by NSA.

PERHAPS THE CAROLINA delegates were taken up in the frenzy of mob psychology when they endorsed the near-treasonous program of the NSA.

But then maybe they weren't. Not only did they do a gross dis-service to themselves, the University and the nation by devouring the NSA menu, but they cast grave doubts upon their ability to think rationally upon matters of vital concern.

We can only hope that they will not exercise this same lack of judgment in dealing with other matters in the future. Meanwhile, there is no rational explanation of why Carolina should continue to be a part of a smear group like NSA.

But there is even less rational explanation of why Carolina's top elected officials could endorse these outrageous proposals.

Reflections

Later they were joined for a second cup of coffee by three more students, one of whom weighs over 250 pounds.

Reminiscent of the UCLA phone booth crowding contests, the students have since wondered whether they set a record. Interested persons should contact Chuck Mooney at the DTH.

Otelia Thrilled By Murals

Recently I ran into some Durham friends who said they came over to see the new murals at the Institute of Government's assembly hall. I hadn't heard about them so I immediately took myself out to see them. To all those who haven't seen them, my advice is to go and do likewise. They are preeminently worth your time.

There are fourteen murals, all of them eight feet wide by eleven feet high, except one over the door. They are the gift of the Knapp Foundation, at a cost of over one hundred thousand dollars. They were executed by the artist, Francis Vandeveer Kughlr, who took six years to paint them. They were completed in March 1961.

* * *

THE ENTIRE DISPLAY is fascinating and the colors are beautiful. It is a magnificent gift to the University. But I was more thrilled by the "Crusade for Education," the "Industrial Awakening," and the "Pageant of Dreamers," because I could identify so many faces which the artist had painted in the pictures.

In the Arts and Sciences there were the Wright Brothers, Lindberg, Walter Hines Page, Paul Green, Thomas Wolff, Frederick Koch, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Coates, and my cousin, Kate Pendleton Arrington.

All together, this gift is one of the most pleasing of the many wonderful gifts to the University, and another feather in the cap of Albert Coates and his wife, who have dedicated their lives to the building and promotion of the Institute of Government at the University.

'What Can I Do?'— Here's One Answer

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Operation Alert is a prime answer to the worried patriot who wants to do something to hold the line against Communism inside the United States.

"What can I do?" is a question members of Congress are hearing from the voters back home. Sen. Karl E. Mundt, R-S. D. has been hearing a lot of that from his constituents.

Mundt is telling these worried voters about Operation Alert. This South Dakota senator is among the too-few members of Congress who are aware of the threat of American Communists to American way of life. Operation Alert is intended to inform the next generation of the facts of Communism inside the United States.

* * *

THE ALERT PROGRAM is based primarily on the distribution to secondary school and college students and to educators copies of the best book available on Communism in the United States. This book is "Masters of Deceit" written by the FBI's J. Edgar Hoover, the best informed U. S. citizen on domestic Communists and their ways.

For example: In Midland, Tex., a civic organization called Midland—For-America distributed more than 500 copies of "Masters of Deceit" to Midland high school seniors.

THE ALMUNI of universities and colleges in South Carolina are financing the most ambitious program recorded so far. The Myrtle Beach, S. C. operation alert last month shipped 5,500 copies of Hoover's book to freshmen entering 28 South Carolina colleges and universities.

When all of the alumni of all the institutions of higher learning in a great state are mobilized to get something done, things are likely to begin to happen. The South Carolina operation alert is just beginning. The Myrtle Beach operators are making a mail appeal to all alumni for more financial aid.

AT NASHVILLE CONFERENCE

S. Governors To Push Touchy Issues Aside

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Southern governors get together here Sunday for their annual meeting and controversial subjects likely will be kept under w raps if possible.

It's an "off year" from a political standpoint and the agenda for the four-day meeting lists discussions on such topics as freight rates, nuclear energy, law enforcement, highway safety and industrial development.

Featured speaker will be Vice President Lyndon Johnson who will address the group Monday night. Gov. Price Daniel of Texas is chairman of the conference.

* * *

THE CONFERENCE HAS a strict set of rules aimed at keeping touchy issues behind the scenes. But this year's program is so arranged that there will be plenty of time for private talk about such things as southern unity, segregation, states' rights and politics.

The two most mentioned possibilities for new chairman are Govs. Ernest Vandiver of Georgia and Buford Ellington of Tennessee. Vandiver is vice chairman, a new spot created last year.

* * *

THERE ARE 16 governors in the conference and all but Gov. Mallard Dawes of Maryland are due to be on hand.

States represented in the conference are Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

The Campus Outside Equal To Huge College Classroom

(Note: North Carolina's drive toward a topnotch education system depends on a number of key scholar-administrators — dynamic creative and capable — in positions of heavy responsibility within the state's educational setup. The man most directly concerned with the personal welfare and extra-curricular activities of UNC's 9,000-plus students is Charles Henderson Jr. Dean of Student Affairs at Chapel Hill and associate professor of Classics.)

By Bill Scarborough

What modern students do outside the lecture hall is determined largely, but not entirely, by academic requirements. Extra-curriculars are unsupervised in most cases, but not unregulated—and vital to the education process.

To Charles Henderson Jr., dean of Student Affairs at the University of North Carolina, the campus outside is a mammoth classroom where the student learns much unavailable elsewhere.

"For instance," says Henderson, whose administrative domain covers 10 non-academic University offices, "you give a boy a loan to further his education. You're helping him financially, and giving him responsibility. This is an education in itself."

* * *

AT CHAPEL HILL, Henderson administers a deanship that touches most intimately the collegiate life of every student—and does it so deftly it almost goes unnoticed. His office is concerned with student discipline—or as Henderson prefers to put it, "student self-discipline."

UNC has long been noted for having one of the most unfettered and responsible student governments in the nation. The disciplinary powers that many college deans keep in their own hands were long ago delegated here to the students themselves "with marked success," Henderson says.

Chosen this spring to succeed Fred H. Weaver, now secretary of the Consolidated University, Henderson is a transplanted Virginian, a native of Charlottesville, and an associate professor of Latin in the Department of Classics. Easily one of the most popular professors among students, he was a logical choice to take over Student Affairs, which was expanded in the fifties to include a wide scope of student-related activities here.

* * *

ADMINISTRATIVELY responsible to Henderson are the UNC Office of Admissions, Central Records, the Testing Service, the YMCA, Student Financial Aid, Student Health, Student Housing the Dean of Women, the Student Union and the Placement Service. Within those offices, Henderson "gets 'em from the cradle to the grave," admitting the student, housing him, caring for his medical needs, a good portion of his recreation, and finally assisting him in obtaining employment after graduation.

As might be expected, the student in difficulty is Henderson's major concern. Many hours of each day go to wrestling with student problems, with inquiries of worried parents.

On one recent day Henderson had this schedule, a fair sampling: six appointments were made before he got to the office; at the top of his "in" basket was a memorandum for an administrative conference of the deans of the University, listing 17 areas of concern on the student judicial system.

* * *

A REPORT ON STUDENT housing, vastly cramped by this fall's record enrollment, was next.

A letter from a worried aunt whose nephew was ineligible to continue receiving a scholarship followed, and after that a petition from a suspended student, asking that he be restored to good standing.

Again came the housing problem and a survey of off-campus housing available to relieve pressure on overcrowded UNC dormitories.

Tucked way down was a list of prospectiv baeccalaureate speakers for next year's graduation. A personal note came with a letter from an Italian publisher preparing to issue a book Henderson will edit.

* * *

PAST THREE MORE memoranda, the housing problem reared its ugly head again with plans to send one of his staff members to investigate the operation of huge multi-floor dormitories at other universities. Two "clover-leaf" six story dorms are going up here, but they're not ready for this year's overflow; there followed a memo noting plans to refund to students, for one semester only, part of their dormitory rent because of crowded conditions. Then a daily report on new applications for dormitory rooms.

Half-way through the basket the appointments began to pour in. First came a boy looking for help to restore his eligibility for attendance here. Henderson helped analyze his needs, encouraged him to fight to meet requirements by taking correspondence courses and re-apply.

Next came a student in serious trouble and in danger of being disenrolled. The boy attributed his difficulties to the fact that his mother was "running my life for me." Within the hour Henderson interviewed the mother, who thought his trouble was that he'd had too much free rein to do as he pleased. They both left Henderson to ponder an answer.

* * *

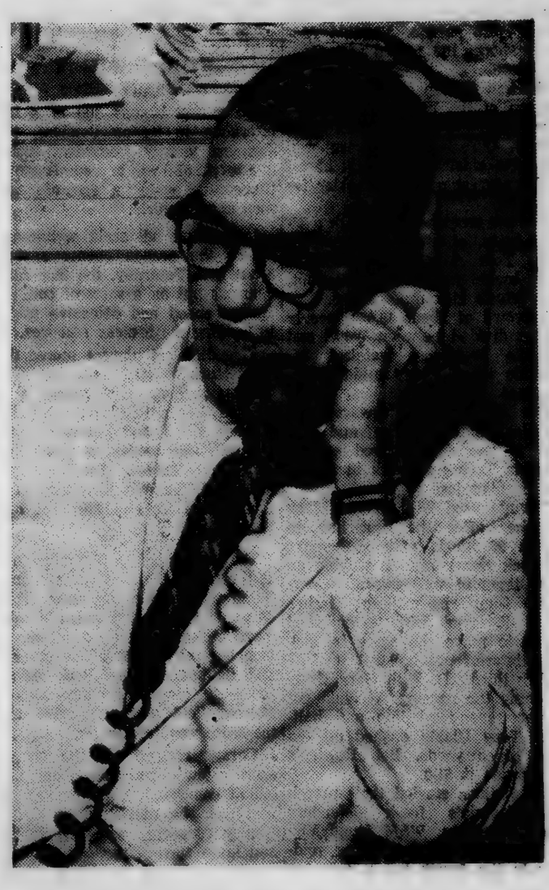
To him, student government in itself is one of the most valued educational processes.

"I believe students are worthy of trust," he says. "They should be given opportunities to exercise it, and the responsibility that goes with it."

"We have a distinguished record of accomplishment at Chapel Hill, and we've produced a fair number of scholars and gentlemen — we've provided a good share of the leadership of this state, and we've helped by developing student responsibility. If that isn't one of the functions of a university, I don't know what would be."



Tiny State Between India, Tibet Ready For Peace Or War

GANGTOK, Sikkim (UPI)—This tiny buffer state between two giants is ready for peace or war.

Sikkim, 2,800 square miles of Himalayan snows and fertile valleys, borders on India to the south and Chinese-controlled Tibet to the north and east.

Should the Chinese again decide to push their frontier farther south towards Calcutta, the glacial streams of Sikkim would be among the first to be reddened by blood.

Construction Stepped Up

India, administrator of Sikkimese external affairs since 1950, is responsible for the nation's defense network.

A year ago, confirmed reports of Chinese border reinforcements increased the possibility of Sino-Indian hostilities. Since then, construction and military reinforcements have been stepped up.

Today, both official and unofficial sources agree India can meet any direct aggression into Sikkim.

Roads have been the major accomplishment. Because an army must eat, ancient mule tracks once dedicated to Indo-Tibetan trade have been widened for light traffic.

Trucks and jeeps now can go well into north-central Sikkim. The crash program has carved a new road with manual labor supplied by Tibetan refugees.

To build a road here, you first must fight the rock, whose avalanche tendencies have best been publicized by the man who climb Himalayan mountains. The road climbs mountains too, but with a one in twenty gradient that any man or machine can negotiate.

Longest Suspension Span

The road also crosses valleys. The longest Bailey suspension span in the world is here, sitting in the middle of nowhere—450 feet above the muddy river below.

Sikkim, as seen from the road, is the same as it has been for centuries. Bamboo huts that wither and are rebuilt each year, stud the mountainsides where corn and rice grow. Thin waterfalls plunge hundreds of feet.

If there is a war, men will be fighting above as well as below the oxygen danger line of 15,000 feet. India, which says it will never aggress, is assured of at least a temporary advantage. Its first stand would be made from the summits of the hills.

But Indians seldom talk of the road in terms of military advantage. Officials say it means the opening of faster trade routes to north Sikkim. Besides military jeep, the road will be crossed by trucks carrying fruits and vegetables for the markets of northern India.

PATHET LAO TAKES CHARGE

Another Village Goes Under

VIENTIANE, Laos. (UPI) —Three sunburned soldiers in khaki stepped from the silent jungle and strolled down the single dirt street of a tiny Laotian village.

They marched straight to the thatched hut of the village mayor without asking directions from the farmers, who froze in open-mouthed awe at the sight of the strangers' submachine guns.

They had never seen these men before, but the villagers knew that spies had told them which hut was the mayor's. They also knew that when three of these men walked into a strange village, seven or eight hid nearby in the jungle.

"We are from the Pathet Lao," the strangers told the mayor. "We want rice and water."

The Pathet Lao were firm but polite. They got rice and water for themselves and enough for the other guerrillas who lurked within rifle shot.

Curiosity Strong

The three contact men told the mayor to assemble his people, who came willingly because their fear was less strong than their curiosity about the legendary "jungle men."

The Pathet Laos' theme was "unity." They said no village would be safe until the war was over. The war would not end until the kingdom was united. It would not be united until Pathet Lao had destroyed the wicked government and driven away the Americans, who caused the war, the guerrillas said.

Two weeks later, a government patrol camped in the village for one day. Its lieutenant asked for a buffalo and some rice, but the people looked fearfully at the jungle and refused.

The soldiers were hungry, so they killed a buffalo anyway. When the guerrillas came to the village again they said: "We told you the government soldiers were thieves."

Help Clean Spring

This time there were 10 Pathet Lao. They had heard that the villagers wanted to clean out a mud-choked spring, so they got all the village people together and helped them with the job.

From this time on the Pathet Lao came more often. At harvest time, 30 of them came and helped in the rice paddies.

When the work was over, they talked about unity and the schools in communist North Vietnam where Lao boys and girls could learn to be airplane pilots and nurses.

When they left the village this time, they were followed by boys and two girls, who wanted to go to school.

One day, a Pathet Lao patrol passed through the village, but left one of its number behind. The people were honored that he had chosen to live with them, because he was an educated man who could read and write.

The Pathet Lao representative replaced the old mayor with a farmer.

Mayor Replaced

When the villagers saw their mayor replaced, they suddenly realized that there would be many such changes if the Pathet Lao conquered the rest of the country. They also realized that men who proved their loyalty to the guerrillas would be first in line for the government jobs.

From then on, many villagers hated to see the government soldiers come, because they feared they would be punished for letting their friends and relatives join the Pathet Lao.

The rich farmers and the old mayor were afraid to tell the soldiers what happened because they feared Pathet Lao vengeance.

Most villagers were neither rich nor poor, but they also resented the government soldiers. They didn't care who ruled them and they knew that the presence of government soldiers could only mean fighting and trouble.

They also stated that the Superior Court's decision would be appealed.

Another point being considered in this action is one of Chapel Hill zoning laws.

A recent Chapel Hill Planning Board recommendation asks that public utilities such as the Power Company, be required to seek permits for the construction of high power line towers. A hearing on this is scheduled for Oct. 24, and the residents feel all action should be delayed until a decision is reached on this matter.

138-Lb. QB Leads Gators

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Halfback Lindy Infante snagged a scoring pass and sneaked over twice for three touchdowns Saturday in leading Florida to a 21-17 victory over stubborn Clemson before a crowd of 42,000.

All three scores were set up by free-slinging Larry Libertore, the Gators' 138-pound sparkplug quarterback. Libertbre, a doubtful starter because of a sprained ankle, kept the Tiger defense guessing with his weaving runs, aerials and deceptive handoffs.

The Gators, who had a 9-2 record last season, won their fifth straight game. It was the opener for both teams.

Libertore pulled off the big and deciding play when he heaved a long wobbly pass to halfback Bob Hoover, who was pulled down on the Tiger one. Infante sneaked over for the Gators' third touchdown.

This came about three minutes after Clemson took the second-half kickoff and drove 73 yards in 14 plays for its first touchdown. Quarterback Joe Anderson, who mixed his plays with runs and passes during the march, handed off to hard-charging fullback Ron tackle for a 9-yard touchdown run.

In the second half it looked like the Gators might pull far ahead, but with Clemson trailing 21-10, Anderson led the Tigers to the Florida three. Halfback Wendell Black drove over for the touchdown.

Infante, Libertore's favorite target, scored the first Gator touchdown by snagging a 17-yard pass in the end zone after the ball slipped off the fingertips of a Clemson defender.

BOSTON (UPI) — Roger Maris was balked again in a bid for his 60th homer Saturday, but he drove in a run with an eighth inning single, and Micky Mantle hit his 54th homer to help the New York Yankees beat the Boston Red Sox, 6-3.

Maris collected only one single in three official trips. He also drew two walks off loser Don Schwall, who was roundly booed by a crowd of 28,128, most of whom came out hoping to see Maris smash his 60th in the Yankees' 156th game of the season.

Mantle provided the Yankees with a quick 3-run lead when he connected with two on in the first inning. It was Mantle's first homer since Sept. 10.

LARAMIE, WYO. (UPI) — The University of Wyoming used a weird safety and the running ability of quarterback Chuck Lamson to beat North Carolina State, 15-14, before 17,301 chilly fans Saturday.

Wyoming's alert pass defense throttled State's hulking senior quarterback Roman Gabriel in the second half. But Gabriel had set a North Carolina State record by throwing his 23rd touchdown pass.

Wyoming's two touchdowns were scored on one-yard runs by Lamson and second string fullback Wayne Linton. But it was the safety in the third period that gave the Cowboys the vital two points they missed when trying to pass for extra points after their first touchdown.

Late in the third period, with the Cowboys trailing, 14-7, they advanced to within 11 yards of the goal, where halfback Mike Schutte fumbled and the Wolfpack recovered on its own seven.

Gabriel then was smeared for a three-yard loss by Wyoming left end Bob Knight. Gabriel dropped back to kick out of the end zone on the next play, but Oscar Overcash's snap from center went at least 10 feet over his head—over the wire fence behind the goal posts.

Elias Makes Debut Happy

By Charmles Flinner

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—The University of Virginia quenched its long thirst for victory after losing a record-tying 28 games by defeating William and Mary Saturday, 21-6.

Virginia took advantage of the heat, weight and Indian mistakes by rolling up a 21-0 score in the first three periods. It was a fine day for Virginia Coach Bill Elias, debuting with the Cavaliers.

The victory halted at 28 the number of consecutive setbacks by the Atlantic Coast Conference Cavaliers since the second game of the 1958 season. Virginia mutually shares the record with Kansas State.

The lone Indian score, the longest run of the game, came on a pass interception by senior end Dennis O'Toole who scampered down the sidelines 10 yards ahead of the nearest potential tackler for 88 yards.

A crowd of about 18,000, nearly evenly divided between W&M and Virginia partisans, watched the struggle in summery mid-80 temperature.

The Indians were thwarted by fumbles and penalties and the lack of pep they showed against Virginia Tech last week in a season opening loss.

Virginia used William and Mary mistakes after the first half to march 92 yards with sophomore halfback Henry Massie picking up 30 of them in six consecutive carries. Quarterback Stan Fischer made it count with a one-yard sneak to move the score to 13-0.

An interference call set up Virginia's third TD. With Gary Cuozzo doing the passing, Virginia got to the seven-yard line and halfback Tony Ulehla dashed off the final seven yards. Bob Rowley's kick made it 21-0.

The Indians started their march but Virginia's fresh defenders forced mistakes. W&M found Virginia's pass defense lacking midway in the fourth but it was too late.

Everett, Stuver, Folk, Lunetta Strength Of Team

Harriers Show Both Talent, Depth

By Martin Kruming

Hoping for his team to continue the calibre of performance which propelled the 1960 Tar Heel harriers to the championship spot in the ACC, head coach Dale Ranson finds himself with a strong nucleus and a great deal of rising talent.

Led by captain Rett Everett and long-striding senior Gerry Stuver, the 1961 varsity will get additional assistance from Carmine Lunetta, who placed sixth in last season's championship ACC meet and has also gained additional experience in the NCAA and AAU meets; Mike Folk, capturing fourth in the same ACC run; Charles Little; and Bob Bennett.

Everett was the individual winner in the ACC finals held at Maryland last season and also took a fourth in the Penn Relays as a two-miler. Stuver, the other sensation, placed second in the conference and can be counted on as a serious threat to Everett's crown.

During the summer both these runners were active in national and international competition, which should be of invaluable help in the gruelling campaign ahead.

How then, will this '61 group measure up to the high standards set by their compatriots of last year? According to Ranson, the successful mentor who has been handling track and cross-country runners for 35 seasons, Maryland and Duke will pose serious problems as far as the retention of the ACC trophy is concerned. The Terrapins, who handed the Tar Heels a 35-32 setback in regular season action, will fight desperately to avenge the loss which was pinned on them in the championships.

UNC Varsity Romps By 57-0

Addison, Carson Stage TD Spree In Scrimmage

BY Harry W. Lloyd
DTH Sports Editor

Under the blazing sun of a hot afternoon in Kenan Stadium, the Carolina varsity footballers rolled to a torrid 57-0 win in a semi-regulation contest against a team of freshmen and redshirts.

In the last full scale scrimmage before the season opener against State here Saturday, the Tar Heel regulars put on a show of both offensive speed and defensive might in burying the hapless reserves.

Five different players scored the eight touchdowns. The leading scorer was halfback Gib Carson, who crossed the final stripe three times on runs of 9, 1, and 4 yards. Jimmy Addison, who started at right half in place of Carson, scored first on a 5 yard run and then last on a 5-yard pass from quarterback Ray Farris.

The Varsity held a 20-0 advantage at the end of the first quarter. In a game without kickoffs, they drove 65 yards for the first score in eight plays. Addison ate up 30 of these, including the final 5, in four carries, and halfback Lenny Beck gained three of five extra points plus a 13-yard field goal, converted and the score was quickly 7-0.

Carson romped for the second score a few minutes later, and Bob Elliott converted. The reserves appeared to be moving when Sandy Kinney connected with Joe Robinson for a 30-yard pass, but Robinson fumbled at the varsity 35, where the regulars began their third TD drive.

The big play of this march was the one that got the score. Ward Marslender took a pitchout, and behind excellent blocking, scooted 39 yards down the left sideline.

In the second period, Elliott closed out a 67-yard drive with a 3-yard plunge for the fourth score. Elliott stayed in and booted his second extra point for a 27-0 score.

A 65-yard march, highlighted by a 14-yard pass from Farris to Bob Lacey, was ended when third team fullback Buddy Cozart rammed three yards for a TD. Carson's runs garnered the next two scores before Edge's field goal brought the count to a classical score of 50-0.

The Farris-Addison pass closed out the scoring for the afternoon.

Even more important from the Carolina viewpoint than the final outcome of the game was the overall effectiveness achieved by the team. Mistakes were held to a minimum. There were no fumbles lost, no bad penalties, and no offense stalls. The blocking, which often left red shirts lying like ten pens after a strike, probably can take the biggest credit for the fine showing.

One question probably left in the minds of many of the some 1500 spectators was: who will be the right halfback next week. Junior Jimmy Addison and senior Gib Carson, though never in the game at the same time, gave much of the sparkle to the Carolina offense. Addison, running with power and zip that he didn't show last season, appears about ready to fill the breakaway role that was created for him.

For the reserves, quarterback Kinney was the star. He threw some sharp passes and pulled off a neat 37 yard run at one point which almost resulted in a score.

WEST POINT, N. Y. (UPI) — Army's football caissons bogged down often Saturday—one having 12 men on the field—but the running of Al Rushatz and the passing of Dick Eckert carried the Cadets to a 24-6 victory over Richmond.

George Pappas of Chester, Pa., led the Cadets scorers with two touchdowns before 11,250 spectators basking shirt-sleeved in 87-degree heat. Tom Culver of Indianapolis scored the other Army touchdoy and Dick Heydt of Palmer, Pa., added a field goal and three extra points.

Earl Stoudt of Lancaster, Pa., bucked over for Richmond's late touchdown after the game's best gainer, a 58-yard pass from Lem Rideout to George Rapp.

Army broke the ice with Heydt's 25-yard field goal in the second quarter featured by the punting of Cadet ice hockey star Dick Peterson of Boston.

On the subsequent kickoff, Richmond fumbled out of bounds on its four-yard line. It then punted out to its own 43. Eckert, who hails from Carlisle, Pa., then hit Culver twice for a touchdown, picking up 27 and scoring with a 16-yard heave.

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. (UPI) —Halfback Don Jonas kicked second half field goals of 31 and 25 yards to spark Penn State to a 20-10 victory over surprisingly strong Navy Saturday before nearly 40,000 fans.

Jonas' initial effort in the third quarter, the first ever kicked by State's hard-running senior halfback from Scranton, Pa., gave the Nittany Lions the impetus needed to overcome a 10-7 lead built up by Navy in the first half.

The Middies got their edge when Greg Mather kicked a 45-yard field goal in the final seconds of the half. It was the longest three-pointer in Navy history. Mather's kicked a 42-yard goal to beat Washington last year, 15-14, for the previous record.

The Nittany Lions also unveiled a new star in sophomore quarterback Don Caum, of Harrisburg, Pa. He made a vital run to set up Jonas' second field goal, completed a 46-yard pass in State's last touchdown drive and scored the final touchdown of the day on a 19-yard end run.

Outing Club Sponsors Archery Lesson Today At 2 For Upcoming Tournament

In preparation for the handicapped archery tournament to be held during the coming year, the UNC Outing Club will sponsor a practice session today at 2 p.m. The purpose of this session will be to acquaint interested archers with the tournament rules and to teach some of the fundamentals of bowmanship to the beginners.

There will be several experienced archers present for coaching purposes.

The tournament will be open to all university students and faculty members. Anyone entering the event who is not a member of the Outing Club is required to post a $1 entry fee.

The first sessions of the tournament will be held on October 1, and the second will be a week later. Ensuing sessions will be held two weeks apart, until January 6, when make-up sessions can be held.

Archers wishing to participate in the practice session or tournament need not own their own equipment. If one has his own, he may use it, but the Club has archery equipment available.

Shooting in the tournament will be the standard round used for all Rod and Gun Field Meets. Each archer will shoot two ends (12 arrows) at 40 yards, at 30 yards, and at 20 yards. All will compete in the same division, with the handicapping system serving to differentiate between the scorers.

The tournament is designed so that the archer who shows the most improvement will be most likely to win.

Fallout Level Highest Ever As Result Of Russian Tests

By JOSEPH L. MYLER
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI)—U.S. fallout experts said Monday the Russians may have thrown as much radioactive pollution into the atmosphere in the first three weeks of their 1961 tests as they did in five weeks of extremely dirty testing in the fall of 1958.

The Soviet autumn tests of 1958 produced the heaviest fallout of radioactive debris from the stratosphere ever recorded in the United States. Those tests started Sept. 30 and ended Nov. 3. This year's began Sept. 1.

In the 1958 fall series, the Russians exploded 16 nuclear devices, seven of which were equal in power to a megaton or more of TNT. A megaton is one million tons.

Through Sept. 22 in the current series the Russians had set off 15 devices. Of these, as in 1958, seven were in the megaton range.

When weapons of this power are exploded in the atmosphere most of their radioactive products are thrown into the high region of calm which is called the stratosphere.

"Weather Zone"

troposphere, the "weather zone" in which people live, usually is

Such debris as stays in the rained out in a few weeks. Tropospheric fallout from this year's Russian tests has been reported all around the Northern Hemisphere but not in amounts considered hazardous to health.

Stratospheric fallout from big bombs detonated in the Soviet Arctic in the fall tends to stay aloft until the following spring when the bulk of it comes down.

Radioactive particles from the megato.. bombs tested in October, 1958, came down in March, April, May, and June 1959. Fallout from this year's earlier tests is expected to descend in a four-month period starting in February 1962.

Not Known

It is not yet known whether the 1961 Soviet devices have been individually as dirty from a radioactvity standpont as those of 1958. If they have been, the new tests have polluted the atmosphere to about the same extent already as the 1958 fall shots did.

The United States also resumed tests as a result of the Russian action in breaking the three-year moratorium which followed the 1958 series. But it has set them off underground, to prevent contamination of the atmosphere, and at a far slower pace thus far than the Russian.

IN UNITED NATIONS ADDRESS

Kennedy Challenges Soviets To Accept Disarmament Plan

Hits Troika Demand; Renews Berlin Stand

By MERRIMAN SMITH

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (UPI)—President Kennedy said Monday the United States would use any means including nuclear arms to preserve its rights in West Berlin but tempered his tough stand by offering a comprehensive disarmament program to ensure world peace.

Kennedy, in his first policy speech to the United Nations assembly, challenged Russia to a "peace race" that would call for an immediate end to nuclear testing. He said the West was not committed to a rigid formula for settling Berlin's future and suggested a free vote.

He flatly rejected Russia's "troika" plan of three secretaries general, each with veto power, to succeed the late Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold. He said to do so would "replace order with anarchy, action with paralysis and confidence with confusion."

Appealing to the small and "uncommitted" powers to preserve the unity of the United Nations, Kennedy said:

"The secretary general, in a very real sense, is the servant of this assembly. Diminish his authority and you diminish the authority of the only body where all nations, regardless of power, are equal and sovereign. Until all the powerful are just, the weak will be secure only in the strength of this General Assembly."

Interrupted Six Times

Interrupted six times for applause in his 40-minute speech, the President made these other points:

—The United Nations is divided not into three forces, but two, one trying to build a peaceful world and the other seeking to undermine the organization.

— Disarmament negotiations should "resume promptly, and continue without interruption until an entire program for general and complete disarmament has not only been agreed upon but has been actually achieved."

—The United States and Britain stand ready to sign "today" a treaty "assuring the end of nuclear tests of all kinds, in every environment, under workable controls."

—All members should earmark special units in their armed forces, trained and quickly available, for use in U.N. peace force.

—The United States will propose U.N. control to reserve outer space for peaceful use. It also wants the U.N. to be the vehicle for cooperative efforts in weather prediction and control as well as global communications by satellites.

—The United States proposed that the 1960's be designated as "the decade of development" to promote conversion of all countries into "free and equal nations" through "a cooperative and not a competitive enterprise".

Direct Attack On Soviets

—The United States "intends to be a participant, and not merely an observer, in the peaceful, expeditious movement of nations from the status of colonies to the partnership of equals". But, the President said in his only direct attack on the Soviet Union, "there is no ignoring the fact that the tide of self-determination has not yet reached the communist empire".

—"The smoldering coals of war in Southeast Asia" threaten South Vietnam. The borders of Burma, Cambodia and India have been repeatedly violated. Negotiations on Laos are reaching a crucial stage with the rainy season coming to an end. The United States "seeks for itself no base, no territory, no special position in this area of any kind".

Except for the Communist bloc and Cuba, delegates in the jam-packed assembly hall joined in 45 seconds of applause—long by U.N. standards—as Kennedy finished with this prayerful adjuration:

"The decision is ours. Never have the nations of the world had so much to lose—or so much to gain. Together we shall save our planet or together we shall perish in its flames. Save it we can—and save it we must—and then shall we earn the eternal thanks of man and as peace-makers the eternal blessing of God."

Ford Makes Offer To Auto Workers

By ROBERT IRVIN

DETROIT (UPI) — Ford Motor Co., anxious to avoid the kind of strikes that crippled rival General Motors for two weeks, made a new offer to the United Auto workers union Monday and set a deadline of two weeks for a "peaceful" contract settlement.

The new Ford economic offer was virtually identical to the settlement reached at General motors, where an official end to strike action was called by the UAW executive board midnight Sunday.

The new offer, Ford Vice President Malcolm L. Denise said, was "subject to peaceful conclusion of new agreements within the next two weeks."

UAW President Walter P. Reuther, with only loose ends remaining to be tied up at GM, Monday took personal command of the union negotiations with Ford.

But weary and snappish after marathon weekend talks at GM, he brushed off questions about what the union is seeking at Ford with one word: "justice."

Move From Ford

However, UAW Vice President Ken Bannon said the union wants more from Ford than it got at General Motors.

Denise said he did not find this "frosting on the cake idea a very persuasive line of reasoning."

Ford and the union also imposed a "news blackout" on their negotiations. For an indefinite period, Denise said, they have agreed to "restrict discussion" of the bargaining progress.

The new Ford offer includes a six cents an hour pay raise for each of the next three years, along with freezing into basic wages 12 of the present 17 cents an hour in cost of living pay.

It also provides for full company-paid health insurance, the cost of which workers now share. Other fringe improvements include new unemployment and short-work-week benefits, better pensions, moving and separation allowances.

No Local Strikes

Denise made clear Ford does not want to be hit with local strikes, as GM was, over plant level contract differences.

The company and union, he said, should be able to reach agreement in two weeks "without strikes, either local or national."

Ford has 85 local bargaining units. Settlements have been reached at only 31, leaving 54 still to be settled.

Although the union officially ended the strikes at General Motors midnight Sunday, pickets continued to block a return to work at a few scattered plants.

The key plant still holding out against GM was the stamping plant at West Mifflin, Pa., which makes parts for all GM cars. But Reuther said the situation there would soon "come together."

Negotiations at Chrysler are still hanging fire.

SAYS RIGHTS COMMISSION

Integration Is 'Slow'

WASHINGTON (AP)—The U.S. Civil Rights Commission said Sunday the pace of school desegregation "is slow indeed" and urged Congress and the President to hasten it with financial and other pressures.

It rapped racial discrimination in schools outside the South as well as the officially supported segregation of that area.

A unanimous recommendation of the six-member commission called for Congressional action to require every local school board to comply with the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in school segregation cases.

The report was the second of a series of five the commission is issuing on various phases of civil rights.

A 5-1 recommendation proposed that Congress withhold from the various states up to 50 per cent of the federal education grants normally available to them unless all public schools within them are operated on a nondiscriminatory basis.

The dissent by Commissioner Robert S. Rankin of Duke University, Durham, N.C., said that while the recommendation does not provide for the withholding of all funds from public schools, "its net effect might be punitive."

"I do not believe that school children should be made to suffer for the errors of their elders," Rankin added.

While dissenting on this recommendation, Rankin went along with a unanimous reaffirmation of a prior proposal that federal funds be withheld from publicly controlled institutions of higher education which discriminate on grounds of race, color, religion or national origin.

A footnote to the recommendation on higher education said four present members of the commission believe that as a matter of sound public policy the same principle should be extended to privately controlled institutions.

Two other new recommendations call for presential action:
1. federal library aid to communities which are not offering free services to all residents, and 2. have the President direct the Defense Department to take steps to assure that dependents of military personnel living on or near bases have an opportunity for education in schools open to all such dependents without discrimination because of color or race.

There were 12 recommendations and all were unanimous except one.

In addition to Rankin commission members are: Dr. John A. Hannah, president of Michigan State University, chairman; Robert G. Storey, Dallas, Tex., vice chairman; Dean Erwin N. Griswold of the Harvard University Law School; Rev. Theodore M. Hesbuurgh president of Notre Dame University, and Dean Spottswood W. Robinson III of the Howard University Law School.

The commission found that between 1959 and 1961 only 44 school districts in the 17 Southern and Border states initiated desegregation programs—28 of these because of court orders or pressures of pending suits.

There were only seven per cent of the Negro children in the 17 states attending desegregated schools in 1960-61 and more than 2,000 districts had not started complying with the Supreme Court decisions, the commission said.

Davis Donates $1,000 Stock To Rose Fund

D. R. Davis, Williamston pharmacist, recently donated over $1,000 in stocks to the I. W. Rose Memorial Fund of the N. C. Pharmaceutical Research Foundation.

Dean Edward A. Brecht of the School of Pharmacy said that the income from the stocks will be used for the general purposes of the Rose Fund, promoting education and research in pharmacy, both in the School of Pharmacy and other state institutions.

Some of the money will also go toward graduate fellowships, undergraduate scholarships, the pharmacy library and laboratory equipment for the School of Pharmacy.

Worked With Rose

Davis, who became a licensed pharmacist in 1926, worked with Dr. Rose, whom the fund is named after, when Dr. Rose was operating his own drugstore. Davis donated the stocks because of Dr. Rose's "fine traits and dedication to pharmacy."

D. R. Davis Jr. won the Buxton Williams Hunter medal in 1958, which was established in 1937 be his father in honor of a great uncle. This medal is one of the highest awards given to graduating pharmacy students.

Adenauer Huddles With Socialists

BONN (UPI)—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and his Socialist opponents met in an unusual two-hour discussion of international affairs Monday as the country buzzed with speculation over possible American policy changes on Germany.

West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt, Adenauer's chief opponent in the Sept. 17 parliamentary elections, led the Socialists delegation. It was the first time in a year that Adenauer had called in the Socialists for a foreign policy discussion. He was suspected of doing it this time only in hopes of frightening the middle-of-the-road Free Democrats into dropping their demand that he leave the government.

Students Capture Buses

ALGIERS (UPI)—Rioting studnts barricaded downtown Algiers streets with captured buses Monday night in a screaming demonstration for a "French Algeria." Police and troops finally quelled the rioting after menacing the demonstrators with machine guns.

Thousands of riot police weilded clubs and turned pressure hoses spurting blue-dyed water on the students who turned out several hundred strong in a demostration called by the Secret Army Organization OAS.

Congolese To Invade?

BANCROFT, Northern Rhodesia (UPI)—A trainload of white refugees fled Elisabethville Monday amid rumors that Central Congolese government forces might be readying an invasion of secessionist Katanga.

The federal Rhodesian government's refugee chief, Cyril Hone, said 260 Europeans were aboard the train that is scheduled to arri Tuesday from the Katanga capital.

The departure of some white families, plus the arrival in Leopoldville of army officers from the leftist stronghold of Stanleyville, aroused fears that the Central Congolese regime, maye be planning an all-out attack to end Katanga's secession.

Hone said the number of European families arriving at this border town slackened somewhat Monday. He reported a total of 589 refugees reached Rhodesia during the 12 days ending at midnight Sunday night.

Too Much TV Violence?

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Adjournment will bring no recess in congressional investigations which already have looked into evils ranging from pep pills to loaded dice this year.

Major inquiries planned during the congressional vacation include new drug price hearings, a special investigation of charges that military officers' anti-Communist views have been muzzled and another look at TV crime and violence.

Chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., said his subcommittee investigating the alleged military "gag" would start hearings late this year and probably continue them in 1962. Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker has asked to testify.

'No Tax Increase,' Says State Affairs

By LINDA CRAVOTTA

"Few persons realize that there will be no tax increase with the passage of the bond issue for a new Undergraduate Library-Student Center" warn State Affairs Committee co-chairman, Larry McDevitt and Tom White.

UNC's eight items on the bond issue total $5,892,000 and are included in the overall requests of state supported educational instiutions totaling $31,000,000.

"This money will not come from the pockets of the citizens of North Carolina through increased taxes," stressed Larry McDevitt. "Each person must realize this before going to the polls."

Three Steps

1. Bond issue passes.

2. State Government bonds are put on the market for purchase by industry and other organizations interested in state education.

3. At maturity the bond holders are repaid with interest from the state general fund which is a yearly accrument of state income.

"Our main purpose," stated Tom White, "is to present the public with a comprehensive picture of the University's need for this appropriation while acquainting them with the facts of the bond issue."

Each student whose hometown is in North Carolina is requested to write and talk with his parents and friends about the importance of the issue.

The State Affairs Committee, which was active in convincing the North Carolina State Legislature to authorize higher faculty salaries, started organizing the drive for the new capital improvements last spring.

More Items

Items which the UNC funds will cover in addition to the Undergraduate Library-Student Center include 2 classroom building improvements, a new cafeteria, remodeling of Cobb Dormitory for women students, additional parking lots, and the largest item—an addition to the health center.

State organization of the State Affairs Committee will have at least one student representative from each county write a personal letter to his daily newspaper asking the public to vote for the bond issue. If there are not enough student volunteers to work with individual counties, the state will be divided into districts.

All interested students have been urged to contact either of the co-chairmen at the Student Government Office or to come to an organizational meeting at 111 Murphy tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Loaded Dice

An important bill now pending in student legislature provides for the establishment of a Constitutional Council which will hear questions on the constitutionality "of any legislative or executive action . . ."

The need for such a council is apparent. Although the student-faculty review board can and does hear questions of constitutionality at present, there is no council now in operation which exists solely for that purpose. Without such a council, The Student Constitution is sometimes conveniently ignored—as it was last year when two students were tried and suspended by the Law School Court for a violation of the Campus Code, a case obviously out of its jurisdiction.

* * *

However, much of the good that can be done by the proposed new council is negated by the provisions for its composition. The proposed bill provides that the council be made up of seven members: Three from the Carolina Women's Council, and four from the Men's Honor Council.

The chairman of the Men's Honor Council would also be chairman of the Constitutional Council.

What this means is that the new Council would be merely a cat's paw for the Men's Honor Council. With four of the seven members coming from its ranks, the Men's Honor Council would dominate every decision made by the new body.

The obvious solution to this unhealthy situation would be a modification of the proposed composition.

Raising the proposed number of councilmen to ten would allow for the inclusion of the Attorney General, the President of the Student Body and the parliamentarian of student legislature.

Such a membership would eliminate the possibility of having the power of constitutional interpretation vested in the hands of a single body.

Patterson Award?

A news story in the Duke Chronicle, student newspaper at Duke, recently announced that the Men's Student Government Association Senate on that campus has voted not to allow a chapter of the NAACP on that campus.

We are still a little confused as to the ins and outs of the legislative system at Duke that spawned the decision, but it looks from here as if some pretty nebulous grounds were employed in the action.

Under a shroud of technicalities stretched to the breaking point, the Duke senate appears to have employed more emotion than legality in the decision.

At the risk of being accused of not minding our own business, we would ask if the decision reached is not reminiscent of decisions reached by state legislatures in the deep South.

Closed Stacks

The officials of Louis Round Wilson library have finally resolved the question of closed stacks. They closed them.

The new system employed is probably the best one that can be employed here, complete with checking points and all the other paraphernalia of a "tight watch" setup.

But before anyone sets up a cry of "Gestapo," remember that the library officials did their best. The stacks were opened as an experiment, a testing program. The students failed miserably by violating every written and unwritten law governing the care and use of library facilities.

And now students are faced with the long and difficult task of rebuilding a lost trust. It is not an impossible task.

The ten floors of library shelves are now off-limits to anyone who does not possess a stack permit. Fortunately, the stack permit is not difficult to obtain, in most cases amounting only to a request to a professor, giving substantial reasons for being allowed to browse and choose among the one million volumes. We hope that more students will avail themselves of this privilege than in the past, under the same system. Books were not written to be guarded and hoarded on musty shelves.

With a minimal show of student responsibility, the stacks could conceivably be reopened, but not before library officials are thoroughly convinced that it can be done without a repeat performance of last year's stupidity and irresponsibility.

The conglomerate studentry of this University has been known to disagree with the editor and columnist of the Daily Tar Heel. Also, students on occasion have expressed feelings that they had no real control over student government.

UNC's voting record at the National Student Congress should provide enough controversial matter to keep students occupied in criticism and support for some time to come. The students have an obligation to make themselves heard on the major issues discussed at NSA, such as HUAC, Cuba and non-violent action.

Better Use Of Lenoir Hall Needed–Reader

AFTER THE CHANGES in the athletic program following the Moe case last semester, many people thought that athletic control of the University had ended. But taking a meal in the South Room of Lenoir Hall will cause the same old doubts to crop up again.

* * *

A big partition has recently been erected which divides the room in half. Behind the caged-in portion our athletes are served their meals. They don't even have to go through the line; they are served by the busboys.

* * *

A check of the seating situation shortly after noon on Friday revealed a number of empty spaces that could have been used to release the extremly crowded conditions in the rest of Lenoir Hall.

I do not wish to argue whether or not the athletes should be segregated at meal time from the other students, I am willing to leave that question for others to debate. I do think that we are making poor use of badly needed space.

There is no good reason why the athletes could not use their reserved space during narrowly designated times. The space could be used by the rest of the student body at any other time.

Otelia Thinks Letter Insult To Atheletes

THE LETTER "Sacrifice for Squad" in Wednesday's Tar Heel was an insult not only to the Foot Ball and Basket Ball teams, but was insulting to the whole University Community. I am surprised that the Tar Heel published it.

In percentage of games won and lost last year, both athletic teams had a very creditable record.

As for the charge of bribery, only one player accepted a bribe. It is grossly unfair to damn an entire team for the sins of one player.

This blast at both teams was highly uncalled for just at the beginning of the season, when each team, under new head coaches, works and hopes for a successful year.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the players will not let this display of rudeness dampen their spirits. We appreciate the athlete's efforts to reflect credit on the University in the world of sports and entertainment. We are left wondering what contribution Junius Goodman is making to the University. Is winning all the football and basketball games his only criterion of values?

Editor's Ignorance Shocks Ted Harriss

After reading your editorial on deferred rush, I was shocked by your ignorance on the subject.

Here at Chapel Hill we need some sort of deferred rush, and the I.F.C. realizes this fact.

Last spring it was decided to set-up a committee to investigate all possible ways to make deferred rush work at Carolina. This committee is to contact many of the universities operating under deferred rush in order to find out the advantages and disadvantages of the system.

I am sure that the I.F.C. will begin deferred rush at Carolina as soon as it is sure that a plan can be made that will be beneficial not only to the fraternities but to the students who will be coming through rush.

* * *

YOUR PREMATURE suggestion of voluntary deferred rush will do nothing but complicate and confuse the issue at this time.

I think we all realize that this is a problem. However, this problem cannot be solved by jumping blindly into a hasty solution.

Therefore, I feel that anyone who does not fully know and understand this problem as faced by the I.F.C. today, should refrain from such uninformed comments as printed in your editorial today.

Has Athletic Control Ended— And What About Fraternities?

New Student Blasts Fraternities' Silence

AS A RECENT entrant into this university I have come to appreciate and enjoy many of the aspects of "The Carolina Way of Life," but one aspect I neither appreciate or enjoy is the period of fraternity silence, when a potential rushee is allowed no discourse with fraternity men.

I don't understand the reason for this silence period. It seems to me, that since I wish to join a fraternity, I should be able to find out as much about them as possible. I think the best way to accomplish this is to visit the fraternities, talk to the members, and see how they live and work.

* * *

I HAVE BEEN told that I am not allowed to visit and inspect the fraternities because I might be "brainwashed" into joining by the members. I know, if I were a fraternity member, I would not want a boy in my house who was there just because he had been talked into it, and had not made up his mind after careful consideration of everything.

If you look at this from the point of view of the potential fraternity member—what kind of man can be persuaded into joining a fraternity without a complete investigation? This is not the type of boy who should join a fraternity.

I maintain that any man mature enough to come to Carolina should be able to cope with the responsibility of making up his own mind on the question of which fraternity to join.

Non Greek Editor, Are You Still Bitter?

To The Editor:

I have read with great interest the two articles which have appeared recently in your "student publication" concerning the fraternities at Carolina. It is always amazing to me how this decadent system consistently contributes to the campus leadership in Student Government, Athletics, and Class Officers.

Perhaps you have forgotten that each year all fraternities participate in "Help Week," something that the dormitories have yet to accomplish. There is no "community mind" in a fraternity; each member is an individualist and does not follow blindly the thoughts and actions of other members of his fraternity.

* * *

I believe that if you really search your conscience, the real reason that you have taken this consistent stand against the fraternity system is that when you came to Carolina you did not join a fraternity and now you are bitter.

Mr. King, you have "made your bed of pain and you must lie in it." You have no right to take a publication that is supposed to be for all students and to crucify a system that is supported by a large number of Carolina students. While you are free to determine your own editorial policies, please do some research on the issues before you quote a national magazine which was writing on a national plain (sic) and did not take into consideration our local conditions.

Mr. King, we have a fine fraternity system at Carolina that will outlive both you and your cohorts that are trying to tear down a (sic) inherent part of Carolina life. A system that has a grade average consistently higher than the all mens (sic) average and one that has contributed more to making Carolina a great University than any other organization.

"You're Going To Have To Be A Big Man Now"

CHAPEL HILL WEEKLY

He's A Strange Breed Of Cat

By WINFRED GODWIN
Director, Southern Region
Education Board

Hidden behind the impossible disorder in that front office, there might lurk a creative employe.

Or it may be that the student in the back of the classroom, who barely passed for the second year in a row, is not dumb—but creative and frustrated.

* * *

Creative people seem to have a preference for complexity and disorder . . . sometimes they work best out of simple chaos, the University of California's Institute of Persanality Assessment and Research has found. For six years the Institute has been conducting a study of creativity financed by a grant from the Carnegie Corporation. Its results should be of vital interest to our schools and colleges which need to give greater attention to finding and encouraging creative individuals.

* * *

These ceative individuals are an unusual breed of cats. They aren't necessarily the most intelligent, the most capable or the most competent. But they are all fairly intelligent, a Carnegie Corporation report says, and early in their lives they show evidence of a special talent or talents—drawing, mathematics or writing.

Most of them score high on interest tests which point to careers, author-journalists, research scientists.

There is evidence, the Carnegie study found, that creative people are not very interested in small detail, in the practical and the concrete. They seem more concerned with meanings, implications and symbolic equivalents of things and ideas.

* * *

Often the creative person is not a very satisfactory student in school. He isn't particularly fond of group work, he wants to follow his own interests and he wants to be free to set goals for himself which may differ from those of his classmates.

The colleges and universities of the region have a major responsibility to identify and nurture creative students. If originality is not rewarded and encouraged during those years, it may be lost to fields of endeavor which need it badly.

So far a lot of emphasis has been placed on intellectual capability of students, but little attention has been given to other aspects of a personality which point to creativity.

The increasing numbers of students who will enter our colleges in the next 10 years will give added impetus to concentration on the "sound" student who may or may not be original. This mistake will be further compounded unless business, industry and the work-a-day world do something to make the creative person feel more at home in his world.

* * *

Some work practices are devastating to the creative person, the Carnegie study reports. The idea of a time-clock, for example, is stifling to the creative employe. At times he may appear to be doing nothing at all, while at other times he will work for 24 hours without a break and be extremely irritated at someone who interrupts him for anything during that time.

* * *

In today's world, the creative person—whether in school or in society—is prey to a sharp conflict of values. On one hand he must adjust to the integration of the individual into the group and its activities and on the other he must break away from the herd enough to nurture creative talent and individuality.

Southern colleges and universities can help settle this conflict when they recognize creativity and award it its true value. At that point, we will have a double winner—the society which benefits from creativity and the individual free to contribute through his creativity.

SALINGER:

A Fetish Of Privacy

Author J. D. Salinger, who created the lovable Holden Caulfield and made his reputation with Catcher In The Rye, is rippling the stagnant waters with a new book.

But Salinger has the literary buffs stymied.

It is a standing proposition these days that any writer of stories or victim of tragedies immediately becomes the possession of the public. His private life ends abruptly and he becomes an object of prurience, like a nude statue in a public square. Salinger, unlike most authors, defies this rule. He makes a fetish of privacy.

* * *

HIS LITERARY public, particularly the editors of Time Magazine, find his heresy insupportable and have plastered their latest issue with his portrait and a long article on his work. Unable to interview Salinger, the dauntless Times scoured up every item of gossip and record about him, photographed his house, and even unearthed the story that prying neighbors, unable to bridle their curiosity, once trespassed on him while he was absent to peek in the windows.

Time managed to dig up his "I.Q." (104) from an old Manhattan public school. About the only item missing is his brand of toothpaste—a mysterious oversight, in that the neighborhood drugist might have been bribed to tell.

* * *

SALENGER IS NOT alone. William Faulkner, similarly allergic to publicity, has even had to take out his shotgun to keep the publicists away.

It may be crankish of the Salingers and Faulkners to desire privacy in the age of publicity, but it is their right, as much as it is the right of dogcatchers and bootleggers. Maybe writers, all else failing, should be exempted from the homicide laws. That might deter their prying publics a bit.

New CU Flag Goes To Victor Of State Game

A new Consolidated University flag, the first for Carolina, State and WC, will be presented to the winner of the Tar Heel-Wolfpack game Saturday.

Designed by Junior Bill Criswell, a member of the CU student council legislature, the flag was described as 'the most elaborate and beautiful flag we've ever worked on" by the Art Flag & Banner Co., Miami, Fla.

In case of a tie the flag will go to WC.

Criswell said the flag was designed to (1) create an awareness among the students that they are part of a consolidated University (2) create a competition between State and UNC for the betterment of both schools and (3) to make a bigger event of CU day."

"It is hoped that this will become a tradition within the greater University, such as the Victory Bell," said Criswell.

Main Points Of Kennedy's UN Address Include Disarmament, Troika, Space And Colonialism

From DTH Wire Reports

The principal points of President Kennedy's address Monday to the United Nations General Assembly

Disarmament

The United States will present a sweeping plan for "general and complete disarmament" designed to "bridge the gap" between the Western and Russian positions. The plan calls for creation of "machinery to keep the peace as it destroys the machines of war." Included is a sixpoint nuclear disarmament program beginning with an immediate test ban treaty and proceeding by stages through complete destruction of existing stocks of nuclear weapons and the strategic "vehicles" necessary to deliver them.

Berlin

The United States and its Allies are determined to use nuclear weapons if necessary to defend the freedom of West Berlin and Allied access rights to the Communist-encircled city. Negotiations on the crisis would be welcome if Russia agrees to negotiate on terms of "mutual respect and concern for the rights of others." The United States and its partners are "committed to no rigid formula." But Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's proposed peace treaty with Communist East Germany, giving them control over access rights," would be merely a "paper arrangement" of no concern to the Allies.

Troika

Russia's demand for replacement of the U.N. secretary general by a three-nation committee subject to Communist veto would "replace order with anarchy, action with paralysis and confidence with gross confusion." Dag Hammarskjold must be replaced as quickly as possible by an "outstanding civil servant" to keep the world organization on the track.

U.N. Peace Force

The United States wants all U.N. member nations to earmark "specially trained and quickly available" military units to be called on when needed by the world organization to enforce international law and order. It also will propose a "series of steps" to strengthen the ability of the U.N. to settle disputes peacefully.

Colonialism:

This subject should be debated "in full" and not limited to talking about exploitation of "dark skins by light." It should spotlight the "communist empire" where a huge population "lives under governments installed by foreign troops instead of free institutions." The principle of "free choice and the practice of free plebiscites" should apply in all parts of the world.

Southeast Asia:

"The smouldering coals of war" threaten to burst into flame in this area, where the Laos situation has reached the "crucial stage." Laos is being used as a base for Communist infiltration of neighboring South Viet Nam and the danger mounts to other countries in the area. Ways must be found to "protect the small and weak."

U.S. Will Fight:

Every nation "friend or foe" should understand that the United States "has both the will and the weapons to join free men in standing up to their responsibilities." But it looks beyond immediate threats to the prospect of a peaceful world "in which the strong are just and the weak secure and the peace preserved forever."

Outer Space

The U.N. Charter should be amended and extended to "the limits of man's explorations in the universe, reserving outer space or on celestial bodies and opening the mysteries and benefits of space to every nation."

He had been scheduled to speak Tuesday morning but his address was rescheduled as the first one at the afternoon meeting.

Speeches of Yugoslavia and Ghana will be made Tuesday morning. The Netherlands and Ecuador will speak Tuesday afternoon.

Weekends May Start

"Another 'Carolina Weekend' could be established if the Oct. 6 show at Memorial Hall is sucessfully received," said John Barrow, publicity chairman of the University Entertainment Committee, yesterday.

The show, which will be given at 4 p.m. and 8 p.m., will feature Decca's recording stars, the Four Aces; Richiardi, an illustionist with his company of five; Alan Black, a harmonicist with Columbia and Epric record companies; and the Fred Perry orchestra.

First Offering

This show is the first offering of the committee which was organized last spring to provide some sort of entertainment open to all students. Doug Burchardt is the present chairman. The committee plans to have three of four more shows this year.

"If the weekend is a success," said Barrow, "the committee plans to elect sponsors for next year's concert, ask for a bigger budget and give the committee a livelier name.

Unifying Step

"It' a first step towards unifying the campus socially and the continuation of the committee definitely depends on the student response to the concerts." said Barrow.

Tickets are on sale for $2 a ticket at Kemp's, at Y-Court from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. and at Lenoir Hall from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 to 7 p.m. There will also be door sales at the concerts.

Reds Set Up No-Man's-Land Along East Berlin Border; Refugees Continue Escaping

BERLIN (UPI)—Communist bulldozers ground out a 300-foot-wide zone of death on the East Berlin side of the city border Monday, crushing summer houses and garden plots blocking a view of the barbed wire barricade.

A dozen East Berliners fled to the West Monday and another 20 made it to safety during the night but hundreds of others were forced into trucks and driven to temporary quarters in school buildings miles from the border.

West Berliners braced for new Communist pressures following the disclosure that East German Communist leader Walter Ulbricht had flown to Moscow. His last Moscow visit was followed within days by the Aug. 13 sealing of the East-West city border.

Fear New Trouble

New troubles also were feared in the Allied air corridors leading to West Berlin when the Communist Warsaw Pact nations hold maneuvers of their land, sea and air forces "in the territories of the Warsaw Pact members" in the next two months.

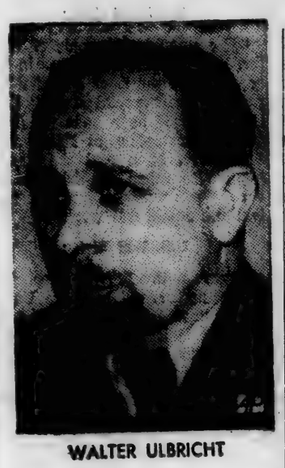
Communist military exercises which involve fighter flights into the air corridors or movement of military vehicles on the Berlin-West German autobahn could lead to incidents with Allied traffic, Western sources said.

U.S. Secretary of the Air Force Eugene M. Zuckert is scheduled to arrive in Berlin Wednesday for a two-day visit with Gen. Truman H. London, commander-in-chief of the U.S. Air Force in Europe. It was believed they would confer with American officials here over possible Communist pressure on Allied rights in the air corrdors.

West German President Heinrich Luebke conferred for 80 minutes Monday with Gen. Lucius D. Clay, President Kennedy's personal representative here, but details of their conversation were not made public.

Luebke said later as he flew back to West Germany he was confident that one could be optimistic about American policy toward Germany despite present public confusion.

Luebke was referring to a weekend uproar in the West German press over press reception remarks by Clay about the existence of two Germanies. West German officials feared the remarks indicated a switch in U.S. policy towards Germany although Clay said later U.S. policy was unchanged.



WALTER ULBRICHT

Says Attitude Harder

Luebke said the attitude of the United States on the Berlin question had become harder than before.

West German police said more than a dozen East Berliners fled to the West Monday as Communist police continued to clear out houses along the city border and to bulldoze strips of land behind their concrete-and-barbed wire walls.

The Communists aim to establish a 100-yard wide "death strip" the length of the 25-mile border to end even the trickle of escapees. They had asked West Berliners not to approach within 300-feet of the border from the West side but the West Berliners have ignored the order.

Three women and a child ducked Vopo peoples police bullets Monday and scrambled through the barbed wire to safety minutes before a crane smashed the summer house in which they had been living.

The Communists sent road building machinery through an area of small garden plots along the border Monday, smashing the summer houses and woodsheds and tearing down trees to establish a clear field of fire behind the barbed wire.

Two of the helpers the Vopos drafted to move out furniture and belongings joined the escapees as West Berliners cut the barbed wire and helped them through.

West Berlin police said another 20 East Berliners fled to safety Sunday night as the Communists began evacuating families from their houses on Bernauer Strasse. One of these was a 77-year-old woman who dropped her cat to safety and then leaped to freedom in a fireman's net after a tug of war between a West Berlin youth holding her leg and a Vopo holding her arm.

Queen Elizabeth Opens Parliament

LONDON (UPI)—Queen Elizabeth opened the British Commonwealth Parliamentary conference in Westminster Monday with an appeal for "tolerance and understanding."

"In this modern age," the Queen said, "the strength of the commonwealth family does not lie in bonds forged by formal instruments, nor in common ancestry, not in pursuing the same political line.

"It springs from the knowledge that we all share a lively concern for individual freedom and all the machinery which makes this possible," she said.

LONDON (UPI)—London Post office worker Bill Davis lost his wallet two months ago as he collected mail. He said Monday it has turned up in a mailbag in Sydney Australia and was returned to him contents intact.

Republicans Praise Kennedy's UN Speech

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congressional Republicans put aside criticism of President Kennedy's foreign policy Monday and joined Democrats in praising his speech to the United Nations as a road map toward peace.

Applauding Kennedy for laying out a "magnificent hope" of peace, Senate GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen said the future still depended on the Communists response.

The Illinois Republican, who has criticized administration foreign policy in the past, especially praised Kennedy's firm stand on Berlin and on the need for a one-man replacement for the late U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold.

Sen. Hugh Scott, Pa., former GOP national chairman, said the President had challenged the conscience of mankind. He said the United Nations could be saved as an instrument of peace if leaders of the "uncertain nations" faced Kennedy's proposals with maturity and wisdom.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y. said Kennedy "reflected the essentials of the bipartisan foreign policy and will accordingly get united support at home." He said the speech "should put at rest any question as to U.S. determination to defend freedom's fundamental rights by all the force it will command, including nuclear means if need be."

Keating Disappointed

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R-N.Y. said the speech "bore the imprint of responsible statesmanship." He expressed disappointment, however, that the President failed to mention the question of admitting Red China to the United Nations.

Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey charged Sunday that Miller and other Republicans were dividing and confusing the nation in a time of grave crisis in an irresponsible effort to win votes.

He voiced support for the President's views on Berlin, disarmament and Russia's proposed troika —or three-man—U.N. secretariat. Mansfield reiterated his suggestion that Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru or Mexican President Adolfo Lopez Mateos be considered as secretary general, saying Russia probably wouldn't dare challenge men of their stature.

Humphrey Praises Speech

Assistant Senate Democratic Leader Hubert H. Humphrey, Minn., termed Kennedy's speech "a new high in statesmanship" which gave hope to the world organization "when it literally was on the critical list."

Acting Speaker John W. McCormack, D-Mass., said Kennedy showed that the road to peace must be through disarmament, carried out step by step. He said Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev must recognize that Russians also want to live without fear of nuclear extermination.

Acting House Democratic Leader Carl Albert, Okla., said Kennedy's Berlin stand would have the complete support of Congress and the American people.

Rep. John J. Rhodes, R-Ariz., a key member of the House Republican Policy Committee, applauded the speech as "a very thorough and apparently forceful defense of our position on Berlin and the United Nations."

Rep. Roman C. Pucinski, D-Ill., said Kennedy had given mankind "a new charter of hope. . . around which those dedicated to freedom can rally."

Sen. Wayne Morse, D-Ore., a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the address had renewed the hope of the world for peace.

Sen. Gale McGee, D-Wyo., expressed hope that other statesmen would match Kennedy's determination to save the United Nations and seek disarmament.

Female Ghost Tickles Babies In Apartment

NOTTINGHAM, England (UPI) —England which has reported more ghosts over the years than any other country has a new one—a woman in pigtails who goes around tickling babies.

Tenants of an apartment house here believe the ghost is that of a woman who killed herself there several years ago. They said she spooks them by:

Showing herself only to women.

—Moving articles from cupboards.

Leslie Weatherill, one of the tenants, said flatly: "We are moving out. We have only lived here a week but my wife has seen the ghost twice."

Reginald King, another tenant, said his child began to laugh as it slept in its cot.

UNC Footballers Enter Last Week Of Practice Before Seasonal Opener Here This Saturday

Red-Shirts Run Wolfpack Plays; Wally Dunham Out Of Hospital

By HARRY W. LLOYD
DTH Sports Editor

Coach Jim Hickey's footballers swung into their last week of practice before the season opener against N. C. State with a lot of spirit, a lot of determination, and a lot to do.

In a scrimmage against the reserves, they stuck to the ground mostly with quarterback Ray Farris at the helm. The red shirts worked on State plays, to perfect them for operation against the varsity defense. Quarterbacks Sandy Kinney and Jimmy Eason playing the role of ace Wolfpack quarterback Roman Gabriel.

Big tackle Tony Hennessey was working on kickoffs at the start of the practice. The 255-pounder got some long boots down into the end zone, but coaches expect that he can get them even further.

A familiar figure recurned to the sidelines, but wasn't able to go out on the field where he would have liked to be. Halfback Wally Dunham, one of the sensations of spring practice, was just released from the hospital following surgery for a knee injury.

Dunham was on crutches, with his leg in a cast. He said that his doctors were pleased with his progress, and that if it heals properly, the cast might be off within a month. He hopes to be able to play in the last two or three ball games.

Baseballers Need Manager; Salesmen Meet Tonight

Baseball coach Walter Rabb needs managers for both his varsity and freshman baseball teams. He needs them for the present fall practice and for the baseball season in the spring. Anyone interested should contact Coach Rabb at Woollen Gym or Emerson Stadium or freshman coach Bruce Crump at Emerson Stadium between 2 and 5 p.m.

There will be a meeting tonight for all boys who are interested in selling football programs this season. It will be held in 304 Woollen Gmy at 7:30, as Athletic Association secretary Joe Hilton announced yesterday.

Maris Has Five Games Left In Which To Surpass Ruth

NEW YORK (UPI)—It's now or never for Roger Maris, the New York Yankees' homer-hitting star who has only five games left in which to hit No. 60.

Maris and his Yankee teammates began a season-ending five-game home stand Tuesday night against the Baltimore Orioles, play Baltimore again on Wednesday and against the Boston Red Sox beginning Friday night.

If Maris, who hit No. 59 against the Orioles at Baltimore on Sept. 20, is going to match the immortal Babe Ruth's all-time record of 60 home runs in a single season, he'll have to do it some time this week.

Ruth his is 60 homrs during a 154-game season in 1927. The Yanks already have played 157 games and if Maris equals or beats Ruth's mark, it wil be entered in the record book with a separate designation, according to a ruling by Commissioner Ford Frick.

Odds Both For And Against

The odds that Maris can top the mark might be considered both in his favor and against him—depending on how you analyze past performances in Yankee Stadium.

First of all, of his 59 homers this season, 28 have been hit at home where he has an easy target down the right field foul line. But in 16 previous games against the Orioles he has hit a total of only two homers—one at Yankee Stadium and one at Baltimore's Memorial Stadium.

Maris isn't the least bit optimistic about his chances. In fact, he doesn't think he'll equal or top the record because of "the way they're pitching me now."

"The only way I'll ever get to hit another home run is if one of those pitchers makes a mistake and fouls up," says the tired Yankee slugger.

May Get Good Pitch

"I might get a good pitch to hit by accident in the next five games, but I doubt it. They're keeping the ball on the outside and trying to make me go after bad pitches."

And chasing bad pitches is exactly what Maris did in the weekend games with the Red Sox at then close with three single games Boston's Fenway Park. Since hitting his 59th homer, Roger has managed only two singles in 13 times at bat.

"I got only one good ball to hit Sunday," Maris maoned, "and I popped it up. I was so surprised at seeing even one decent pitch that I could hardly believe it."

Bert Wilder, a tackle from Greensboro, is probably the best lineman on the North Carolina State football team. He stands 6-3 and weighs 225 pounds. Wilder, a junior, was the state heavyweight wrestling champion as a high schooler.

Big, Strong Line Performs In Front Of Roman Gabriel

North Carolina State, losers to Wyoming's Cowboys Saturday, roll into Chapel Hill this weekend to do battle with Coach Jim Hickey's untested Tar Heels.

All-American candidate Roman Gabriel is the big man in the Wolfpack offense. The amazing Mr. Gabriel completed 10 of 22 passes against Wyoming for a total of 115 yards and had at least two passes dropped by the receivers. He turned in a great performance and lived up to pre-season All-American predictions despite the 15-14 loss.

An experienced line in front of "Gabe" could be the key to a successful season for the highly rated Wolfpack. Experienced personnel returns from the 1960 team at all line positions except center. There are four letter winners at tackle, five at guard and three at the end positions.

Maravich and Wilder are presently holding down the first team berths. Maravich, a 6-4, 225-pound senior from Bower Hill, Pennsylvania, is a place-kick specialist in addition to his line chores. The big tackle has already been drafted by the professional Philadelphia Eagles. Wilder, a 6-3, 225-pound junior is the best all-around lineman on the squad and could easily be one of the best in the ACC. Bert is unusually fast for a lineman and "can run with our backs" according to Coach Earle Edwards.

Palandrani, a service returnee who won letters in 1956 and 1957, and Jake Shaffer are no pushovers at the second string berths either. Shaffer will be remembered by ardent Carolina fans as the gent who kicked the winning field goal in State's 3-0 victory over the Tar Heels last year. Shaffer is a 6-foot, 230-pounder and hails from Williamsport, Pennsylvania. Palandrani, also a senior, weighs in at 224 and stands 6-1. He has been drafted by the Cleveland Browns.

Joe Bushofsky and Graham Singleton head the quintet of letterman guards. Bushofsky stands 5-10, weighs 210 and hails from Pittsburgh. Singleton, also 5-10, weighs 224 and hails from Washington, N. C. Both men are seniors. Kent Morton, a senior, and Hazel Matthews and Harry Puckett, both juniors, are the other letter winners at guard.

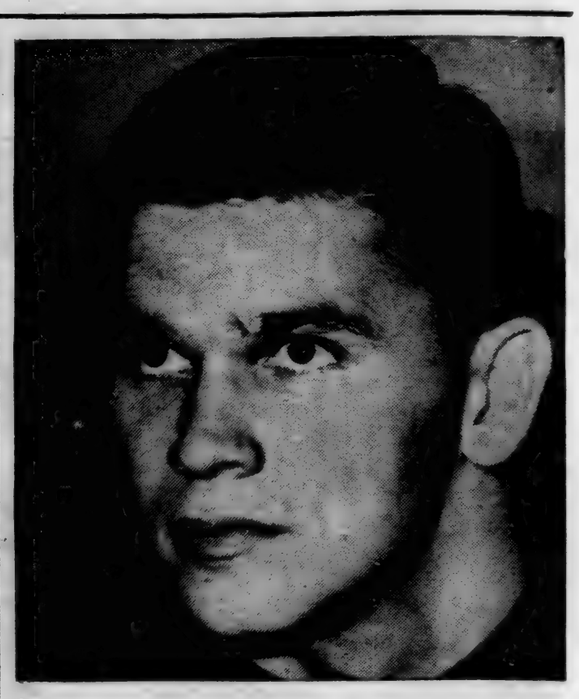
Moving outside to the end positions, Johnny Morris, 6-1, 190, and Dennis Kroll, 5-11 190 are the number one men. Morris led the Wolfpack in pass receiving last season with 18 catches for 218 yards and one touchdown. Kroll, a tough defensive man was one of the major reasons State's defensive end play was outstanding in 1960. Kroll is from Sutersville, Pennsylvania and Morris is from Galax, Virginia. Both men are seniors.

The third monogram returnee at end is John Gill, a 5-11, 205-pounder from Clearfield, Pennsylvania. He won letters in 1959 and 1960 and is used mainly as a defensive specialist.

At the center spot, Walt Kudryan, a junior is presently on the first team. The 6-2, 210-pounder from McKees Rocks, Pennsylvania, won the berth with a good spring practice. Sam Raneri, a senior who lettered last year at fullback is now at center. He performed so well as a linebacker last year that the Wolfpack coaching staff switched the 6-foot, 205-pounder to the middle position.

So, big "Gabe" has a very capable line in front of him, which averages 212 pounds. With the line's pass protection and Gabriel's rifle-like passes, Coach Earle Edwards can boast one of the finest offensive teams in the nation. How well the defense comes through will be a big factor in State's hopes for a "jackpot" season.

DAMASCUS, U.A.R. (UPI)—The Arab League announced Monday it had added the Liberian ship White Star and the Greek ships Despro and Samos to its blacklist for allegedly violating Arab boycott regulations against Israel.



Joe Craver, a junior from Shelby, will be in the starting lineup here Saturday when the Tar Heels play State. Craver, whose job is to replace Rip Hawkins at the center post, is the holder of a Morehead Scholarship.

Shrine Bowl Contest At NCS Friday Night

North Carolina's Tar Babies and N. C. State's Wolflets kick off the freshman football season Friday night in the annual Shrine Bowl game, a benefit contest for crippled children. Game time at State's Riddick Stadium is 8:00.

Last season the baby Wolfpack launched an undefeated season by dropping the UNC frosh 28-14. Wake Forest, Duke, Virginia, and South Carolina all fell to the State yearlings as they rolled to a 5-0 record and the Big Four freshman championship.

The Carolina frosh compiled a 2-3 mark in 1960, defeating Wake Forest and Virginia an dropping contests to Duke and Clemson, in addition to the State frosh.

Both teams have been holding daily drills since the first week of September and should be well-prepared, both physically and mentally, for Friday's clash.

Johnny Clements, coach of the State freshmen, has still not decided on a definite starting line-up for the game, but has singled out Glen Sasser and Steve Parker, a pair of tackles for outstanding play in scrimmages. Clements points out that the Wolflets have no apparent super-stars as did the 1960 crew that bowled over all its opposition.

The Wolflet line does not have the depth that Clements would like for it to have, and this has been his chief concern recently. The competition is still keen at almost every position in both the line and backfield and his starting line-up probably won't be definite until later this week.

Coach George Barclay has a number of promising boys on his freshman squad for 1961. He hasn't chosen his starting lineup for Friday's game, but presently has the following first team line-up: Ends, Christian Hanburger and Frank Gallagher; tackles, John Hill and Bob Starczewski; guards, Clint Eudy and Paul Fedor; center, Jay Malobicky; quarterback, Ron Tuthill; fullback, Ken Willard; and halfbacks, Tommy Ward and Dave Braine.

MOSCOW (UPI)—Land, air and naval forces of Communists Warsaw Treaty powers will stage exercises in October and November, Tass reported Monday.

The official Soviet news agency said the exercises will be held in Warsaw treaty countries. It said the object of the exercise was to "check the results of this year's training."

Film Group Opens With Surrealistic, Existentialist Bit

A surrealistic short and an existentialist feature will open the 1961-62 season of the UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society Monday night in Carroll Hall.

"The World of Paul Delvaux," directed by Henri Storck with music composed by Andre Souris, the celebrated Belgian composer, and written by the French surrealist poet Paul Eluard, has been described in Unesco's "Films on Art" as the most beautiful film on art yet produced. Storck, Eluard and Souris have brought to life the universe of Belgium's painter. In the space of eleven minutes, the film takes the spectator on a descent into hell and invites him to explore the symbolic mirrors in which a man's conscience is reflected.

"Don't Flee"

The feature, "No More Fleeing," directed in Spain by the 24-year-old Viennese avant-garde director Herbert Vesely with German government funds, deals with the symptoms of contemporary decline: the murder without cause and beyond moral assessment. It analyses the states of a meaningless existence, a hopeless automotism of everyday life against which no flight can be successful, and lays bare those moments which lead to explosion or discharge by murder.

Introducing the film will be the Rev. Robert Seymour, Methodist student chaplain. Both films have won prizes at international film festivals and critical acclaim from film reviews in many countries. Cinema 16, New York, the world's largest film society with a membership of well over 10,000, is distributing them in the U.S.

Meet Locally

Following the showing, the Society's new Cine Club will meet in a local restaurant to discuss the films. Reservations must be made for membership, which is limited to 60 people.

Tickets for the new film season are available from committee members, the campus YMCA, or by writing to the Society at 508 N. Columbia Street (942-1033). Memberships for the full season are $8 for sixteen programs or $4.00 for the fall series. Couples may purchase full series memberships at $14 or two fall ones for $7. High school students may join for $6 full season, $3 for fall. Showings will be in Carroll Hall twice monthly, Monday, at 8 p.m.

Like to visit the United Nations at Thanksgiving? Would you enjoy spending one afternoon a week entertaining the children in a Raleigh orphanage? Does a seminar on the Southern Student and Integration interest you?

At 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Carroll Hall the YMCA Cabinet will hold an open meeting for men students to discuss the programs of the YMCA's various committees.

The YMCA has 11 committees, eight of which work with co-ordinate committees in the YWCA.

The U.N. Education Committee sponsors two trips to the U.N. headquarters a year. One is at Thanksgiving and the other in April. The groups spend three or four days in New York attending meetings at the U.N. and talking with delegations. This committee also takes part in the Model Assembly which was held at Duke University last year.

The Community Works Committee works through Chapel Hill and Raleigh community agencies. Members usually spend one day a week helping in hospitals or children's homes.

The Foreign Student Committee picks up where the orientation committee leaves off. This committee is the next series of examinations for Peace Corps applicants to be given October 7.

These examinations, the program for the year and committee policies will be discussed at the organizational meeting at noon Thursday upstairs in Lenoir Hall.

Students interested in the Peace Corps are asked to attend this meeting, said Steve Lindell.

Campus Committee

Last year the Campus Peace Corps Committee conducted a survey which contributed to legislation of the proposal, submitted resolutions to the national office and sponsored lectures by people close to the program. Also, several committee members attended an NSA-sponsored Peace Corps conference in Washington last spring.

Recently, two UNC students have been selected for training in the Peace Corps.

VIENNA, Austria, Sept. 25 — Scholarships for undergraduate study in Europe during the academic year 1962-1963 were announced by the Institute of European Studies, a Chicago-headquartered, non-profit educational organization specializing in overseas study for American college students.

The scholarships are valued from $1,950 to $2,350, and provide a full year of study at one of the Institute's three study centers, Vienna, Freiburg (West Germany), and Paris. Students in each center may choose from a wide range of liberal arts courses. Sophomore and junior courses are conducted in the English language at the Vienna and Paris centers or in the language of the host country. Freiburg classes are taught in German and open only to juniors.

Intensive language instruction is provided to all students, Bosshart said. Other special courses are also available.

Di-Phi Society Rejects Berlin Free City Bill

At its first meeting of the year Monday night, the UNC Di-Phi Society defeated a resolution advocating the creation of a united free city of Berlin.

The Campus Peace Corps will have a new outlook this year.

The Peace Corps group was formed last year in response to President Kennedy's appeal for college support of a youth service corps. Now that the Peace Corps bill has been signed into law by the President, the committee's emphasis will switch from supporting the idea to participating in the program.

The committee's tentative plans for the year include:

Carolina's Future

Calmly unaware of the importance of the issue, Carolina students are nestled with carefree ease in the center of activity concerning the coming bond issue.

The nearly six million dollars contingent on the eight items involving the University can make or break her future. If these issues pass, we can keep abreast; if they are defeated the future is uncertain.

Passage is far from a sure thing. The people or North Carolina have yet to be made completely aware of a multitude of facts concerning the issue.

Clarification of the points will help to insure passage, and the students at Carolina must carry the weight of explaining them.

There are many misconceptions that must be clarified and explained to point up the validity of every item on the proposed issue. Carolina must show its need, and there is no better way to show this need than through the students for whom the University exists. Over and over again it must be explained that passage will not mean an increase in taxes. No one can better explain this to parents than their sons and daughters at Carolina.

Letters must be written, representatives contacted, confidence built. We must explain and explain. And when the explanation seems clear, we must explain again.

The issue must be stripped of partisan overtones, the worth of the items on the proposal pointed out to Democrats and Republicans alike.

Every item, particularly those concerning education, were included because of a definite need. This must be emphasized.

President Friday, Chancellor Aycock and other officials are working with strength born of intense dedication to put the University's needs before the eye of the public. But their strength and hard work are almost ineffectual in the area where effectiveness must exist: with the people of North Carolina who will vote yes or no on Carolina's future.

The prime responsibility on this front belongs to the student. Every in-state student represents affirmative votes if he or she will but ask his parents to support the sale of bonds when the votes comes in November.

Yet, the bulk of us show only a passing interest, a faintly felt hope that "it will pass."

In the coming weeks, students will be asked to put forth at least a minimum effort toward selling the University.

We cannot fail to respond.

Britain's Changing Attitude

A mass protest against nuclear arms in London's Parliament Square conceivably might pick up more participants now that the United States has resumed testing.

But neither such an eventuality, nor the cries against the jailing of Bertrand Russell, the 89-year-old philosopher and anti-nuclear leader for failing to keep the peace, should mislead us as to British opinion.

There has been considerable agitation against our stationing of Polaris-armed submarines in Scotland and there will be some opposition to our resumption of testing. But there is an evident swing away from such an attitude—undoubtedly contributed to by Russia's unilateral resumption.

Significantly, the British Foreign Office was sending a message supporting our resumption of tests before most Americans even knew that we had done so.

But an even more meaningful indication of the change in outlook came in the recent annual British Trade Unions Conference. Last year, Labor Party Leader Hugh Gaitskill was soundly trounced in votes passing resolutions calling for banning the A-bomb and keeping the Polaris subs out of British waters. This year, it was just the reverse.

A year ago, the Labor Party was so split on the issue that it seemed unlikely ever to be a potent force in the country. But now Mr. Gaitskill has brought the party back together, and while it might not unseat the Conservatives at the next election, it has chances that are improving.

What the neutrals, so-called, will be saying about our new tests is a different matter. After all, though, after Belgrade, does it really matter?

Roses

Belatedly, the Daily Tar Heel would like to recognize the members of this year's Orientation Committee. Orientation this year was a prodigious job well done, and stands as a firm argument against any plans to curtail it in the future.

The suggestion that the program would benefit from an added emphasis on the academic side of Carolina living is a suggestion well taken. But a change in approach is not difficult to effect when participants work as deligently and effectively as did the counselors this year.

A vote of thanks is due each of them as well as to the committee.

'Apathy Still Exists, NSA Not Typical'

Madison, Wisc.
Ladies and Gentlemen of the Campus:

This is to inform you that the National Student Association (NSA) does not represent you, despite what you have been told. Its pronouncements and stands on issues do not reflect your views and opinions. The people who come to the Congresses, where NSA policy is formed, are not representatives of their student body. The five national officers and ten staff men who "execute" policy from NSA's rickety four-story building in Philadelphia likewise do not represent you.

In short, although NSA is a confederation of student governments with a collective attendance of 1.3 million students, it is NOT typical. It does not represent you. And it's all your fault, you apathetic bums, you.

(s) Steven Roberts, Editor
The Harvard Crimson
Carey McWilliams, Jr.
Professor of Government
Oberlin College

THE ABOVE LETTER—as a letter—is a phony. It does not exist, except as here imagined. But its contents are not phony; its contents are a purely arbitrary compilation o fsome of the views of Roberts and McWilliams as they appear—stated and implied—in an article by them entitled "Student Leaders and Campus Apathy," which appears in The Nation of Sept 16.

The article is an incisive evaluation of what NSA is and is not, where NSA has been and where it is going, and of what Conservation is and is not. If you have the time, its two-and-a-half pages merit a first-iand reading.

Besides those stated and implied views included in the imaginary letter, here are some particularly pertinent excerpts:

"Galloping apathy still dominates most American college students . . . (so) . . . NSA IS NOT typical. It is an elite of interested students, awakening to a world they did not make, but world they want to change. This has not always been so.

* * *

"FOR MOST OF its fourteen-year history, NSA devoted itself to the issues which concerned its member student governments: college parking, home-coming dances, women's hours, etc. It did so largely from necessity, because its claims to legitimacy rested on these student governments, which had virtually complete freedom to withdraw their colleges from NSA when dissatisfied with its policies.

"Contemporary collegiate student governments are, to put it mildly, a poor vehicle for transforming political awareness. They reflect the desire of the college administrator to "avoid difficulties" at all costs by eliminating the student from all areas of controversy which might "reflect on the university." (Note: The reference is to universities in general and—experience has shown—is most inaccurate where UNC is concerned.)

"There is a close interaction between student government under these conditions and student apathy. The banality of student politics repels the student; the absence of student criticism and interest leaves student governments in the hands of those who find playtime bureaucracy and homiletics about alma mater to be congenial pursuits.

* * *

"IT WAS THESE GOVERNMENTS that sent delegates to the NSA Congress; and the delegates annually rose in revolt against whatever broader policies had ben pursued by national officers, threatening to withdraw or to form rival associations.

"Under such circumstances, even the most far-sighted national officer was likely to develop an ethic of cautious prudence and "responsibility." This led to endless compromises, and a pandering to the uninspired interests of campus political regimes.

"The top staff of NSA realized that it was not truly representative. Consequently, if tried even harder to please, and largely submerged any trace of boldness or imagination it had in the silence of the times—a silence punctuated only occasionally by a boisterous football cheer or a shrill female scream.

* * *

"THE LAST TWO years have seen an already much-discussed "awakening of the silent generation. The sit-ins in the South, sympathy pickets and selective buying in the North, protests against the House Committee on Un-American Activities and compulsory ROTC, the campaign for repeal of the loyalty oath and disclaimer affidavit in the National Defense Education Act, and enthusiastic support for the Peace Corps all came in a rush.

"There was definitely a stirring, a reawakening interest. In addition to the protest, a rash of campus political parties . . . sprang up. So did a number of new magazines devoted to political thought . . .

"NSA mirrored the change, but not because it had become representative of the American student (the large majority of American students remain unaware and unconcerned). There was, however, a growing interest among the leaders who actually are NSA and form its policy at the annual Congress. For the first time, the association took stands on such issues as HUAC, the Peace Corps, Algeria, Cuba and nuclear testing.

"THE STIMULATION of the unique student protests aroused NSA to take positive stands on important questions, but in doing so it was acting not as the National Student Association, but as a conscious group of student leaders, far removed from the sentiments of their campuses and constituency.

"The value to those who have participated has ben immense, but they are few. NSA has almost completely failed to transport the initial enthusiasm of the "movement" back to the campus, largely because of the understandable concern of idealists for the moral content of issues rather than the structure of social and educational power or the day-to-day realities of student life.

"This is where NSA stood as the fourteenth National Student Congress began (in Madison, Wisc.) The difference this year was the conservative "challenge," which forced NSA leaders to take a long look at the association."

NSA's newly-elected president, Ed Garvey, "emphasized the need for bringing the experience of a Congress—the deliberations and, most important, the defense of an ideal in the face of strong opposition—to all students. This can only be done, he said, 'by structuring the Congress so that delegates won't leave and forget what has happened, but will go back to their campuses, fight for the stands they have taken, and translate policy into specific programs.'

"SYMBOLIC OF NSA's renewed interest in educational problems was a resolution condemning the theory of in loco parentis as restrictive to the full intellecual and social growth of the student. This doctrine, which gives the college legal authority to act as a "parent," forces the student into a dependent relationship with the school, rather than the beneficial mutual give and take of an intellectual community.

"NSA, after years of frustration, has finally emerged as a voice, if not of the American student, then of the American student leader. The question is now whether it can translate the enthusiasm of a few into a device for awakening the still "silent" American college community."

"The Question Is, Would It Be Proper For Us To Take Sides?"

NORMAN E. SMITH

If Choice Comes, May Be War

Most Americans in viewing the overall world situation are now beginning to realize that the U. S. may be forced to choose between surrender and war. Since the end of World War II we have seen an increasing hostility on the part of the U.S.S.R.

America and her allies have tried to open avenues of peace between Russia and the U.S. but all attempts have seemed to end in futility. If there can be no accommodation between ourselves and the Communists, then the choice of war or surrender is inevitable.

There is no comfort for the concerned in the fact that the surrender may be either gradual or subtle, for in world politics (contrary to popular U. S. opinion) it is not "how you play the game, but whether you win or lose." The stakes of the game are survival, and it is on this fundamental issue of survival that the choice of war or surrender will rest.

* * *

THE KREMLIN may be hoping that the choice will be one of gradual, subtle and painless surrender. But if Mr. Krushchev were to examine the opinions of the youth of this country today, I believe he would find a substantial tide of feeling: that if we can obtain the peace which we seek and to which our policy is dedicated, then we must fight.

There is a gnawing fear that we may lose our basic rights in Berlin, that the Communist offensive will continue agfression in South East Asia, and the U.N. will become not an instrument of peace, but a kind of international discussion group or forum.

* * *

EVEN THE MOST dedicated liberal must be frustrated at the Soviet's refusal to end nuclear testing and rearmament. But the frustration goes much deeper to the belief that the reaching of a peace between East and West is futile. It is from this futility and this bitter realization that one turns toward a new and fresh intellectual force which holds that there must be no accommodation with the Soviets.

If Mr. Khrushchev or anyone underestimates this undercurrent of opinion, he may find that the U. S. has found the door to peace closed, and only the door to war or surrender open.

'There are many Americans who no doubt believe surrender a better alternative to wan, but there are far more who will never permit the "grandchildren to live under communism." If the choice must be made, then it will be war.

'Relaxed Psychological State' Ahead For Schoolroom Johnny

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI)—The schoolroom of the future will create in Johnny a "relaxed psychological condition" that will turn his mind to long divsion instead of to the old swimming hole.

"Schools today are being designed from the human standpoint," Dr. John W. Gilliland, University of Tennessee education professor, said today. "We are trying to construct them to bring out the best in people."

Gilliland is director of the university's school planning laboratory. The laboratory was set up three years ago to help southeastern U. S. school systems get the most for their money in building construction, instructional aids and equipment and school sites. Gilliland calls them "working school buildings."

* * *

THE SCHOOL of the future—"the emerging school program"—will be a compact, air-conditioned, square-shaped building, circling a recreation area, Gilliland said. The classrooms will be in warm colors, will have more comfortable furniture and will be flexible in size because of sturdy, sliding, sound-proof partitions. Liberal use will be made of carpeting to cut distracting noise and create a "more relaxed psychological condition, conducive to learning."

"Now, we're paying more attention to what the building itself does to people, psychologically," he said.

The laboratory, which makes its services available free, although most systems contribute to the grant-awarding organization, presently has or is near agreement on projects in Atlanta and Fulton County, Ga., Harlan, Ky., and Kingsport, Alcoa, Greenville Rockford and Chattanooga, Tennessee.

* * *

ALABAMA'S AUBURN University provides much of the enginering and architectural advice. The laboratory coordinates local efforts "to define a program which looks ahead, then interpret the program while encouraging new trends."

In one county, Gilliland estimates the laboratory's suggestions saved about $25,000 for a system, which had three new schools constructed.

Reflections

With the current craze of fall-out shelters sweeping the country, the old cliche, "He who goes lowest, builds safest," becomes all too true.

DTH Forum

Dear Sir:

Tonight, when I returned to my room, I saw posted on the door of the "Ram's Room" in Cobb Dormitory, a sign which read as follows: " 'Ram's Room'—Temporarily closed due to the administration's (South Building) lack of informed imagination and confidence in the Student Government." The sign bore the signature of the president of Cobb Dormitory, Richard Burrows.

I was a little confused to say the least, for when I came to the University two weeks ago as a freshman for orientation, I was lectured enumerable times on how much faith the administration puts in the students, i.e. the Honor System, the Honor Council, and the Student Government. I would like to know then, if the administration places so much faith into the hands of the students, why this administration is now stepping into the bounds of the Student Government.

mittee began a program last year of having Chapel Hill families adopt a foreign student. Once a week the committee and foreign students have supper meetings at Lenoir Hall.

The Human Relations Committee organized a seminar of the Southern Student and Integration last December. The speaker was Edward P. Morgan, radio news commentator. Students from most schools in the state attended.

The Campus Chest Committee raises funds through the Campus Carnival in the Spring and contributions from individuals. Last year the money was given to the World University Service, the Goettingen Exchange program and the Mental Health Association of North Carolina.

Scale Model Of Chapel Hill Rises In Ackland Basement

By Nancy Barr

In a cluttered workroom in the basement of Ackland a city is rising—Chapel Hill in miniature.

Constructed in plastic, the tiny scale model is an accurate architectural and topographical model of the UNC campus proper and surrounding environs.

With the tiny blocks and bits of plastic Director Frank Meldau and his three co-workers, David Kitzmiller, John Stockard and Anna Robbins, have rebuilt the campus on a scale of 1/50 of an inch to one foot.

From the stadium to the planetarium, the model includes every structure visible on the UNC campus as well as a few buildings still in the planning stage. On the layout the Ehringhaus and Burton Craige dormitories, Coker Hall (botany), Toy-Dey (foreign languages), the public health building and the additions to Hill and Swain Halls are completed and in the proper locations.

Hand-Cut Levels

Each topographical level, carefully cut by hand, equals a two-foot contour interval. Since the layout includes a 280-foot variance in levels, the highest point on the model is made of 145 different hand-carved levels.

The scale model has 110 major buildings, not including the Memorial Hospital complex. Each of these university-owned buildings is reconstructed accurately in shape, scale color and design. Each column, window and door are visible on the tiny buildings.

Even UNC trees, parking lots, paths and streets will be included on the model. Over 2000 miniature trees, made of lichen, wire, glue and green spray paint have been fashioned already. The parking lots and streets will be painted in an asphalt color.

Besides the major buildings, the scale model includes 300 minor buildings in the downtown Chapel Hill area, nearby residential areas and Victory Village. For the most part these buildings are accurate in shape and scale, but Victory Village is also painted in the actual colors of the various living units.

Major Undertaking

The scale model, which measures about 14x16 feet, is a major undertaking for Meldau who has been working on it for almost a year. Before the actual construction beban, aerial photographs of the campus and original blueprints of all the university buildings had to be found or especially made. Buildings like the Monogram Club and private homes for which there were no blueprints available had to be accurately measured and planned.

Once the scale model is completed, it will be used in the long-range planning of the physical growth of the university. Architects and officials of the university will be able to see readily the ground areas and locations of the buildings as well as the land levels on which new buildings must be constructed.

Various officials of the university have already seen the model, but its first public debut will not be until October when it will be displayed at the North Carolina Trades Fair in Charlotte. After several scheduled tours, the model will be returned to UNC where it will be on public display.

Pre-Season Prospect List Is Named

CHICAGO—Three members of last year's first-team All-America spearhead the pre-season list of prospects for the 1961 team to be selected by the American Football Coaches Association.

Fullback Bob Ferguson of Ohio State, halfback Ernie Davis of Syracuse, and guard Joe Romig of Colorado were leaders in the early balloting by 2,000 college coaches, it was announced by Jack Curtice, Stanford University head coach and AFCA president.

Eastman Kodak Company will sponsor the 1961 All-America and present Kodak Awards honoring the Coach of the Year from a major and a small college for the second consecutive year.

The 1961 squad of the original and oldest All-America, started in 1889 by Walter Camp, will be based on careful evaluation of each player's complete season performance, including the slow-motion analysis of many game movies. The widespread exchange of game movies will give every coach maximum opportunity to select the outstanding players in all areas.

Curtice stressed that these pre-season selections were determined by practice and previous game performances and that, in previous seasons, many All-America players have not been listed in the early balloting.

Coaches will nominate again in mid-season and end-of-the-season polls. The final ballot will be reviewed by the All-America Board of Coaches.

Preliminary list of All-America nominees are:

Chi-Psi Beta Game Tops Murals Play

By John Montague

Tight defenses and impotent offenses marked the opening day of the 1961 Fraternity Blue tag football season. Seven shutouts were registered out of the nine games played, and no team tallied more than 20 points. The Chi Psi-Beta skirmish ended in a scoreless tie, the Chi Psi's winning in overtime by pushing the ball into Beta territory and keeping it there. Other low-scoring games saw Sigma Nu edge past Sigma Chi, 6-0 on Skip Dunn's second half td; KA blank ZBT, 6-0 with J. Stonestreet scoring; and DU nosing out TEP by the same score.

Theta Chi, spurred by Cronin Byrd's leaping catch of a td pass, went on to blank the Pi Lambs, 20-0. D. T. Marshburn and L. M. Draper also tallied for the winners, and Butch Barrineau booted two PAT's. Kappa Sig whitewashed the Phi Gams by an identical score, with Pete Farriod scoring twice, Dave Fletcher once, and Blake Young and Jim Mooring adding the extra points. In the third 20-0 game of the day, ATO shutout Pi Kappa Phi. Seymore, Simpson and Wilker scored td's with Clark and Lewellyn making the point-afters.

Simi Mintz intercepted a pass on the PiKA 10-yard line and threw to Bob Rearden in the end zone to put the Phi Delts in front to stay, as last year's runners-up downed PiKA, 20-7. The PIKA's had taken a 7-6 lead minutes earlier on an 85-yard pass play with Jimmy Adams throwing and Jakie Lohr receiving. Bill Craig made the go-ahead PAT. Riley Pleasants scored the Phi Delts' first td and Tob Cummings tallied late in the games, to Phi Kappa Sig on Monout of reach for the PIKAs. Dick Vinroot and Kent Campbell made the Phi Delt extra points.

SAE, trailing 2-0 at the half, bounced back to down Kappa Psi, 14-2. A 70-yard pass play from Dan Batten to Brooks Reed to Stuart Saunders in the end zone turned the tide early in the second half. John Brabson also notched a td and Jim Postman scored both PAT's.

SAH, unable to field a team, has forfeited both of its first two games, to Phi Kappa Sib on Monday and to KA today. This leaves only nine games on tap for today. One of these will see Zeta Psi open defense of its 1960 all-campus title against Lambda Chi.

Do Not Make

There are many details that go into a smart button-down shirt.
1. It should be simple needle construction-hidden stitching on the shoulder seams. A double needle shirt has a ridge on the shoulder and larger stitches throughout the shirt.
2. In keeping with the accent on trimness it should have a proper taper for a custom look.
3. It should have an arched flair so it has an automatic roll.
4. The fabric should be a fine mercerized combed yarn.

Judiciary Bill Up Before SG

Amendment Bills To Constitution On Slate Tonight

Student Legislature will busy itself with the organization of Student Government tonight when several bills concerning amendments to the Student Constitution come up for consideration.

The lone dollars and cents proposal reported out of Finance Committee favorably this week is a bill which would provide $225 to purchase phonograph records for Carrier Current, the campus radio hookup due to resume broadcasting Oct. 2.

Legislature will consider a bill to provide for the election of a geographically apportioned campus judiciary. The coming erection of two new men's dormitories will bring a shift in student population. Consequently, the judiciary setup as now approportioned will have to be shifted also.

Proposes Increase

The bill proposes to increase the membership of the Men's Council from the present 11 to 16.

Several six-month seats on the Women's Council would also be provided by the measure.

Bills left over from last week's session regarding the purchase of a typewriter for the Student Government office, and for the establishment of Parlance magazine as an official publication of the University were not expected to come up tonight.

Infirmary

Students recuperating in the infirmary yesterday were Gloria Ann Alphin, Sally Robbinson, Mary Warner, Carolyn Manuel, Margarette Wilson, James Stanley, George Ellison, Hunter Richardson, John Henderson Jerry Clark, Charles Lail, Francis Cash, Clayton Smith, Timothy Cole, Mumford Ayates, Frederick Johnson Susan Fahmy, Marjorie Hoge, Daniel Michalek and John Purvis.

Doctors office hours are 9-11:30 a.m. and 2-5 p.m. weekdays and 9-11;30 a.m. Saturdays.

5 Tickets Sends Car Home

Rudy Edwards, assistant to the dean of student affairs, announced yesterday that any student who receives five parking tickets will be required to send his car home.

The University Trustees passed this regulation at their last meeting because o fthe growing problem of students parking in spaces reserved for faculty members and trustees.

Edwards further said that any students who have not registered their cars will be forced to drop out of school and then pay a late registration fee plus an automobile registration fee to get back in.

He issued the present policy on student parking tickets as follows: The Office of Student Affairs gets a list of all tickets each morning. They check these against the list of registered cars and registered students.

A student will be warned when he gets his fourth parking ticket. If he gets a fifth ticket, he will be required to get rid of his car.

In the case of special circumstances surrounding a ticket, the student may make an appointment and appear before a committee, consisting of Edwards and Safety Officer Arthur Beaumont to have his case reviewed. In some cases the student will be given another chance.

"However, these cases will be very rare," said Edwards.

Planetarium Delays Show

The N. C. State-Carolina football game on campus here Saturday has necessitated a change in the Morehead Planetarium program schedule for that day, Director Anthony F. Jenzano announced yesterday.

Jenzano said that the 3 p.m. demonstration of "Carolina Moon" would be delayed till 5 p.m., which is immediately following the football game. However, the 11 a.m. and 8:30 p.m. shows will be presented on schedule.

The program wil be presented at the same hours on Saturday, October 7, when Clemson plays UNC here.

No other changes in the daily and week end program schedule are affected by the football games.

Rusk, Gromyko To Meet Saturday

2 Leaders Report 'Very Good' Talk

Rusk Evasive On Progress Of Negotiations On Berlin

NEW YORK (UPI)—Secretary of State Dean Rusk met for almost four hours Wednesday with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko on the Berlin crisis and they described the session as a "very good talk."

Rusk and Gromyko said they will meet again Saturday morning to continue their search for a diplomatic formula to begin full scale East-West negotiations on Berlin and the German issues.

There was no immediate information as to whether Rusk succeeded in moving Gromyko at all from the Russian position during Wednesday's session. The Kremlin demands an early peace treaty with Communist East Germany and elimination of the Allied position in Red-encircled West Berlin.

Asked if the confernce produced any progress, Rusk said "We'll see."

Gromyko and Rusk appeared in excellent spirits as they emerged from the front door of the headquarters of the Soviet delegation to the United Nations. Gromyko escorted Rusk to his car and bid him goodbye.

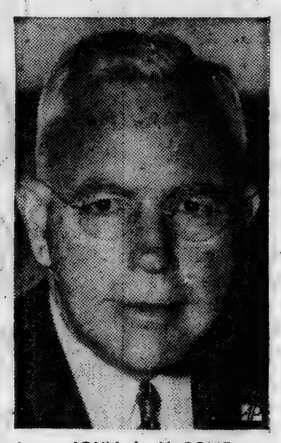
En route they stopped before microphones and each spoke briefly.

Gromyko said the talks covered the subject of Berlin "and other matters of mutual interest."

The Soviet foreign minister, in response to questions then spoke of Russia's proposal for a temporary solution of the East-West deadlock over filling the post of United Nations secretary general.

Wednesday's cold war conference between Rusk and Gromyko brought to 8 hours and 20 minutes the time they have spent discussing Berlin and other critical issues at two meetings.

Rusk's task in the exploratory talks, outlined by President Kennedy, was to persuade the Soviets to negotiate on terms of mutual respect and concern for the rights of others.



JOHN A. McCONE

Republican Leader Chosen Successor

Businessman Appointee Served Under Truman Ike

NEWPORT, R. I. (UPI)—President Kennedy Wednesday appointed John A. McCone, a Republican businessman who served in both the Truman and Eisenhower administrations, to head the Central Intelligence Agency.

McCone, 59, will take over in November from retiring CIA chief Allen W. Dulles, 68 and also a Republican who has been CIA chief for 10 years. Dulles, who along with the CIA has come under heavy congressional criticism in recent years, agreed at the President's request last November to remain at his post for a year.

Two of the chief targets of congressional fire have been the CIA's participation in the abortive Cuban invasion last April and the U2 incident in 1959. Wednesday Kennedy expressed regret Dulles was retiring and said he knew of "no man who is a more courageous, selfless public servant."

Dulles has served under eight presidents starting with Woodrow Wilson. Kennedy said his record was "unique in the history of this country."

With Dulles and McCone seated at his side, Kennedy lauded McCone—chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission in the Eisenhower administration—for accepting his sensitive new "position of high responsiblity."

Though some critics had attacked Dulles for the abortive invasion of Cuba by anti-Castro exiles and the flight of a U2 spy plane shot down over Russia—an incident used by Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev to wreck the 1959 summit conference—Kennedy made it plain that Dulles was retiring according to last year's agreement.

McCone is a native of San Francisco with a highly successful career as a business and industrial executive in California. His first government service was in 1947, as a member of the Air Policy Commission under former President Truman.

In 1948 ,he was special deputy to the secretary of defense, and from 1950 to 1951 was under secretary of the Air Force. From July, 1958, to January, 1961, McCone served as Atomic Energy Commission chairman under former President Eisenhower. In that capacity, he healed a bitter breach which had developed between his predecessor, Lewis Strauss, and Congressional Democrats.

U.S. May Send Jets To Europe

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States may send nearly 500 more jet planes and thousands of additional troops to Europe by the end of the year if the Berlin crisis fails to Subside, Defense Department sources indicated Wednesday.

They raised the possibility in guarded response to reports that all or most of 18 Air National Guard squadrons reporting for active duty next Monday will be sent overseas for any Berlin showdown.

The squadrons have a total of 411 jet fighters, most of them capable of carrying nuclear as well as conventional weapons. An additional four squadrons reporting for duty at the same time are equipped with reconnaisance versions of the planes.

U. S. Agent Welcomed In Berlin

BERLIN—United States Air Force Secretary Eugene M. Zuckert arrived to a 19-gun salute Wednesday to inspect vital installations that would control any airlift to West Berlin.

As Zuckert flew in, the Communists worked feverishly to reinforce their wall around West Berlin. They built a third barbed-wire barrier and dug a series of trenches along the U. S. sector border. At some points the Reds built up their "Chinese wall" to a height of 10 feet.

Alumni Donate $80,000

Chancellor William B. Aycock yesterday said that the UNC Alumni Annual Giving Council has donated $80,000 to the University, about one-third of which will supplement faculty salaries.

Aycock told the Faculty Club that the donation allows the appointment of two more Alumni Distinguished Professors. Six alumni professorships were established by the council last year.

The Chancellor said the money remaining from the establishment of the professorships will be used for faculty research, travel and retirement; graduate fellowships; the student welfare fund and improvements in the Library and Chemistry Department.

Bost Director

Tom Bost, director of the program, said the Alumni Council has given over $400,000 since its inception in 1952.

The yearly fund program, whose donation this year was 15% higher than last, provides funds for different purposes, or to supplement those regularly appropriated by the State Legislature.

Day Of Decision?

There is evidence that President Kennedy's speech scheduled here for October 12 may be a policy declaration on the Berlin crisis.

With a little more than two weeks remaining before the speech, there are already good indications that it will be an important one, and will concern Berlin negotiations.

1. Hints that the groundwork for a peaceful settlement have been already made and that present U. S. nuclear strength has put Russia in a bargaining mood indicate the President is almost ready to reveal just what the U. S. will or will not be willing to do.

President Kennedy said in his U. N. speech that the U. S. was not committed to any rigid plan of action and sought no perfect solution. Political pundit Marquis Childs interprets this to mean that the President is willing to negotiate on Berlin and feels that the UNC speech will "spell out the kind of negotiation that will take place and the range of compromise that can be expected."

2. The President has declined to make an appearance in Charlotte at the trade fair, but still has not cancelled his talk here. This would seem to indicate that the speech he will make here is an important one.

Whether Kennedy has chosen the Carolina engagement as the scene of a compromise declaration is certainly not definite, and the indications that he has are tenuous at best.

Where the declaration will be made is unimportant, except to those of us here at Carolina who would like to have the distinction of being close to such a major decision. But the same logic that points to Carolina as the site of such a declaration still holds in respect to time. If the President does not outline Berlin policy on October 12 will be more than an exciting decision is near nonetheless.

The U. S. has committed herself on the issue beyond the point of any reversal. West Berlin's freedom will be protected at any cost. There is scarcely any doubt on that point, just as there is little doubt that access to that sector will be protected. But Berlin will not become a free city. Russia is too firmly committed on that issue.

Still the possibility of some sort of settlement seems closer to realization now than it has any time in recent weeks. We can now hope with some confidence that October 12 will be more tha nan exciting event for Carolina.

It may be the first ray of light on what has been an almost hopelessly dark scene for the entire world.

Fight Fiercely, Fellows

Glancing over a copy of the November 23, 1897, issue of The Tar Heel, forerunner of today's DTH, we find that the sport of football has not been greatly affected by the withering effects of Father Time.

For instance, does this sound familiar? "The physical condition of the team is not the best." Or this: "The . . . defeat undoubtedly did us the greatest good of any game we have been in this season and from that date on our improvement has been remarkable." These were the comments of the 1897 Tar Heel coach, William A. Reynolds.

If these comments sound strangely modern in tone, try some of these, made by the editor of the nineteenth century version of the DTH:

". . . Everything has been focused on the event of day after tomorrow; everything has pointed to it and led up to it; defeats and victories have alike been regarded only as they bore on the result of the . . . game.

"Lose this and all is lost, win it and tho' all else be lost everything is won."

"Carolina will put up such a fight as to make even old historic Richmond open her eyes in wonder; whatever virtue there is in pluck and grit will surely be with the Tar Heels on that day. And is there not virtue in pluck and determination . . ."

The Tar Heels that received that word of advice were going up against Richmond on that fateful "day after tomorrow."

The editor closed with this:

"And to the team we say think of us . . . as we think of you. Only remember the fair University for which you stand; remember the anxious ones that are listening to every click of the telegrapher's instrument; remember the loyal hearts of old UNC boys that await the score over all this state and southland; then fight the fight that so many Tar Heel teams have fought before you and winners or losers receive the plaudits of those for whom you have struggled and take the proud place that Carolina reserves for her heroes."

We don't know whether Carolina won or lost. We assume she won since the suicide rate at Carolina showed no remarkable increase following the game in 1897.. Just as an interesting sidelight, Carolina plays State day after tomorrow.

Don't Starve Us, Terry —Establish Some Bars

Coeds are awaiting anxiously the season's first football game this Saturday. But this year there will be a drastic re-appraisal to "game-going":

(All week long, coeds happily walk over the FLAT campus in low-heeled shoes, socks, and flair of pleated skirts.)

On football Saturdays of the past, when coeds braved mud and boulders outside the stadium, and myriad rows of bleachers inside, they wore tight-toed shoes with 3" spike heels, runny stockings, and tight skirts or dresses.

It certainly made sense because the coed, clad in fitted dress, felt the essence of feminity, as her toes went numb and her teeth chattered in th crisp 35 degree air.

But this year will be different, won't it? Coeds will wear wool slacks, loafers and heavy sweaters, in addition to carrying a hot water bottle.

WE HEAR TELL of a little six-year-old boy from Morganton who must be brooding over what adults are.

It all started when a man by the name of Dave Parmelee was making some social calls on a Sunday afternoon not long ago. As he was leaving a cocktail party with a glow, he noticed a water pistol lying on table. On impulse, he picked it up and put it in his pocket.

Dave then proceeded to stroll merrily down a quiet Morganton residential street, as birds chirped and lazy clouds floated overhead.

But, hark, something was amiss. From the corner of his eye he saw that a small boy, about six years old, was quietly creeping up on him. And held in the hand of this boy was of all things—a black water pistol. Dave pretended not to notice anything, but then, as the boy raised his pistol and took aim . . . Dave whirled around and, faster than Pat Garrett, he drew and fired.

Before the little boy could pull the trigger, a full stream of water hit full in the face. And he stood there astonished that of all the people out for a walk on that day he had to pick one with a loaded water pistol in his pocket.

Exchange Student On Goettingen Plan

Readers of the Daily Tar Heel might be interested in a comment made by Volker Berghahn in a recent letter to me, since it expresses so well the ideals of the Goettingen Exchange Student Program which is supported by the Student Government. Volker was a Goettingen Exchange Student in 1959-1960 and remained here last year.

From Hamburg, Germany, Volker writes expressing his gratitude for the fruitful years he spent on our campus and for the many kindnesses he received from us. Then he goes onto say: "I have left the U.S. with a tear in my eye, because the country and its people have meant so much to me.

* * *

"YET, I CANNOT but connect these feelings with a promise which is sincere though it may sound somewhat pathetical: That I will never forget this experience and will always try to carry the message of the idea behind our exchange wherever I will go. Perhaps this is the only chance for this divided world to come to an understanding which, in this age, is needed so dearly.

"How else will we be able to live in peace or even survive if we continue to live in the narrowness of our own opinions without willingness to respect and learn from others?" . . . Yours sincerely, Volker Berghahn.

Those who support the Goettingen Exchange Program may well take pride in its accomplishments, as Volker has so beautifully expressed them.

9,400 Cups Hide Traditional Walk

There can be no doubt that the campus of the University of North Carolina has many aesthetic qualities; however, there is definite reason to doubt whether the university's students intend to maintain these qualities.

A neat and somewhat tidy appearance is by no means detrimental to any organized system, regardless of whether that system is as inanimate as a sidewalk or as animate as a Carolina student. Hence, it is the writer's opinion that something should take place which would curb the fantastic array of 9,400 Coca-Cola cups and assorted other rubbish which now lines our heretofore "steeped in tradition" pathways to higher learning.

* * *

AS ALL GOOD socially-democratic endeavors, the panacea for our current trash problem would require a community effort. Firstly, the administration should try to place more trash depositories on campus, as inconspicuously conspicuous as possible. Secondly, students should attempt a genuine effort towards finding one of these depositories, in lieu of utilizing terra firma or the steps of Hill Hall for purposes other than which they were created.

Trusting in the resourcefulness and integrity of the Carolina Gentleman, (and counterpart) we do have good reason to hope that the situation will improve. (Faisant quia posse videntur.)

IN LIGHT OF CONTROVERSY

The What, How, Why Of NSA

In light of recent criticism of the National Student Association, it may be fruitful to try to answer the question, What is NSA and how does it operate?

The NSA takes stands and action on issues in which "the American student should be interested," according to UNC alumnus, United Nations trouble shooter and former NSA president, Al Lowenstein.

Opponents of political proclamations of the Association usually claim that what they're really opposing is NSA's claim to represent the American student when many leading schools are not in the Association.

So the question of representation is vital to all discussions of NSA. The most practical way in which to ascertain NSA's representivity or or lack of such is to study their recent actions and operations.

* * *

Union Of Governments

Fundamentally NSA is a union of member student governments. This union of student governments has been recognized by the last three U.S. presidents and every major union of students in the world as the United States union of students.

As such, NSA has a responsibility to speak for the American student on international matters. NSA also must represent the American student at the annual International Student Congress.

The Association has the additional major duty of coordinating student government action around the nation, and of providing schools with information and personnel help when they ask for it.

Every year since 1947 NSA has held a National Student Congress at a mid-western university. At this Congress NSA policy is voted upon by the elected and appointed student representatives. Officers for the coming year are at this time elected. (NSA has five national officers who coordinate and instrument Association policy.)

Last month this writer attended the NSA Congress in Madison, Wisconsin. Observations from the Congress may help to gve a truer picture of this controversial Association.

Under Great Pressures

From the very beginning the Congress was under great pressure from political and social action groups of all shades of left and rightism. The spectrum was colored by the Young People's Socialist League and the Americans for Democratic Action on the left to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, the Young Americans for Freedom, and their older counterpart, the John Birch Society, on the right. Also: the Young Democrats, Young Republicans, Student Peace Union, Fair Play for Cuba Committe, and on and on.

Contrary to the impression left by several anti-NSA conservatives, the liberal political sector is not by any means the only voice heard at the Congress. Local newspapers report that a conservative student group headed by the former president of the Harvard student council (he had been canned for poor grades plus having overstepped his authority) was supported by several major industrial companies.

From out of this maze of counter-propaganda came the final Congress statements: for abolition of HUAC; for military non-intervention in Cuba; for student non-violent action in the civil rights field; and against overly restrictive University control to the extent of campus gentlemen's codes, early women's hours and off-campus drinking regulations.

These results were arrived at as a part of the continual question—Liberal or Conservative.

Lowenstein, a confirmed liberal, stated during the course of the Congress that he didn't want it to be "a seminar on how liberals should meet together." And the conservatives saw to it that it wasn't.

Congressman Rousselet of California (a John Birch member) and NATIONAL REVIEW editor William Buckley were two prominent conservative speakers.

Buckley brought considerable criticism to himself by what some delegates called his "racist mentality." He dismissed leaders of the Congolese nation, the Algerian revolution, and heads of the governments of Pakistan, Northern Rhodesia, Ceylon and Ethiopa as "semi-savages" not capable of assuming responsibilities. This statement was linked with another one supporting French Algerian rightist, Jacques Soustel.

The conservatives did not wield the power they would have had delegates believe they possessed, however.

The Young Americans for Freedom, an extreme rightist student organization, opposed the HUAC resolution, which passed handily; opposed the Cuban resolution, which passed overwhelmingly; and in fact did not participate in the passage of any major legislation or program mandates.

The liberals held a decisive, although certainly not over-whelming majority at the Congress. The speakers, from Wisconsin Gov. Gaylord Nelson—who favors HUAC abolition—to Congress of Racial Equality Director James Farmer—who received a standing ovation from the full Congress plenary after he spoke on the Freedom Rides to the South which his group originated.

Is NSA Representative?

The question of "Is NSA representative?" can never be fully answered. Many member schools hold special elections to choose delegates for the Congress. At UNC and other schools Student Legislature names or approves the delegates. Carolina government officers have said it is impractical to hold campus-wide elections between the time when student government officials are elected around early April and the beginning of exams in mid-May. But even without elections, the delegates are chosen by elected student rpresentatives, and so have some claim to representivity.

Conversely, many liberals admit that the delegates—whether elected or appointed—are not representative of the average student.

But then the U.S. Congress (even including such mental abortions as Otto Passman, James Eastand and James C. Davis) is not representative of the American public on many issues, such a foreign aid. The National Student Association is representative of American studentry in the sense that it is interested in what "the American student should be interested in" and it is responsible in the sense that the delegates return to their campuses, and like UNC's delegation, tell the campus what action they took and stand up for it.

Then it becomes the delegation's task to convince the campus that their actions were the best actions, and the campus's task to continually challenge and question their delegates.

FROM FOREIGN NEWS CABLES:

New Fight Expected On MacMillan Stand

(United Press International)

LABOR UPSURGE: Britain's newly-strengthened Labor Party is expected in the next two weeks to launch a broad attack on the Macmillan government's domestic and foreign policies. The Laborite national convention Oct. 2 to 6 almost undoubtedly will overturn last year's unilateral nuclear disarmament resolution as the final step in Hugh Gaitskell's quietly effective program to clean up the Laborite house.

Laborites say the conservative government is vulnerable due to austerity measures at home, uneasiness over common market negotiations and the seeming drift of East-West relations. Latest published opinion polls show the Laborites now slightly more popular than the Tories.

CHANCELLOR ADENAUER: The betting is 10-to-1 in Bonn that Conrad Adenauer will be chancellor of the next West German government, but that he will retire before the next election in 1965 by which time he will be 90 years old. Everyone in West Germany assumes he will live until then.

INDONESIAN OIL: Indonesian President Sukarno has asked for a personal look at the negotiations going on between development ministry officials and foreign oil companies—Caltex, Stanvace and Shell. Observers in Jakarta feel that perhaps Indonesia may embark on new and harsher policies against the oil firms. Reliable reports, confirmed by the information ministry, said last week that the oil decree still has not been released officially, despite reports to the contrary. One official said Sukarno asked to have the decree held up so he could have a "personal look at it." Oil company officials are keeping quiet.

NATIONALIST OPPOSITION: The arrest of opposition leader Su Tung-chi on sedition charges is believed to have put an end to the once-active movement against Chiang Kai-shek in Nationalist China. Sentencing of Lei Chen, publisher of the now-defunct Free China fortnightly and former leader of the movement, to 10 years imprisonment on the same charge last year forced the opposition to postpone indefinitely the inauguration of the China Democratic Party. There were some indications recently that the opposition might try again. But Su's arrest probably would shatter whatever hope there was to form a strong opposition party.

'THE MATCHMAKER'

Play's Two-State Tour Set

The Carolina Playmakers rendition of Thornton Wilder's "The Matchmaker," set for a two-state tour that will carry it to cities throughout North Carolina and as far south as Augusta, Ga., has been cast, Director Foster Fitz-Simons announces.

The farce-comedy will run in the Playmakers Theatre Oct. 11-15 before leaving on its one-week tour.

CHAPEL HILL SOUNDING BOARD

'Reflections' Going National

BY BILL HOBBS

"REFLECTIONS From Chapel Hill," a new magazine designed to serve as a "sounding board for any and all ideas" from the Chapel Hill cultural community published its first two issues this summer.

Bob Brown, "REFLECTIONS" editor, told the DTH yesterday that "The magazine is now well on its way. We have outlets in college bookstores and large cities throughout the country. Now we've to get the staff to handle this size operation."

Brown, a graduate student in history at the University, said that both of the first issues of the magazine had sold out during the summer and that he planned to print 2,000 copies of the third issue.

Needs Help

He stressed the magazine's need for help from all interested students or townspeople. This need is due in large part to the limited budget and the printing methods of the magazine.

"REFLECTIONS" is printed by an offset process which involves hand typing and photographing each page of the magazine. In addition, the magazine needs people to work in the circulation and business fields.

Brown said that the magazine now has outlets in New York, Washington, Boston and college bookstores throughout the country.

Ferlinghetti Poem

Lawrence Ferlinghetti, a nationally known poet and UNC graduate, talked to Brown this summer and is now selling the magazine in his City Lights bookstore in San Francisco. He has also given Brown a poem for publication in the third issue of "REFLECTIONS."

Paul Sweze, editor of the Monthly Review and a nationally prominent socialist economist, has also contributed an article which will be published in the magazine.

The magazine publishes articles on any subject, fiction, poetry and art work. The first issue contained an article from UNC Professor Federico Gil on Cuba, along with an article by Brown and several drawings from local artists.

Issue two featured an article from Associate Professor of Philosophy Maurice Natanson on "Existentialism in Literature," two short stories, a book review, and several pieces of poetry in addition to the art work.

Brown says he hopes to make the magazine "an invitation to creativity" to everyone connected with or interested in the Chapel Hill community. He wants it to serve as an aesthetic vehicle for any authors or artists—whether they are already established and accepted or whether they have never published before.

Brown envisions the magazine as being much larger in scope and much livelier in format and material than any of the existing "little magazines" in the area.

Offset Process

He stressed the fact that the offset printing process used by the publication made many changes and innovatioos possible both in format and size of the magazine.

Many Chapel Hill stores are carrying copies of the magazine on their sales counters, and Brown plans to increase the already active booths selling the publication at both entrances of Lenoir Hall. In addition to the local and nationwide outlets, "REFLECTIONS" wishes to thoroughly cover the state of North Carolina with distributors by the time the third or fourth issue is published.

Concluding his interview, Brown asked that all people interested in contributing to or working for the magazine contact him at 102 Mallette Street by mail or in person.

"REFLECTIONS" REFLECTED. Just as this copy of Chapel Hill's latest literary offering, "Reflections," is reflected in the mirror, the magazine itself hopes to reflect the thoughts and actions of Chapel Hill to the nation. The monthly can be bought in bookstores all over the country. (Photo by Jim Wallace).

MAGNOLIA MAGIC

On a publicity questionnaire, answering the question "What life work do you have planned?" Grove City, Pennsylvania Dave Braine, a North Carolina freshman halfback, declared: "Be a dentist and work in the South."

BATS FOR BOOKS

Jim Mooring, the North Carolina sophomore All-America centerfielder who won the ACC batting title and later signed with the Detroit Tigers, is back in school at Carolina this semester, enrolled with a full load of courses.

Johnson's lecture, entitled "The Republic's Last Chance," combines the UNC School of Journalism's regular series with the 32nd Don R. Mellett Memorial Lecture, sponsored by the New York University Department of Journalism. The public has been invited to attend.

Now contributing editor to the magazine, "The New Republic," Johnson headed the Department of Journalism from 1924 to 1926.

He is a veteran reporter, having worked on newspapers in Greensboro, Thomasville and Lexington. He later joined the staff of the Baltimore Sun, where he achieved a reputation as an editorial writer and as an author on topics concerning national affairs.

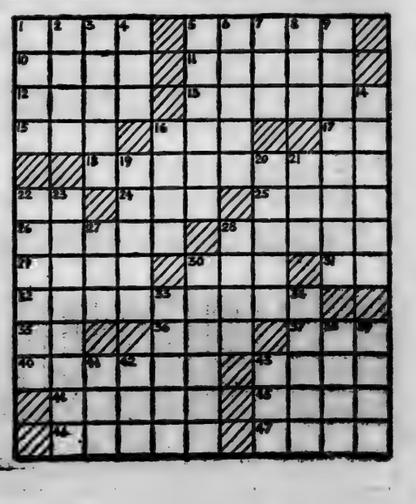
Yesterday's Answer



On Campus with Max Shulman
(Author of "I Was a Teen-age Dwarf," "The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis," etc.)

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME

It happens every day. A young man goes off to college, leaving his home town sweetheart with vows of eternal love, and then he finds that he has outgrown her. What, in such cases, is the honorable thing to do?

Well sir, you can do what Rock Sigafoos did.

When Rock left Cut and Shoot, Pa., he said to his sweetheart, a simple country lass named Tess d' Urbevilles, "My dear, though I am far away in college, I will love you always. I will never look at another girl. If I do, may my eyeballs parch and wither, may my viscera writhe like adders, may the moths get my new tweed jacket!"

Then he clutched Tess to his bosom and planted a final kiss upon her fragrant young skull and went away, meaning with all his heart to be faithful.

But on the very first day of college he met a coed named Fata Morgana, a girl of such sophistication, such poise, such savoir-faire as Rock had never beheld. She spoke knowingly of Franz Kafka, she hummed Mozart, she smoked Marlboros.

Now, Rock didn't know Franz Kafka from Pancho Villa, or Mozart from James K. Polk, but Marlboros he knew full well. He knew that anyone who smoked Marlboros was modern and advanced and as studded with brains as a ham with cloves. Good sense tells you that you can't beat Marlboro's exclusive selectrate filter, and you never could beat Marlboro's fine flavor. This Rock knew.

So all day he followed Fata around campus and listened to her talk about Franz Kafka, and then in the evening he went back to the dormitory and found this letter from his home town sweetheart Tess:

Dear Rock,

Us kids had a keen time yesterday. We went down to the pond and caught some frogs. I caught the most of anybody. Then we hitched rides on trucks and did lots of nutsy stuff like that. Well, I must close now because I got to whitewash the fence.

Your friend,
Tess

P.S.—I can do my Hula Hoop 3,000 times.

Well sir, Rock thought about Tess and then he thought about Fata and then a great sadness fell upon him. Suddenly he knew he had outgrown young, innocent Tess; his heart now belonged to smart, sophisticated Fata.

Rock, being above all things honorable, returned forthwith to his home town and walked up to Tess and looked her in the eye and said manlily, "I do not love you any more. I love a girl named Fata Morgana. You can hit me in the stomach with all your might if you like."

"That's okay, hey," said Tess amiably. "I don't love you neither. I found a new boy."

"What is his name?" asked Rock.

"Franz Kafka," said Tess.

"A splendid fellow," said Rock and shook Tess's hand, and they have remained good friends to this day. In fact, Rock and Fata often double-date with Franz and Tess and have heaps of fun. Franz can do the Hula Hoop 6,000 times.

POGO PEANUTS

IN LEGISLATURE

3 Fill SP Posts

The Student Party has elected John Randall, Leon Barber and Bill Whichard to fill Student Legislature positions vacated by SP legislators last spring.

The action at Tuesday night's party meeting awaits formal approval by Student Body President Bill Harriss and the Student Legislature. Legislative posts vacated because of change in address are returned to the party of the former member, according to the Student Constitution.

Randall will represent Dorm Men's II district—the lower quad; Barber, Dorm Men's V—Battle-Vance-Pettigrew; and Whichard Town Men's IV—Victory Village and outlying areas.

Addressing the SP meeting before the election, President Harriss asked for discussion of eight topics which he termed "quite important" at this time:

1) Yackety Yack appropriations, which if passed by the Legislature would enable the yearbook to distribute more than 7,000 copies this year and allow graduate students to have their pictures in the publication.

2) The Codification Commission, which would be estabilshed to keep up-to-date knowledge of exisiting Student Legislature laws available to the campus and the Legislature. Harriss said that no such commission exisited at present and that the job was "much too large for one person to handle."

Sponsors Four Aces

3) The University Entertainment Committee, now sponsoring the appearance of the Four Aces and other stars, should be fully supported in all its actions, Harriss said.

4) Drinking at ball games will be more strictly limited this year, said Harriss. He urged all present to pass this information on and urge friends to act like gentlemen at the University games.

5) The Constitutional Council, which would pass judgment on the constitutionality of Student Legislature laws and executive actions, was also discussed. Harriss said that the Council would consist of three members of the Woman's Honor Council, three members of the Men's Honor Council, and the chairman of the Men's Council. Harriss said this was the logical body to rule on laws and executive actions since none of its members would be in the legislature or the executive department of student government.

New Handbook

6) The administrative handbook, which will be published for the first time next year and is planned to replace the present Men's and Women's handbooks put out by student government funds. Harriss said that the legislature would have to decide whether to continue publication of the two handbooks. He also said he saw no reason to maintain two separate handbooks.

7) Parlance, the magazine begun last year under the sponsorship of the YMCA has asked Student Government to appropriate funds to the publication and make an official student government magazine. Harriss said there were two alternatives to this situation: to publish the magazine four times yearly as a special supplement to The Daily Tar Heel, or to publish it in booklet form as was done last year.

8) The Bond Issue is not receiving nearly enough attention from UNC students, Harriss said. He said only ten people showed up for a organizational meeting of the State Affairs Committee Thursday night. This committee intends to publicize the issue throughout the state, but does not yet have enough participants to carry out its program.

Britain Warns Soviet

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—Britain warned Russia Wednesday against its "oduble-dealing" in world affairs and called upon the Soviet Union to abandon its policy of exploiting civil strife.

Britain's foreign secretary, the Earl of Home, vigorously rejected the Soviet-proposed "troika," or any variant of the "troika" to direct the United Nations in succession to the late Secretary General ag Hammarskjold.

In a policy speech to the General Asembly, Lord Home endorsed the disarmament plan proposed by the United States earlier this week, called for self-determination for the people of Berlin and all of Germany, and defended Britain against attacks on its "colonialist" policy.

Recalls Observation

observation here Monday that the United States had started as a colony with "exploitation and subjuvation of the weak by the powerful," Home told the assembly.

"I couldn't help thinking that America did pretty well on this. If, in time, all our colonies are as happy or do as well as the United States, then there will be a queue of candidates queuing up for exploitation. And how happy we should be!"

Out Of Planning Stages

NO LONGER ON PLANNING BOARD—This is an architect's drawing of the new School of Public Health. The new building is now well underway and is expected to be completed in another year. The building is being erected at a cost of approximately $1,800,000. Of this sum, the United States Public Health Service furnished $700,000.

This new building will practically double the present available space for the teaching of public health courses. At the present time, public health courses are taught in 14 different buildings in a radius of one mile of the school's administrative office. Many of the courses are taught in classrooms and other facilities of other schools and departments of the University.

IN HAMMARSKJOLD DEATH

Gunshot Wounds Ruled Out

NODOLA, Northern Rhodesia (UPI)—The chief of the international team investigating the Dag Hammarskjold plane crash Wednesday denied again that any crash victim died as the result of gunshot wounds.

Lt. Col. Maurice Barber, Rhodesian civil aviation chief, issued a statement insisting that bullets found in one body were from ammunition exploding in the blazing wreckage of the DC6 aircraft.

Swedish newspapers had rejected his findings and had said that the bullets were fired from a gun.

"Bullets exploded and entered the body due to intense heat from the flaming wreckage," Barber said. "There is absolutely no question of any bullets being fired from a gun."

A federal government spokesman indicated in answer to a question that bullets had shown no rifling marks when examined. Rifling marks would have been present if the bullets had gone through a gun barrel, he said.

"Swedish newspapers are quite correct in saying there are mysterious elements in the crash, that's precisely why the investigation is being held," the spokesman said.

"The insistence of foreign newspapers that bullets found in one body were fired from a gun appears foolish. Neither the newspapers nor their experts have seen the wreckage, studied the bodies or examined the bullets."

Symphony Director To Address Clubs

Benjamin F. Swalin, director of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, will deliver a series of fall talks on "Community Enjoyment of Good Music" to civic clubs in 13 North Carolina cities. The first was before the Rotary Club of Wilson last Monday.

Dr. Swalin, who has been conductor of the Symphony for 22 years, will discuss the importance of good music to the community and the relationship of the North Carolina Symphony tours to the appreciation of such music in towns, cities and hamlets from the mountains to the coast.

FOR FICTION, POETRY

Quarterly Offering Prizes

A total of $75 is waiting at the end of the literary rainbow for a campus writer enterprising enough to go after it, according to Jerome Stern, editor of the Carolina Quarterly.

The cash is to be awarded at the end of the year for the best short fiction ($50) and the best poetry ($25) published by the Quarterly in its three issues.

Publication dates are tentatively set for November, March, and May, with an estimated circulation of 600 copies. The Quarterly will send 200 copies to libraries in North Carolina and college campuses across the nation.

Editor Stern stresses that "experiments are as welcome as familiar subjects and methods" and, in keeping with the "new look," he plans to initiate a photography prize, with the winning photograph appearing on the cover of the second issue. Local photographers who plan to try for the prize should keep their lenses focused primarily on campus scenes and themes, he said.

The cost of the Quarterly will remain the same, 50 cents per copy and $1.25 for a subscription to the three issues.

THE SPORTS Tabloyd

North Carolina's football series with N. C. State is an old and colorful one that dates back to 1894, or just seven years after the Raleigh institution was founded. The "Aggies," as the State team was known in the early days, were no match for the powerful Tar Heels when the rivalry began. The Carolina boys, who had been playing since '88, ran roughshod over the Cowboys, who had only two years, and two games, of experience. They played two games between them that first year, and the result of that contest seemed to set the tone of the series for years to come. The powerful Chapel Hillians grabbed a 44-0 win, for the first State loss in history, and came back later for a 19-0 triumph.

It wasn't until the last game of the 19th century that State managed to even score. By that time, the Tar Heels had won six games and run up a total of 170 points to the Aggies' zero. Four of the next six games were ties, at 11-11, 0-0, 6-6, and 0-0. But among these checkmates by the Statemen, there were 39 and 30 poins shutouts by UNC.

Through the years, the teams have met 50 times. The Tar Heels have played only two teams more times—Virginia, 65, and Wake Forest, 57. Of these fifty, Carolina has won 35, State has won 9, and there have been 6 ties. The UNC winning percentage of .795 is its highest over any present opponent.

But so much for the Carolina domination in the series. That ended in 1955, when for the first time, State scored four TD's and thereby spoiled Jim Tatum's debut with a 26-6 upset. Since then, the Wolfpack has won by 7-0 in '57, 21-14 in '58, and 3-0 in '60. The Tar Heels won by 20-12 in '59. However, all of these State wins were upsets, in the opinions of the so called experts. A State team has never gone into a game with Carolina classed as the favorite . . .

Undoubtedly, these experts, whoever they are, will put the Wolfpack on the pedestal this year. They have the country's most ballyhooed quarterback, plus a few more odd performers to total eleven men at the time. Because of North Carolina's perennially poor showing in opening games, and their disappointments of recent years, the Pack will be the favorite.

Now read that last paragraph again. Notice that we didn't include ourselves among those experts who pick State. As far as Carolina games are concerned this season, were just like a guy with a broken down guitar. We ain't pickin.

* * *

However, we won't let our prognostications on other games go to waste. Every week, we will predict the results of the other ACC games plus some of the outstanding national contests. Last week we hit four of five, missing only the 15-14 State loss at Wyoming.

Our predictions:

Duke 20, Virginia 12. The Blue Devils will be better prepared after that near-shocker they received at South Carolina.

South Carolina 24, Wake Forest 6. The Deacons were beaten by an awfully strong Baylor team, but they just don't have it for S. C.

Maryland 14, Clemson 6. The Terps will hand a second straught loss to the Tigers, but UNC fans will hope not. They're here Oct. 7.

Notre Dame 13, Oklahoma 7. Both are on the rebound, but the Irish have more bounce.

Penn State 24, Miami 14. The Lions have the best team in the East again.

* * *

Duke 28, Virginia 7; Wake Forest 20, South Carolina 17; Maryland 27, Clemson 20; Notre Dame 20, Oklahoma 14; Rice 17, Ga. Tech 14; Penn State 14, Miami 8.

Here's a reminder to you to enter the cigarette sponsored contest in the DTH. Check the Wednesday edition for an entry blank. The top prize of a hundred bucks looks good. The games will be played October 7, so you still have another week to enter.

Freshman Soccer Mentor Envisions A Fine Season

New Tar Baby soccer coach Art Lemery is optimistic in discussing his charges' prospects for the coming season. Although only 36 have turned out so far for daily drills on Fetzer Field, Lemery says he is pleased with the group's enthusiasm and teamwork.

With the opening match less than two weeks away, the Tars are providing each other with stiff competition at every position and as yet, no one has a first-string spot sewed up.

"This is a very fine bunch of boys, and if I can improve their individual skills and at the same time impress upon them the importance of ball control and teamwork, I am confident we will have a very successful season," says Lemery, a transplanted yankee from Utica, New York, working on his master's degree in the Physical Education department. The yearling mentor, starting his first assignment in the coaching ranks, graduated with a B. S. in education last June from Brockport State Teachers' College in upstate New York, where he played varsity soccer for three years and led his team to second place in the State Teachers' College Conference.

Jerry Steele Has Pleasant Surprise

Former Deacon Cager Now Coaching Here

By ED DUPREE

UNC has received a gift from Wake Forest. The gift is a 6-8, 225-pound package named Jerry Steele and is enrolled as a grad student in the physical education department.

Steele, co-captain of Wake Forest's ACC basketball champions last year, is instructing one class in basketball and two in handball. He terms his transfer to Carolina as "a pleasant surprise" and enjoys teaching phys-ed classes.

As for his affections for Wake Forest, Jerry's remark was no surprise. The big guy smiled and said, "If a fellow spent four years in a place and didn't become attached to it, then his time would certainly have been wasted."

His fondness for big Lennie Chappell and the rest of the Deacon basketballers was evident, but Jerry hesitated to predict a banner season for Bones McKinney's crew. He pointed out that "many things go into the making of a great ball club in addition to a good coach and experienced players."

Watching a few Tar Heel players scrimmage on the big court, Steele sat back in his chair and added: "Everyone's selling those boys short, they could easily be in there all the wey." Three seasons "on the other side of the court" has undoubtedly given the Elkin, N. C., native a deep respect for Carolina basketball.

"Coach" Steele had hoped to teach three classes of basketball but was unable to work it into his schedule. Despite his love for basketball, he finds coaching handball classes much easier. "In handball classes very few of the boys have played the game," Jerry said, "this makes it easier to teach them the game, starting with the basic fundamentals and advancing from there. But, since most of the boys have played basketball in high school they think they know the fundamentals. This makes it much harder to start at the bottom as they are ready to play the game without any real coaching help."

Jerry hopes to coach high school basketball in North Carolina after he leaves UNC. Who knows? Maybe he'll find himself back at Wake Forest someday—as coach instead of captain.

Mavericks Outdeal Addicts In Opening Dormitory Play

By JOHN MONTAQUE

A complicated pass play culminated by Jamie Quinn's short run into the end zone gave the Mangum Mavericks a last-second 20-13 victory over the Avery Addicts in a game which highlighted the opening day of the dormitory tag football season.

The play came with four seconds remaining and just one play after Avery had knotted the score at 13 all on B. Newman's TD and extra point.

Elsewhere in the league, three 960 powers rolled to impressive victories in their openers. The Manly Riverrats, dorm defending champs, coasted to a 24-0 win over the Everett Flashes. Andy Curl, Bob Hartsell, Jim Norton and Jim Clark provided the offensive punch which was more than adequate as the Manly defense kept the Flashes bottled up all afternoon, with the exeeption of one 70-yard TD pass play which was called back on a penalty.

AFROTC rallied for three second half TDs to tie Ruffin 19-19, then went on to take the overtime decision. However, the game has been protested because of the disputed eligibility of Air Force back Cronin Byrd. Byrd led the ROTC attack with two TD's while Bill Croom added another seven points. George Lockhart scored twice for Ruffin, Martin Greenwood once, and Frank Potter got the PAT.

John Hickey blocked an Old West punt in the end zone to give the Town Touts a decisive safety and an 8-6 verdict in the game. Hickey also scored the Touts' TD while Bill Shoemaker tallied for the losers. In another close one, Graham nosed out NROTC by 21-15. Ralph Leonard scored twice for the winning Shieks and Harold Levinson got a seven-pointer.

Inaction also seemed to be a trademark Tuesday as three forfeits occurred. The Cobb Carrousers forfeited to Old East, the Alexander Esquires to the Avery Ovaries, and the Everett Duds, unable to field a team, have forfeited all three of their games. The first was to Stacy on Tuesday, the second to the Avery Ovaries today. Thus the Ovaries have a 2-0 record and have yet to play a game.

The grad circuit gets under way today with the defending champion Peacocks meeting Med School and Law School playing Dental School. Also on tap are eight dorm clashes.

Tuesday's Tag Scores

Manly Riverrats 24—Everett Flashes 0
Cobb Colts 26—Lewis 0
Alexander Playboys 15—Joyner Jocks 0
Mangum Mavericks 20-Avery Addicts 13
AFROTC 19-Ruffin 19 (AFROTC won in O.T.)

Ranson's Aides Good

By ED DUPREE

Dale Ranson, veteran UNC cross-country coach, is not only blessed with a crew of talented runners for 1961, but has more coaching assistance than any previous year.

Ranson has four young coaches on hand to help him with the varsity and freshman track and cross-country teams. This staff is the youngest, if not the best in the ACC.

John Gutknecht is the only one of the four who is not a UNC graduate. John did his undergraduate work at Ohio Wesleyan and is now working for his Ph.D. in marine biology at Carolina. Gutknecht's most recent accomplishment was in June when he set the AAU meet record for the six-mile run with a time of 28 minutes, 52. This performance qualified him for a place on the United States track team which toured Europe this summer.

Wayne Bishop, now a first-year law student, was an outstanding distance man for Carolina for three years. During the 1958-59 season he took the ACC chamionship in cross-country and the two-mile run.

Cowles Lipfert, once captain of the Tar Heels track team, is the third members of the young quartet. Cowles graduated from UNC in 1960 and is back as a grad student. His top events were the mile and 880-yard run. In his senior year, Lipfert placed second in the ACC 880 event.

Bing Somers, a steady performer in cross-country, the mile and two-mile run as a UNC undergraduate is now enrolled in the graduate school of education. Bing was the number 12 man in the cross-country championships last fall.

Somers and Lipfert will be working mostly with the freshman runners, while Gutknecht and Bishop will be helping Ranson with both the varsity and frosh.

In addition, Coach Ranson has Frank Farrow, an undergraduate and ex-servicemen, working with the freshman cross-country team and expects Carl Sarndarl, a Swedish high-jumper, to work with his jumpers when the indoor track season begins.

Ranson says that these "coaches" have been invaluable to him in preparing his teams for the coming season. He stepped up preparations for the opening cross-country meet with Clemson with three-mile time trials Wednesday at Finley golf course. He expects these time trials to be a good yardstick for comparing his team at this stage of the season to the 1960 team which won the ACC championship.

William G. Herdren, third year student from New Bern, N. C., was appointed chairman of the fraternity social committee.

Soccermen Hopeful Despite 3-2 Setback

By MARTIN KRUMING

Although the beginning of the official 1961 soccer season is still six days away, Coach Marvin Allen's players jumped the gun Tuesday in a considerably-revealing scrimmage with Fort Bragg. The final score: Fort Bragg 3, UNC 2.

Trailing 1-0 in the second period, UNC tied the score as Frank Lankford drilled home the equalizer on an indirect kick from about ten feet out. The contest sea-sawed back and forth as the visitors scored in the second and fourth periods.

The Tar Heels' final tally came in the third frame, when a Carolina player lofted an arching corner kick which starting center forward Peter Blake headed past a sprawling Army net tender. Carolina had an opportunity to pull even with the visitors on a penalty shot but Blake missed the lower left hand corner by a matter of inches.

As is quite natural fer a non-pressure scrimmage, Allen's booters committed several costly errors which carelessness and lack of game experience can account for. But on the other hand the play of goalies Tom Griffith and Larry Steele, with 11 and 8 saves respectively, in addition to the defensive alertness of senior fullback Dick Bordogna and the offensive punch provided by right inside Bill Shettle, left Coach Allen in extremely high spirits.

Compared to the 1960 initial scrimmage, this one was a great deal more encouraging. Although the Tar Heels failed to take enough shots at the opposing nets, the crisp, short, and accurate pass strategy was executed in precision movement. The squad has one more pre-season tussle, with Little Creek here this afternoon, and then it's the start of a long and rigorous campaign.

Dean's Asst. Says Machines Smarter

By Linda Cravotta

"IBM machines did not chew up sorority rushee cards during rush," stated Assistant to Dean of Women Nancy Adams, in answer to rumors circulating about the newly installed equipment. "The only thing wrong with the IBM machines is that they are smarter than we are," she added with a smile.

Taking care of the complicated procedures of rush is only one of the problems which the IBM's have solved since their installation late last spring. These machines have already registered and recorded all summer school students and all students for the fall semester.

"We can do now in one week what it used to take four people six weeks to do," stated Raymond Strong, Director of the Office of Records and Registration.

Revolving IBM

Each student in the University now has their own number, which is the master key around which the IBM system revolves. This year the individual's number appears on all new Identification Cards.

"The only people who give us trouble with our system are the young ladies who get married," Strong revealed. "In fact, the only way you can get a new number is to get married or get a court order and change your name."

When a girl gets married, she is given a new number and also a cross reference to her old number so that she can also be located by her maiden name.

A master book which contains the numbers of all students registered is constantly being revised, particularly when new students are admitted. Each new student applying for admission now fills out a data processing sheet for his personal IBM number.

Rolling IBM

Grades are now submitted by means of a closs roll prepared by machines. The instructor inserts the grade on the roll and returns it to the Data Processing Center where the machines record and duplicate information.

Prior to the IBM machine installation, almost all of this work had to be done manually. Accuracy is now incalculably higher with machines handling the work, according to Strong.

Last year Robert Prenger, present chief of the Data Processing Division, was employed by the University to supervise installation and operation of the IBM equipment. The Data Processing Division is a smaller division of the Accounting Division, whose drector is H. L. Ferguson.

"At present, we are stressing the completion of one problem at a time," stated Ferguson, who added that eventually almost all accounting and financial procedures for the University will be handled by IBM machines.

Syrian Army Revolts Against United Arab Republic Rule

Nasser Calls Army To Crush Rebellion

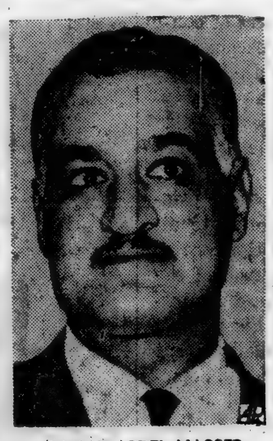
By DAVID DUGAS

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI)—The Syrian army revolted Thursday against President Gamal Abdel Nasser and the United Arab Republic control in a move that revived the threat of a Communist takeover in Syria. Nasser ordered his troops Thursday to crush the rebellion.

The revolutionaries who rose up Thursday morning were joined by Communists who demonstrated in the streets against Nasser and the UAR.

Nasser, in his second radio broadcast in ten hours, said Thursday night "I shall never accept bargaining or compromise" with the rebels and warned that they must now "accept the consequences of their action." He told his soldiers to "do your duty" to crush the revolt.

In an emotional speech over Cairo Radio Thursday morning he ordered the Royal Syrian First Army to march on Damascus and recapture it. The revolt appeared to end then but it flared up seven hours later and Nasser again gave the orders to march.



GAMAL ABDEL NASSER

Nasser's warnings and his troop order indicated he planned an all out military action to smash the rebellion which he called the greatest threat to the country since the Franco-British invasion of Suez in 1956.

Tried to Force Bargaining

He said the rebels tried to force Vice President Abdel Hakim Amer and Syrian army commander gen. Gamal Faysal to bargain with them at army headquarters in Damascus and to issue statements that the rebellion was over.

He said both refused because Amer did not approve the rebel communique claiming that the military situation had returned to normal. Thursday night rebel-held Radio Damacus said the revolt had flared again because the government did not fulfill its pledges.

The U.A.R. announced that Nasser had fired six leaders of the mutiny, stripped them of their rank and told their troops not to obey their orders. But the rebels retaliated by broadcasting their 11th communique of the day ordering a dark-to-dawn curfew. A 12th communique then said hopes for an end to the rebellion collapsed.

The UAR announcement listed the revolt leaders as Brigs. Abdel Ghani Dahman and Muwaffak Assafav, Lt. Cols. Abdel keim El Nahlawi, Haydar El Kuzbari, Nasseeb Hindi and Hisham AbdRabbu.

Children Join Outburst

Radio reports received here said street demonstrations against Nasser were carried out Thursday by mobs, including schoolchildren, who roamed through the streets chanting "Syria is for the Syrians. Long may it live an independent Republic."

Informed sources Thursday night said the Communists had exploited the situation to tear down the UAR flags and pictures of Nasser. They also raced through the streets shouting slogans against UAR and trying to foment further disorders.

Syria and Egypt were combined into the United Arab Republic in February 1958 and were later joined by Yemen. Egypt played a dominant role in the federation and resentment against Cairo's growing

Harriss Says Students Must Be Gentlemen

Student Body President Bill Harriss yesterday released the following statement concerning the UNC-State football game tomorrow:

"I want to take this opportunity to remind each student of his responsibility at the football game this Saturday. Over the past couple of years, student behavior at football games has steadily improved and it is my desire that improvement continue this year.

"A state law forbids the public display of alcoholic beverages and common decency demands gentlemanly conduct at our athletic contests.

Don't Throw

"I would call upon all students to refrain from throwing the cardboard placards used in our card section. Students have been hurt in the past and this is inexcusable.

"I feel that the behavior of some adults returning to UNC for football games is downright disgusting and that it reflects shame on our university. I feel that it is the responsibility of each student to conduct himself in such a manner that he will be an example of gentlemanly conduct rather than a bad reflection on the University and its student body.

"The men on the football team have worked hard preparing to beat State and I believe that the rest of us students should show our appreciation for their effort by acting like gentlemen and during the Tar Heels on to victory."

Demos, GOP Fight For New Members

By Jean Yoder

From either side of the "Y" and Lenoir Hall, the continuing battle between the Democrats and Republicans rages on as members of UNC's Young Democrats Club on the left side and Young Republicans Club on the right side stage their annual membership drives.

Both clubs are looking forward to active years according to the men minding membership campaign booths. The Democrats who have a membership goal of 500 had signed up approximately 350 members by Thursday afternoon while the Republicans with a goal of 200 members had signed up around 175. The only membership requirement for both parties is an interest in the group and a one-dollar fee to help cover operational expenses.

Full Schedule

The YDC has a full fall schedule which will be highlighted by the visit of President John F. Kennedy to the campus on Oct. 12, and by their plans to attend the State YDC convention on Nov. 9-11. Also they plan to help out and take part in the county politics whenever called upon.

The YRC, who are advocating joining to help "Stamp out High-tax Terry and free trips to Berlin for males 18-26," are anticipating the visits of several nationally known political figures this year.

Charles Raper Jonas, NC congressman is scheduled to speak at a time to be set later. Also four other congressmen, including Cramer of Florida, will speak in November. Earl Baker, president of the YRC, expressed the hope that possibly arrangements can be made for Richard M. Nixon and Sen. Barry Goldwater to speak here later in the year.

mittee and the second concerns the controversial procedures in voter registration. A news sheet will also be published by the YRC and distributed to members and exchanged with other YRC campus publications throughout the country.

A highlight of the year's activities for both clubs may come later in the year if a debate between the two organizations can be arranged. A challenge by YRC President Baker to YDC President La Fontaine Odom has been extended for a debate on the subject "Dissolved: That the One-Party System in North Carolina Has Been Detrimental to the Citizens and the State," but so far no definite plans have been made.

Commenting on Nixon's recent decision to run for the governorship of California, Baker said, "Undoubtedly Nixon had to make the decision if he was going to obtain any position in the party. Since the polls show he is ahead, with a well-run campaign he should win and thus place himself in position for the presidential nomination in '68 and possibly in '64 with a draft."

Carrboro Man Kills Himself

Raymond Brewer, 40, of 111 High St., Carrboro, shot himself to death this morning with a .12 gauge shotgun, according to Carrboro Police Chief J. A. Williams.

Walter Brewer, the victim's father, found the body yesterday about 8:15 a.m. in the house where the two lived.

Brewer was a carpenter. Funeral arrangements are being arranged by Walker Funeral Home.

Kidnapping In Berlin?

BERLIN—The East German Communists accused the United States Thursday night of "kidnaping" seven German refugees from the village of Steinstuecken and said U. S. helicopter flights to the village violated Communist air space.

Steinstuecken is considered part of the American sector of West Berlin but is isolated a mile within the Soviet Zone. The Communist people's police control the roads to the village and the U. S. Army has used helicopters to reach it.

U. S. officials promptly termed the Communist charge groundless. They said that under four power agreements Allied aircraft have the right to cross East German territory and land in Steinstuecken.

British Reject "Troika"

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—Britain warned Russia Wednesday against its "double-dealing" in world affairs and called upon the Soviet Union to abandon its policy of exploiting civil strife. Britain's foreign secretary, the Earl of Home, vigorously rejected the Soviet-proposed "troika," or any variant of the "troika" to direct the United Nations in succession to the late Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold.

In a policy speech to the General Assembly, Lord Home endorsed the disarmament plan proposed by the United States earlier this week, called for self-determination for the people of Berlin and all of Germany, and defended Britain against attacks on its "colonialist" policy.

Singer In "Good" Condition

NEW YORK—Singer Harry Belafonte, hospitalized for a severe respiratory infection, was reported in "good" condition Wednesday and was expected to leave the hospital by Sunday. A spokesman for the 34-year-old Negro entertainer said Belafonte would take another week's rest at home before resuming singing.

Belafonte was stricken Monday night during a two and a half hour benefit concert at Carnegie Hall. He said he had had a severe cold for the past five weeks. He entered doctors hospital on physicians' advice for observation, treatment and rest. His illness forced him to cancel an appearance at Nashville, Tenn. Wednesday and a network TV show Friday.

Caroline K. Views Ship

NEWPORT, R. I.—President Kennedy, yachting with his wife and their daughter Caroline, had a Navy destroyer halted in Narragansett Bay Thursday for a shipside look at the vessel and some 225 saluting crewmen lined on deck.

Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, wearing chartreuse slacks, blouse and kerchief, held 3½-year-old Caroline by the hand and pointed to the sailors as the 92-foot presidential yacht, Honey Fitz passed beside the 500-foot long grey battle craft, the U.S.S. Willis A. Lee.

'Buy One, Mom'

Next year, we have learned from a news story, the National Association of Secondary-School Principals will recommend the elimination of essay contests from the list of approved contests for schools.

An editorial discussing the article voiced its approval for the recommendation, chiefly on the grounds that any actual experience gained in the writing of such essays was outweighed by the considerable time spent.

The editorialist might have a point, but he seems to have overlooked some of the other school-sanctioned drains on the time of the student, most of which are more vulnerable to an editorial broadside than essay writing contests.

An essay contest, even if the subject is the relative merits of various soap products, seems to us a more valid academic pursuit than magazine sales, chocolate bar sales or some of the other "fund-raising" activities in which public school students are asked to participate.

Far too many schools either sponsor or sanction such sales. The question plaguing principals and teachers these days seems not to be "Why can't Johnny read?" but rather, "Why can't Johnny sell Life subscriptions?"

Commenting on the question of essay contests, the editorialist mentioned writes:

"All too often, sponsors of contests use the schools because in that way they can get their own special case before a sizeable group—a captive audience—and get the services of the teacher free to them."

He's right. But the same principal operates on a much more direct and grand scale in the case of selling projects. The sponsor of the sale gets a mass of almost irresistible salesmen to push his product at a minimum cost, usually a cut of the take to the school and something for little Johnny and Janey.

The ill effects of such campaigns are only moderately tempered by the "worthy cause" the project finances — new playground equipment, a paved parking lot, or a new item of equipment.

Much of the blame for these goings-on falls with the principals who sanction them. But more to blame are city and state legislatures which so deprive schools financially that principals are hard put to provide the niceties that modern education requires.

Some laws to prevent the use of public school students as salesmen would help solve the problem, but a greater help would be adequate appropriations to schools, eliminating the financial burden that spawns sales and contests.

We Must See The Real Hopes, Not Straws, In JFK Speech

It is important that the free men understand what he said. It is important that they realize that he pledged them to strength of backbone as well as to willingness to talk. It is important that they realize that he promised the will and the weapons to fight against Red aggression and in defense of freedom as well as the willingness, and the eagerness, to negotiate in defense of freedom.

selves to grasp at any straws in the selves to rasp at any straws in the President's speech. It was not a speech in which he attempted to hold out any straw hopes to any free men anywhere, just as it was not a speech in which he attempted to build up any straw defenses against the very real weapons of the Reds.

It would be only natural for a free man to want to read into the President's speech his own personal feeling that it would be the panacea for which the world is so desperately longing now. Free men don't naturally want to fight anybody, and free men don't naturally want to defend either themselves or their neighbors. Free men have always had to force themselves to fight, and it is in that reluctance that much of the strength of free men has always been found.

It is in this reluctance to fight that we could now find much of the danger to us as free men. We must remain reluctant to fight any man or any nation, but we must not permit ourselves any weakness in that reluctance.

We must not permit our love of peace to read any false hope into what President Kennedy said yesterday. We must not permit ourselves to shout great songs of joy and say that our enemies will be bound to respond to his superb plea for disarmament and for negotiation. We must permit ourselves to hope and pray that the Reds will respond to those pleas. But we also must force ourselves to pray that we will have the courage and the character to let the world know that we are willing to walk in the hard and bitter paths of war, just as we are willing to walk in the easier and pleasant paths of peace.

The President said that this generation can be known as the men who turned the world into a flaming pyre, or as the generation that met its vows to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war. Unfortunately, that simple statement just about sums up the world situation.

By realizing exactly the nature of the plow to which the President put our hands yesterday, we can help ourselves become the generation that did meet its vow of peace for men to come. By any attempts to convince ourselves that the plow handles are something that the President didn't say they were, we could so easily fail to turn the furrow that must be turned if free men are to be able to live on this planet.

WHADDIZZIT?

'In Loco Parentis'

In Loco Parentis.

What is it?

A theory. An anachronistic theory.

What does it mean?

Literally "in the place of a parent."

Where can it be seen in operation?

What's so wrong with it?

Wards, too immature to recognize right from wrong without autocratic guidance from above.

Guidance in the form of a heavy-handed administration which enforces the dubious premist that it, the administration, alone knows what is socially and intellectually best for the student.

In Loco Parentis.

What harmful effects does it cause?

It makes impotent and absurd any system of student self-government which attempts to function under its auspices.

How does it do that?

By making subject to administrative emasculation any and all decisions reached by members of such a system.

Why, then, does it exist?

Because there are a bountiful number of officials who are either blind or timid (or both): BLIND, in that they are unaware of the need for, and the ability of, students to truly govern themselves. TIMID, in that they fear the loss of some of their authority.

Why does it exist?

Because there are a bountiful number of officials who regard a student government merely as a device with which to manipulate their wards, a device which has the beguiling advantage of appearing to demonstrate confidence in the ability, integrity and responsibility of students, while doing nothing of the kind.

In Loco Parentis.

Synonym for a academic atrophy.

Inhibitor of maturity.

Retarder of ability.

Alchemistic, converting advice into decree.

Identifier of an institution whose officials have, by choice or by chance, overlooked the principle a man named Lincoln left behind:

"You cannot build character and courage by taking away a man's initiative and independence . . . You cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves."

'Silent Conservative' Explains Position

The editor of the Daily Tar Heel recently wondered where was the evidence of the New Conservatism on this campus, and rightly conjectured that most of it was underground.

Conservatives are little heard from at Carolina because they frequently find it impossible to come to grips with Liberalism upon any ground of intelligent discussion. Most Liberal writing in the columns of the DTH deals not in ideas but in epithets.

Editorials are seldom attempts to persuade or to discuss values. They are usually merely invocations of loaded terminology praising or condemning. As such they are unanswerable except in the fashion of "you're another one!"

• • •

LIBERALS WHEN confronted with opposition much prefer to label and disregard it than to approach it analytically. We once challenged an interpretation blithely given forth by an instructor as gospel with a differing set of conclusions of our own.

When we later had occasion to visit this instructor's office we were amusedly pointed out to one of his colleagues as one of those blank followers of William F. Buckley (of whom we had never heard until then).

Thus having categorized, catalogued, and labeled us and relegated us to the status of a zoo specimen, the gentleman felt himself released from the vexatious necessity of having to consider any ideas we might have at their own value.

• • •

ANYONE WHO has the unwarranted gall to challenge whatever Liberal mania is currently making the rounds is immediately denounced in purple tones as a follower of the John Birch society and put aside as beneath consideration. This reaction eventually begins to discourage anyone of conservative inclinations from entering into controversy and combatting what is to him patently absurd.

There were doubtless many conservatives on the campus not consciously bearing the label. Conservatives are generally people who have worked out their philosophy in their own minds and subsequently discovered that their reasoning made them "conservatives".

A great many of the most enthusiastic Liberals tearing around the campus are people who have adopted the label Liberal first and the ready-made philosophy that goes with it afterward. After all, who doesn't want to be on the side of the angels.

• • •

LIBERALISM FINDS recruits to fill its ranks easily. At Carolina you don't have to know anything to be a Liberal except who to be for and who to be against. It is something in the same class with owning a London fog jacket.

Conservatives are less vociferous because, unlike Liberals, they do not generally regard themselves as evangelicals entrusted with a divine mission to save everybody in spite of themselves.

Conservative action is currently nipped in the bud by having to struggle not only against Liberalism but against the natural inertia of the status quo. Although Liberals fondly regard themselves as innovators and individualists, Liberalism on the campus is an orthodoxy far more stodgy and reactionary than Liberals realize.

Liberals are very tolerant of dissent. They are always speaking up for some trapped Communist or fellow traveler. But let someone dissent toward the right wing, however moderately, and watch the fury fall down upon his head.

• • •

WHAT WOULD BECOME of a serious program to end Carolina's participation in the NSA? (It must be admitted that there are a number of fishy things about the NSA.) Such a program would have to go against not only the firebrand opposition of NSA supporters but also against numbers of people, neither Liberals nor conservative, of the type who just don't like to see things stirred up or changed.

Liberalism blankets the classroom so thoroughly that to oppose it is a hopeless battle. If a conservative objected every time some professor gave out a bit of Liberal dogma as objective truth, he would lack time to eat, sleep, or study.

• • •

SO HE CRINGES and keeps silence realizing that proselytizing attempts are often so obvious as to be self-defeating. Some professors' ideas of two sides to a question are Liberal Democrat and Liberal Republican.

Conservatives know (along with others who have been revolted by the extremities of Liberalism) that the much vaunted Liberalism of Carolina does not go very deep. Most of the faculty (imported from out of state) and most of the so-called leaders of student opinion (imported from out of state) are Liberal. To the thoughtful it should appear that four years at Chapel Hill makes pitifully little impression upon the fundamental conservatism of the vast majority of students who are not concerned with labels and dogmas.

1944 Blunder Cost U.S. Berlin

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The decision that restrained Allied armies from taking Berlin and permitted the Russians to seize that capital single-handed was a Roosevelt-Churchill decision of 1944.

Berlin was ripe to be plucked a year later in the spring of 1945. Sir Winston Churchill had realized before then that the decision of 1944 was a bad one. Churchill failed in his efforts to attract President Roosevelt's attention to this situation.

Churchill failed, also, in his efforts to persuade Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and the U. S. Joint Chiefs of Staff that the military decision of 1944 should be changed for political reasons in 1945. That is the hub of dispute now over responsibility for the Soviet Union claim of predominant authority and position in Berlin and with respect to the city's future.

• • •

EISENHOWER HAS abruptly challenged and repudiated a State Department implication that it was his decision to permit the Russians alone to overrun Berlin. Eisenhower was unimpressed by the political implications of the Russian capture of Berlin. Neither did he regard Berlin of major military importance. In a March 30, 1945, message to the U. S. Joint Chiefs, Eisenhower restated his military plans to drive deep into Germany elsewhere.

"May I point out," Eisenhower said in this message, "that Berlin itself is no longer a particularly important objective."

Josef Stalin encouraged Eisenhower in late March. Stalin endorsed the supreme commander's military plans and told him:

"Berlin has lost its former strategic importance. The Soviet high command therefore plans to allot secondary forces in the direction of Berlin."

• • •

CHURCHILL HAS PUT this Stalin blarney in its proper perspective with the following comment: "This statement (Stalin's) was not borne out by events." On the contrary, the Russians drove for and gained Berlin first. And that has led to the situation now existing in which the Berlin controversy may lead the world to all-out nuclear war. To Eisenhower on March 31, 1945, Churchill addressed a question and some repeated observations as follows:

"Why should we not cross the Elbe and advance as far eastward as possible. This has an important political bearing, as the Russian armies of the south seem certain to enter Vienna and overrun Austria.

"IF WE deliberately leave Berlin to them, the double event Vienna and Berlin may strengthen their conviction, already apparent, that they have done everything."

To Roosevelt, Churchill had addressed a message on April 1:

"If they also take Berlin as well as Vienna will not their impression that they have been the overwhelming contributor to our common victory be unduly imprinted in their minds. And may this not lead them into a mood which will raise grave and formidable difficulties in the future."

FDR was ill and unfit to deal with this great problem of strategy. Ike and the U. S. Joint Chiefs did not understand it. This was a great victory for the Soviet Union.

Conservatism: Dignity, Freedom

To the Editor:

A reply to your editorial of the 28 (Rise of Conservatism?) is difficult, as the subject consists of many issues, but I feel that one is necessary. I cannot speak upon the magnitude of conservative opinion here, for lack of information, but I would like to speak on a few basic issues, as you suggested, to stimulate more discussion on this subject.

The whole philosophy of Conservatism is stated in these words: What is best for all men for all time. It transcends the egocentric views of the modern liberal in its sense of duty toward posterity; Conservatism is the philosophy of political realism, providing for the maximum individual liberty possible, and concurrently maintaining that liberty for succeeding generations.

• • •

THIS, OF COURSE, makes the assumption that individual liberty is the natural state of man. This is an assumption that is necessary to anyone who believes that man is a spiritual being, and one that is borne out by a history of constant striving for self-expression and material freedom.

Conservatism is not reactionism; it attempts to preserve those institutions which have shown the most stability, to allow them to evolve as necessary with the changing times, but to keep their basic spirit alive. These principles, such as a republican form of government, the concept of private property, etc., are necessary to the preservation of individual liberty—it is these same principles that the liberal would destroy or impair in his haste to help man.

For example, the liberal would centralized government, and create a totalitarian democracy, which is not so paradoxical as it may seem—God help any minority then—and all this because it is "expedient" in obtaining equality for all—an expediency which may blindly destroy the very thing they seek—the dignity and freedom of the individual.

Gimghoul Castle Combines Old England, King Arthur

By Chuck Mooney

There's a touch of Old England including a Gothic Castle, a scale replica of King Arthur's Round Table and a lovers' rendezvous in Chapel Hill. It is Gimghoul Castle.

In 1926 the knights of the Order of Gimghouls authorized a group of Waldensian brick masons to erect a lodge for them. A Gimghoul knight and Carolina alumnus, N. C. Curtis of New Orleans, drew up the plans strictly to English castle standards.

This unique piece of architecture, built in the 11th century English dry build style using native stones, occupies the summit of Piney Prospect hill, near the Raleigh Road.

It consists of a large hall resembling the one in Beowulf's Saxon Manor, a circular stair tower and a larger tower with a reception room, chapter room and several other rooms.

Crude Irony

The castle is equipped with hand-forged hardware, pewter candlestands and wheel-like crude iron chandeliers. The windows and doors are protected by wrought iron grill work, done by Anthony Germino, a native Italian artisan of Durham.

In the reception room are life-sized statues of Apollyon and Christian from "Pilgrim's Progress," carved by Sandy Harriss of Orange County.

Harris carved these from two giant logs sometime during the quarter-century just before the Civil War. He was a prominent lawyer and politician in the Hillsboro-Oxford area, who created wood carvings as a hobby.

Round Table

The Order of the Knights of Gimghoul is a secret social group formed in 1899 by five Carolina students. Their rituals and functions are based on King Arthur's court etiquette.

Many nationally and locally distinguished jurists, politicians, attorneys, industrialists, and capitalists are included in their membership.

Lover's Duel

Long before the castle was built there, Piney Prospect became famous as the trysting place and scene of a duel in a legendary love affair between Peter Dromgoole and a "Miss Fanny."

Peter entered UNC in 1831 as a student who liked "cards and wild company." He became angry with a professor in the spring of 1833 and flunked out, having refused to be examined. Peter disappeared several days later.

Carolina mythology says that Peter and another unidentified young man argued over Miss Fanny at the commencement ball and arranged to settle with a duel at midnight next to a large rock on Piney Prospect.

An old slave overheard them and warned Miss Fanny. She raced from her bedroom in nightgown and slippers to stop them. As she arrived, she heard a shot; Peter lay dying. She turned to the winner and silently, ominously pointed down the Raleigh Road. He also disappeared.

Fanny, heart-broken, wasted away sitting in her window mourning her lover. She thought of their meetings by the little spring at the bottom of Piney Prospect and the dark red stains on the large rock.

When she died, the couple was supposedly buried underneath that rounded, smooth boulder—now called "Dromgoole's Tomb." Many people today swear that the stains on it are Peter's blood, unrinsed by rain and snow.

Duel Denied

The Honorable George C. Dromgoole, Peter's uncle and a graduate of the UNC law school, investigated the disappearance for several weeks, finding no truth to the rumored duel.

Dr. Kemp P. Battle, University President at the time, said in his "History of UNC" that Peter, too ashamed to go home after flunking, drifted west to Texas and was kill in a gunfight.

Peter's roommate, John Buxton Williams of Warren County, said that Peter had no rivals and there was no duel.

Bruce Cotten, an authority on Dromgoole genealogy and a descendant of Peter's grandfather, said that Peter joined the Army under his roommate Williams' name.

Auto Workers Threaten To Order 120,000 More Off Ford Motor Co. Jobs

By COBERT IRVIN
UPI Automotive Editor

DETROIT (UPI) — The United Auto Workers Union, which only this week ended a series of crippling walkouts at General Motors, warned Thursday it would pull 120,000 workers off their jobs at Ford Motor Co. at 10 a.m. next Tuesday unless a contract settlement is reached by then.

Notice of the strike deadline was served on Ford by UAW President Walter P. Reuther when he returned to the bargaining table Thursday afternoon.

He told Ford that the company's "failure" during intensive bargaining sessions this week to meet the union's contract demands was "evidence of its reluctance to bargain to a conclusion in the absence of a strike deadline."

Hence, Reuther said, the "UAW feels it has no choice but to set a strike deadline in the hope this will stimulate the company to recognize the sense of urgency necessary to consummate a national contract."

Ford itself had set an unofficial deadline Monday when it made a new economic offer to the union contingent upon a peaceful settlement within two weeks—by Oct. 9.

Reuther told the company this amounted to an implication that a strike deadline is "an essential part" of collective bargaining. The union—although it was now setting its own deadline—said it considered "this attitude unfortunate and unwise."

Ford made the union the same economic offer the UAW accepted at General Motors, and it was believed this has been accepted at least in principle.

Chief stumbling block to a national settlement appeared to be non-econimc demands.

Also still hanging fire were local plant-level demands—the very problem that triggered the General Motors strikes which at their peak idled more than a quarter million workers.

Ford has 85 local bargaining units and local settlements have been reached at less than 25 per cent of them.

However, Reuther appeared determined to avoid strikes over local issues, and the strike deadline applied to national contract issues.

Ford's economic offer includes six-cents an hour wage increases for each of three years, freezing into basic wages 12 of the present 17 cents in cost of living pay, full company—paid health insurance and other fringe benefits.

David Pizarro of the UNC Music Department faculty will give an organ recital at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 3, in Hill Hall under the auspices of the department's Tuesday Evening Series. Admission is free and everybody is invited.

The program will include works by Buxtehude, Bach, Richard Donovan, John Stanley and Marcel Dupree.

Mr. Pizarro received his master's degree in 1953 at Yale University, and from 1953 to 1955 he studied in Germany as a Fulbright scholar. Before coming here he held organ choirmaster positions in New York and Connecticut and was an instructor in music at North Carolina College in Durham.

NEW RECORD

Belatedly unearthed is the fact that North Carolina quarterback Ray Farris broke one of Charlie Justice's school records last season. In attempting 143 passes during the year, Farris surpassed the old Choo Choo mark of 135, set in 1948. Justice still is the author or co-author of 24 single game, season, and career marks.

Woodall To Crown Queen; Award Flag

Sue Woodall, recently selected Miss North Carolina and former Carolina co-ed, will return to the campus tomorrow where she is slated to crown the Consolidated University Day Queen.

She will attend the State game and appear on the field with the CU Day Queen contestants at half time. That night, she will crown the winner at the CU Day Dance, sponsored by the Grail in Woollen Gym.

At the dance Miss Woodall will also give the new Consolidated University flag to the captain of the winning football team of the day. They will keep the flag all year until the next CU Day and Caroina-State grid contest.

UNC Political Internes Spent Ten Weeks In Capital Getting 'Realistic' Political Picture

By LINDA BISER

"What's politics and what's not" was revealed to seven UNC political internes recently returned from a 10 week summer sojourn on Capitol Hill in Washington, D. C.

Firsthand political experience gained by working for members of the House of Representatives provided the seven a "more realistic picture" of political proceedings.

Repaid with $500 grants from the Reece and Laura Falk Foundation of Pittsburgh, Pa., the seven handled chosen representatives' correspondence, greeted constituents, and summarized bills. Interne Joe Oppenheimer of Birmingham, Ala. says he "did something different every day."

Supplementing the political apprenticeship, the group interviewed 37 persons prominent in national politics. Newsmen James Reston and David Brinkley were interview favorites since "they could afford to be franker than government people" explained Tony Rogers, interne from Fort Pierce, Fla.

UNC Unique

"UNC is the only university in the South with a program of this kind," stated Don Matthews, director of the internes and professor of political science. To maintain a reputation for sending good internes, the department requires that applicants have a B average. Usually 5-7 applicants are selected, not necessarily political science majors, but ordinarily Democrats who are placed with Democrat representatives. (Only one Republican has participated since the program began in 1957.) Applicantions will be available for the summer 1962 program in January.

Gil Stallings of Louisburg assisted Rep. Horace Kornegay and observed "particularly the area involved with the electorate."

Jack David Fleer of Washington, Mo., mingled with the approximately 300 other political internes on the Hill in exploring the domestic scene. "Although we didn't get into much of that," he noted.

Intrnationla House

However, the group lived in an international student house, Gaunt House. They commuted from their quarters in an area described as "an oasis in downtown Washington" to the Capitol, approximately two miles away. Fleer described the housing as very reasonably priced but not the most luxurious.

Fleer took time to research in the Library of Congress, do some night work and date. He assisted Rep. Richard Bolling, a liberal from his home state, Missouri. He and Rogers, assistant to Rep. Frank Thompson of N. J., consider liberals the most intelligent politicians. Oppenheimer worked for an ex-college professor, Rep. Ken Hechler of W. Va., and found politics strikingly similar to the UNC Student Legislature. That is, a representative of either group must descide whether to vote as his consituents would or as he thinks he should vote.

"Books tell the structure and function of politics, said Oppenheimer but understanding men's behavior results from observing the men in action." Now when he reads of Washington Congressional activities in newspapers, he feels he has a greater understanding of why a politician behaves as he does.

Lobbyist OK

Rogers observed lobbyists are not as bad as some books depict them. "Opinions of major lobbying groups are often sought by Congressmen as valuable information," he said. Rogers discarded a lot of his cynical views on politics while in Washington, he relates.

Interne Steve Grafman of Birmingham, Ala. assisted Rep. George Huddleston, also of Alabama. Grafman was "very much impressed with the caliber of men representing us."

Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn stressed to the youth political aspirants the importance of a knowledge of history and was remembered "not so much for what he said but the way he said it."

Internes generally expressed interest in attending law school after graduation but were somewhat hedgy about future political ambitions.

Other students participating included Richard Alan Barton of Baton Rouge, La., assisting Rep. Hill Boggs also of Louisiana and George Robert Boynton Jr. of Durham assisting Rep. Frank Ikard of Texas.

Matthews termed the internes "outstanding students" and the Congressmen they assisted "an unusually good group, quite influential, young, vigorous and imaginative."

Rockefeller Skeptical About Nixon Decision

B. Goldwater Believes Dick

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Richard M. Nixon's declaration that his decision to run for California governor in 1962 definitely takes him out of the running for president in 1964 was greeted Thursday with open skepticism from New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

"I don' think Nixon is out of the race," said Rockefeller at Buffalo, N. Y., when asked about the 1964 presidential campaign. But he offered to campaign in Nixon's behalf for governor "if he asks me."

In contrast, Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona—like Rockefeller a man frequently mentioned as a 1964 Republican presidential candidate — said he believed Nixon when the former vice president said he would not try to use California's governorship as a stepping stone to the White House. He called Nixon's statement a "valid, honest promise" to serve four years if elected. But neither of the two men Nixon must beat to become governor believed the announcement made Wednesday night canceled the possibility of his running a second time for president in 1964.

Former Gov. Goodwin J. Knight said he was in the Republican primary to the finish, regardless of Nixon's declaration. Knight, who gave up a chance to run for governor in 1958 and lost a Senate race instead, contended Nixon's statement did not preclude a "draft Nixon" move.

Brown Responds Quickly

Democratic Gov. Edumund G. Brown, an unannounced but almost certain candidate for re-election, was quick to respond. "The Nixon announcement means simply that he will be a candidate for president again in 1964," he said.

Brown called "amiable but bungling" by Nixon, said the former vice president "surrendered to heavy pressure from Republican bosses in the East to enter a contest he tried to avoid."

Nixon appeared to make every effort to dispel conjecture on his running for president in three years. His prepared statement said flatly he would run for governor and not for president.

Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower said he was "very pleased" with Nixon's decision. Eisenhower already had given his backing to Nixon after a meeting at the former president's Gettysburg, Pa., farm.

"I am sure every member of the Republican party, as well as large numbers of Democrats and Independents, join me in wishing him well," said Eisenhower.

Prepared In Advance

A literal verbal wave of reaction —some obviously prepared in advance in anticipation of Nixon's decision—followed the announced candidacy.

Richard M. Nixon announced Wednesday that he would seek the governorship of California in 1962. Nixon told newsmen he would not seek the presidency again in 1964. Republican leaders around the country praised his decision yesterday.

Nixon Is Out Only If Fails

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former vice president Richard M. Nixon is "out" of the 1964 Republican presidential picture only if he fails to win the California governorship.

This is about the safest conclusion that Nixon's intimates would make in weighing his announcement that he will run for the governorship but "not seek the presidency in 1964."

Traditionally, smart politicians neither cross nor burn their bridges until they have to do so. Nixon, who lost to President Kennedy last year by an historically narrow margin, had to make it clear he intends to serve a full term if he is elected governor. Any other stand would invite defeat.

Also, few Republicans expect 1964 to be as good a time to try for the White House as 1968—and Nixon at 48 is young enough to wait.

Conditions Could Change

But anything can happen to alter drastically the conditions or demands of the times.

Syrian Army In Revolution Against UAR

importance apparently touched off Thursday's revolt.

One of the main reasons Syria joined Egypt in the UAR was because of widespread fears the Communists were about to take over Syria. A new Communist revolt was believed seething beneath the surface and there was speculation the rebels announced the shortlived revolt "settlement" Thursday to confuse the Reds.

After the reported "settlement" with Amer, commander-in-chief of the U.A.R. armed forces, authoritative sources said the rebels had resumed their demands including an end to Egyptian "corruption."

Broadcasts said the revolutionary council was in supreme command in Damacus and that it had imposed a curfew on the city from 7 p.m. to 6 a.m. Schools were ordered closed and students went home.

Unidentified broadcasts said some demonstrators attacked government buildings, shattered the U.A.R. emblem at the health ministry and hauled down the U.A.R. flag from public buildings.

Tar Babies Tackle State's Wolflets In Raleigh At 8

RALEIGH — The annual Shrine Bowl game between the North Carolina State and the North Carolina freshmen tonight in Riddick Stadium, kicks off a big week-end of State versus Carolina in football.

The Shrine game opens the Consolidated University week-end rivalry at 8:00 p.m. here with the varsity game set for 2:00 p.m. at Kenan Stadium in Chapel Hill.

Both Coach George Barclay of the Tar Babies and Clements of the Wolflets feel they have some standout performers on their squads.

The current State squad, however, doesn't have the depth in the line or speed in the backfield that last year's Wolflets had.

"We just don't know what kind of team we have until we meet someone else," said Clements. The State freshmen did have a game-like scrimmage against the varsity reserves last week, with the reserves prevailing, 7-0. However, last year, the Wolflets also bowed to their varsity mates by a touchdown margin, but then went undefeated.

Offensive linemen will be Bill Hall, Plymouth, and Jim Earwood, Asheville, at end; John Irvin, Crewe, Va., and Bob Cooch, Pottsville, Pa., at the tackles; Bennett Williams, Ahoskie, and Bruzz Perdue, Valdese, at guard; and Sam Saunders, Waynesboro, Va., at center.

Center Jay Malobicky and right tackle Bob Starczewski are both billed for starting duty.

The two were standouts at Har-Brack High, the same school Barclay starred at before he enrolled at Carolina and became the school's first All-America as a guard.

Barclay, who was Tar Heel head coach from 1953 to 1955 and has been an assistant coach since then says this year's freshman group 'is a fine looking bunch."

The other tentative starters Barclay listed for today's game include John Hanburger and Frank Gallagher, ends; John Hill and Starczewski, tackles; Paul Fedor and Clint Eudy, guards; Malobicky, center; Ron Tuthill, quarterback; Dave Braine and Tommy Ward, halfbacks; and Ken Willard, fullback.

Gallagher is the highly talented and much sought after lad from Chester, Pa. He has a twin brother, Jim, who may do some quarterbacking against State.

Morehead Scholar Eudy of China Grove, N. C. is also well thought of, as is halfback Ward, who came here on a one-year athletic scholarship that is now certain to be extended. He is from Robersonville, N. C.

The two other North Carolinians on the first unit are Hill (Greensboro) and Tuthill (Rockingham). Tuthill is a half-step ahead of Charlotte's Gary Black, both of whom are fine runners.

Perhaps one of the finest prospects at the moment is Richmond, Va. native Willard, who was reportedly offered $100,000 to sign with Boston Red Sox. The 6-2, 200-pounder charges hard and low.

Maellet, Trenbath Lead Cake Winners

Art Maellet and Richard Trenbath walked off with first places in Thursday's 19th annual intramural cake race.

Maellet won his race in the Open Division easily. Jerry Smith and David Radford finished second and third, respectively. Only members of the freshman cross country team were eligible to compete in the Open Division.

Trenbath's victory in the Novice Division was not as easy as Maellet's. Jon Lancaster led the pack until the last turn when Trenbath overtook him. Lancaster finished second, while Garland Carlton took third.

The three winners in each division all received cakes for their efforts. The prizes were baked by Mrs. Curtis Hogan.

The 1.55 mile course started at Fetzer Field, went past the new dormitories, by Bell Tower, around the Institute of Government, and back to Fetzer Field.

Soccer Team Sought; Swim Drills Begin

Anyone interested in participating on an all-campus soccer team in a scrimmage against the varsity please contact Chuck Wrye at St. Anthony Hall, in the evenings. No experience is necessary, just a desire to play soccer. The game will be sometime during the coming week.

Varsity swimming workouts get underway Monday at 4:30 p.m. Participants should report to the south end of the main floor of Woollen Gym, dressed in sweat gear.

Notre Dame Begins 73rd Grid Season In Televised Contest With Oklahoma

Notre Dame, Ind., Sept. 28 — It's almost post time. The 73rd football season for the University of Notre Dame will begin this coming Saturday (Sept. 30) when the Irish and the University of Oklahoma clash in a 2:30 p.m. (Central Daylight Time) game at Notre Dame stadium.

It is a contest that will be seen by upwards of 55,000 in person, and also watched and listened to by the rest of the nation, as it will be televised and broadcast from coast-to-coast over the facilities of the American Broadcasting Company.

There are many interesting angles on this game. For the past 25 years, Oklahoma and Notre Dame, in that order, have been the two winningest teams in college football. But both had the rare experience of losing seasons last year—the Sooners, three wins, six defeats, one tie, and the Irish, two victories and eight defeats—and so are the more determined to start 1961 with a victory. And it will be a case of two experienced outfits facing each other. Notre Dame, according to Coach Joe Kuharich, will field an eleven for the opening kickoff composed of nine seniors and two juniors, while Coach Bud Wilkinson's Sooners will line up with eight seniors and three juniors.

Dame line, headed by guards and Co-captains Nick Buoniconti and Norb Roy, is a senior, and six of the seven men have earned two monograms. The seventh, right end John Powers, was a regular at the start of last season, but was sidelined for the season as a result of a knee injury suffered early in the second game. In the backfield, all four starters are monogram-winners, and senior halfbacks George Sefcik and Angelo Dabiero have each earned two. The two listed Irish starters, who are juniors, are Quarterback Daryle Lamonica and Fullback Mike Lind.

The Oklahoma story is just about the same. Every starter is a letterman, and seven of the 11, headed by Captain and left tackle Billy White, have won two.

In the case of each team, a sophomore back had been given some likelihood of breaking into the starting lineup . . . at Notre Dame, it was Paul Costa, 230-pound left half, and for the Sooners, it was Quarterback Bill Van Burkleo. And though neither was named in the starting groups announced by the rival coaches early this week, spectators can reasonably expect to see a good deal of both.

This will be the fifth game between the two schools. Notre Dame has the edge in wins, Oklahoma in points scored. The Irish gained one touchdown victories in 1952 (27-21), 1953 (28-21), and 1957 (7-0), and the Sooners enjoyed a shutout by the walloping count of 40-0, in 1956.

State Booters Inexperienced

RALEIGH—Coach Melvin Cooper's 1961 N. C. State soccer team has only two lettermen returning as State prepares for a ten-game schedule that will find them facing five Atlantic Coast foes and five non-conference opponents.

The opening match for the 'Pack will be an ACC battle with South Carolina here on October 2. However, a practice scrimmage will be held Saturday morning, September 30, against the U. S. Naval Amphibious Base as a warm-up to the ten-game schedule.

This season will be the first for Cooper who took over the coaching duties from Bill Leonhardt. The new State coach has been an ACC soccer official for the past four years and he has taught in the State College intramural program.

Bob Nelson and Harry Meheras are the only lettermen back from last year when a State team was unable to win a match, with a 2-2 tie with Duke its best effort in 11 outings.

The 1961 schedule follows:

South Carolina, Oct. 2, home; Pfeiffer, Oct. 4, home; Maryland, Oct. 9, away; Virginia, Oct. 10, away; Washington and Lee, Oct. 12, home; North Carolina, Oct. 19, home; Belmont Abbey, Oct. 24, away; Duke, Oct. 26, away; Davidson, Nov. 2, away; Lynchburg, Nov. 4, home.

Gabriel Dominates State's Backfield

By Sd Dupree

N. C. State's Roman Gabriel may be "Mr. Wolfpack," but the machine-like quarterback isn't the only outstanding back the Tar Heels will have to watch in tomorrow's contest.

Gabe is undoubtedly the biggest scoring threat in the Atlantic Coast Conference, if not the nation, but Coach Earle Edwards' "second-string" quarterback is just as dangerous in the defensive backfield.

Tom Dellinger, the "second-stringer," was one of the defensive standouts in the conference last year and opened the season against Wyoming in the same capable manner. The 6-2, 195-pounder recovered a Wyoming fumble, intercepted a pass and seemed to be right in the middle of every play.

"Dell" is a senior and has played behind Gabriel for four seasons in a row. He's a good passer, as he's shown in some of his rare opportunities—these include State's Red-White spring games in which he led his team to victory in 1960.

Back on offense, Gabe can always hand the ball off to one of two hard-charging fullbacks. Jim D'Antonio, a 5-11, 195-pound senior and Roger Moore, a 6-foot, 200-pound junior give Edwards good reason to be happy about the fullback slot.

D'Antonio averaged three yards a carry in 1960 and is currently holding down the starting berth, but Moore, a sturdy runner with good speed, averaged 3.2 as a sophomore and could easily see more actian than D'Antonio.

A sophomore fullback, Dave Houtz, figures prominently in the Wolfpack lineup—as a punting specialist. Houtz, who stands 5-10 and weighs 196, booted an 83-yard first-half kick which kept Wyoming in its own territory for most of the half. His four kicks averaged 48 yards, even though one officially went only one yard. In that play, a high pass from center sailed over Houtz' head for a sure 25-yard loss. But the surprising rookie recovered the ball, dodged would-be tacklers, and booted the ball one yard past the line of scrimmage. Later, Coach Edwards termed the play "the best I've ever seen a sophomore make."

Edwards was counting on soph Carson Bosher to help the State ground attack but the 5-8, 185-pounder is injured and isn't expected to be ready for tomorrow's game. Bosher led State's undefeated frosh team last year in scoring with 44 points and was a sure starter for the Wolfpack before his injury.

Tony Koszarsky, another sophomore is a hard-running halfback who should see a lot of action against the Tar Heels. The 5-8, 168-pounder scored seven touchdowns and formed a one-two scoring punch with Bosher on the 1960 yearling team.

Two more sophs, Mike Clark and Poe Scarpati will handle the chores in the defensive secondary. Clark is a 5-10, 181-pounder who will also see a lot of offensive action. Scarpatti, identical in size to Clark, was the outstanding defensive back for last year's frosh. If these two can adequately replace Claude Gibson and Jack Stanton—defensive aces in 1960—then the defensive secondary will be in top shape.

Chi Psi Comes From Behind To Clip Phi Delts By 18-16

By John Montague

Chi Psi blew a 12-0 lead, then pulled the game out of the fire in the final minute, and walked off with their second win of the young campaign, an 18-16 thriller over the Phi Delts. The winning play came after Pete Bondi had picked off a Phi Delt pass at midfield. Andy Billesdon tossed a 60-yard aerial to Dick Lewisohn in the end zone, pulling the Chi Psi's out of a 16-12 deficit.

The Phi Delts did some coming-from-behind themselves. TD's by Tom Koontz and Luke Fitchthorn had given the Psi's a 12-0 lead, when Phi Delt struck for a safety, two touchdowns and another safety in that order. Scoring were Semi Mintz and Bob Reardon on TD's and Steve Harris, who was responsible for both safeties.

Surrey Roberts had a big day, scoring three TD's to lead DKE to an easy 37-0 triumph over Pi Lamb. Other scorers in the rout were John O'Bannon, Dave Wysong and Eddie Murrey.

Theta Chi and Delta Upsilon remained unscored on in two games, the latter stopping Pi Kappa Phi, 19-0 on TD's by Brick Oettinger, Odell Dillard and John Jones. Theta Chi walked over Kappa Psi to the tune of 32-0, on the strength of two touchdowns by Cronin Byrd and one each by Butch Barrineau, John Jennrich and Glaser.

Defending champion Zeta Psi got moving in he second half and picked up a 15-0 win over Lambda Chi. Doug Fox and Arch Allen did the TD honors in this one. In another shutout, Delta Sig toppled AK Psi, 28-0, with John Corbett scoring two touchdowns and two extra points. John Griswald and Olin Smith also chalked up scores for the victors.

Bill Beyis gets the credit for the safety which was the undoing of Beta as PiKA scored an 8-7 win. Dave Dixon tallied for the winners while Robert Rascoe was a TD-maker for the losers.

In other games, Sammy Simpson did all the scoring for ATO in his team's 13-7 win over Chi Phi. Pete Wilday scored a TD for Chi Phi and Bill Barnett picked up the PAT. The ZBT's took a 12-6 verdict over SPE on the strength of TD's by Hyman Barshay and Harold Gelbre. Bill Blevins was the lone SPE scorer.

At the end of the first week, league leaders are: Theta Chi in League I, DU and ATO in II, Delta Sig and Kappa Sig in III, Chi Psi in IV, Sigma Nu and Zeta Psi in V, and KA in VI.

A single elimination handball tournament will be held on Monday, October 9, and entries are now being accepted at the Intramural Office. The entry deadline for this all-campus event is Wednesday, October 4.

Nasser's UAR Collapses

BEIRUT, Lebanon—President Gamal Abdel Nasser's United Arab Republic collapsed Friday.

Syria declared its independence from the union with Egypt after a lightning revolution and set up a civilian transitional government to rule until a parliament can be named in free elections.

The rebels' victory was so swift and so complete that Jordan immediately recognized the new Syrian government and pledged "unlimited support." Other Arab nations jealous of Nasser's power were expected to follow suit. Turkey also recognized Syria.

Hammarskjold Buried

UPPSALA, Sweden—Dag Hammarskjold was buried among his ancestors Friday while the bells of ancient Uppsala cathedral tolled a requiem for the son of Sweden who served the world in the cause of peace.

A simple headstone in the quiet country cemetery on the outskirts of this university town marked the final resting place of a man who had roamed the world in a war against war and died in a flaming plane crash in the African jungle.

German Parties Confer

BONN—The Free Democratic Party (FDP) parliamentary group Friday accepted Chancellor Adenauer's invitation to join his Christian Democrats (CDP) in talks on forming a new government.

The two parties will open negotiations Monday, and the FDP is expected to reverse its earlier stand and agree to cooperate with Adenauer. Smallest of the three parties in parliament, it holds the balance of power.

Political Science Fellowships Open

The 1962-63 Congressional Fellowship Program, sponsored by the American Political Science Association, has been announced by Evron M. Kirkpatrick, executive director. The program is open to political scientists, political journalists, and law school faculty members.

Each winner will spend nine months in Washington, D. C. (beginning November, 1962) working as a staff member in the office of a senator, a representative or a congressional committee.

Each fellowship carries a minimum stipend of $4,500, most of which is non-taxable, plus traveling expenses to and from Washington.

Also Participate

In addition to practical working experience in Congress, the ASPA congressional fellows will participate in a two-month orientation program that includes interviews, meetings and seminars with leading political figures from all areas of government, Washington newsmen, and professors of political science.

Grant Enables

The association's congressional fellowship program is made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation and enables young political scientists and journalists to have a fuller understanding of Congress and its operations through actual working experience during one session on Capitol Hill.

More than 100 fellows have come to Washington since the program was established in 1953.

3 CU Presidents Here Today

Rites Honor Gardner

Frank Graham, Gordon Gray and William Friday will speak today in ceremonies at Chapel Hill, in Hill Hall at 11 a.m., honoring the late O. Max Gardner.

They speak as presidents of the Consolidated University of North Carolina since the joining of the three institutions, a product of the Gardner administration.

A portrait of Governor Gardner, who also was Ambassador to the Court of St. James, will be unveiled by O. Max Gardner III, of Shelby, 15-year-old grandson of the late prominent North Carolinian.

Governor Terry Sanford and Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges will participate in the ceremonies. Gov. Sanford will preside.

Friday To Accept

Presentation of the portrait will be made by Mrs. O. Max Gardner of Shelby, and President Friday will accept for the University.

Invocation will be by Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House and benediction by the Rev. Marion DuBose Jr., of the Kings Mountain Baptist Church.

Among the many guests to be present for the occasion will be faculty members of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Raleigh and Greensboro who have been winners of the Gardner Award. The Gardner Award is given annually for that member of the University faculties who has done most during the year previous "for the benefit of mankind."

UNC Graduate

O. Max Gardner was a Cleveland County native, a graduate of both N. C. State and UNC at Chapel Hill, was Governor of the State, a textile manufacturer, friend of education, a distinguished Washington lawyer, and was selected to be Ambassador to the Court of St. James in London and was stricken as he was about to depart for Great Britain.

The three speakers, Graham, Gray and Friday, were consecutively the Presidents of the University of North Carolina under consolidation. Dr. Graham was the first, taking office by moving from the Presidency of the University in Chapel Hill. Gordon Gray succeeded Dr. Graham after Dr. Graham was appointed United States Senator. William C. Friday succeeded Gordon Gray in 1956.

Sanford Opens Bond Issue Campaign

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Gov. Terry Sanford and State Rep. John W. Umstead of Chapel Hill opened a statewide campaign Thursday to push over the Nov. 7 bond issue.

The $61,665,000 issue includes $5,892,000 for UNC and $7,353,000 for State and Woman's Colleges.

Campaign Opens

The campaign was opened at a luncheon at the State College student union in Raleigh. Sanford told more than 250 persons that the issues "do not represent any one segment, no one part of the economy, no one political party, but the needs of all the people."

In addition to $31,008,000 for higher education, the issue includes appropriations for the Department of Administration, correctional schools, community colleges, mental institutions, the Department of Archives and History, local hospital construction, agricultural research stations, conservation and development and $13.5 million for the state ports authority.

Rep. Umstead is chairman of the steering committee of the Citizens' Committee for a Better North Carolina, whose purpose is to insure passage of all these items.

"I have served on 11 of 12 appropriations committees in the General Assembly," said Chapel Hillian Umstead. "The issues in this bond election have been given careful study, and it is important that each one carries."

Other Chapel Hill residents on he 200-member Citizens Committee are Donald Anderson, UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock, W. D. Carmichael III, UNC Dean of Faculty James Godfrey, Col. Holland L. Robb and Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Robinson.

Two million dollars for additions to the Health Center is the major UNC portion of the bond issue. One million dollars is requested toward the $1,622,000 needed to build a new student union-undergraduate library. The remainder of UNC requests consist of renovations and additions to existing buildings, plus $730,000 for a new cafeteria-service building.

DTH Meeting

There will be an important staff meeting for all members of the Daily Tar Heel in the DTH offices next Tuesday at 4 p.m. Attendance is required.

"Last Hurrah" Tonight

Tonight's Free Flick, "The Last Hurrah," starring Spencer Tracy, is based on Edwin O'Conner's novel of the old-time political boss in a predominantly Irish-American city.

It is said to be taken from the biography of Boston's former mayor, James Curley.

Others in the cast include Jeffery Hunter and Pat O'Brien. Tonight showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall and I.D. cards will be necessary for admittance.

Game Highlights Day's Festivities

Students from WC, State and Carolina will congregate on campus today in observance of Consolidated University Day, highlighted by the UNC-State game.

CU Day, or a similar occasion, has been celebrated for about 30 years, its purpose being to bring a greater rapport among the three branches of the university.

Today will be one of much festivity, with the State game and several dances and parties.

Miss North Carolina, Susan Kay Woodall, returns to the campus to help select and crown the CU Day Queen, and to present the newly designed Consolidated University flag to the grid victors of the day.

CU Day Dance

She will award the flag to the team captains of State or UNC tonight at the Grail-sponsored CU Day Dance in Woollen Gym unless there is a tie. In such a case, WC would hold the flag until next all.

This afternoon following the game, the CU Student Council and GM are jointly sponsoring a reception on the GM lawn. Tonight the lawn. The Carolina Playboys the lawn. T he Carolina Playboys will furnish the music for both affairs.

At 5:30 p.m. the sophomore class is offering students a barbecue for a dollar apiece. All proceeds go to the class of 1964.

GM Holding Lawn Party

Graham Memorial, in conjunction with the Consolidated University Student Council, is holding a reception on the GM lawn today following the State-Carolina game.

Beginning at 8:30 p.m., GM is also sponsoring a dance on the lawn. It will last util 11:30 p.m.

The Carolina Playboys, a dance combo making their first appearance here, will furnish the music for both occasions.

Hearing Speedup Asked

Local attorney Gordon Battle asked Chapel Hill aldermen Tuesday night to speed up a hearing on the zoning ordinance which would require power companies to get special use permits before erecting line towers.

Mr. Battle represents property owners contesting the location of lines planned by the Duke Power Co. He asked that the hearing be held early enough to allow the Aldermen to act before the lines are installed.

A hearing had been planned for Oct. 9. However, this date was impossible because of legal advertising requirements. The hearing was rescheduled for Oct. 24.

Commissioners were appointed in a court hearing last week to determine where the line on the south side of Chapel Hill will run and the value of the property it will cross.

Church Key

The Wesley Foundation will meet at 6:30 p.m. Sunday in the basement of the University Methodist Church. Dialogue groups begin at 7 p.m. led by Dr. Harold McCurdy, Sam Magill, Rev. DeWitt Meyers and Rev. Bob Johnson. Refreshments and recreation will follow at 8 p.m.

* * *

The Canterbury Club will meet this Sunday night at 5:30 for dinner, followed by a short devotion and a program. The speaker will be Dr. Arnold Nash who will talk n "The Heresies in the Devil Theory of Communism."

Anonymity

In the interests of fairness, the DTH refuses to print any letter or column unless the writer's name accompanies it.

This is a perfectly satisfactory policy to most studenls who volunteer comment son various topics. A firmly convicted person hsa n qualms about flying his name over his ideas: if they are well-founded, the writer need not hide himself under a cloak of anonymity.

Yet the number of unsigned letters and columns we receive surreptitiously through the mails, tacked on the door, or slipped under it, is enought to discredit our belief that students still have enough courage to support their ideas openly.

All such unsigned contributions immediately find their way into the wastebastek where they belong.

It is not so easy, unfortunately, to deal with letters carrying a false name. Many people attempt to bypass the DTH policy against printing unsigned letters by signing a pseudonym. It is always difficult to determine whether a name is authentic. If it does not appear in either the student of Chapel Hill phone directories, it is next to impossible.

Since we try to print every letter we receive, some are bound to get printed without the true name of the writer. This is unfair to the campus and reflects a shocking lack of ethics on the part of the writer.

We ask that all contributors have the minimum amount of courage necessary to affix their real name to al litems submitted for publication. No names will be withheld under any circumstances.

Athletics & Lenoir Hall

As several students have noted in letters to the DTH, the football training table is now located in a roped-off area in Lenoir Hall.

The complaints about the crowding that results from this set-up have been many and loud, with justification.

Chancellor Aycock points out in a talk with the DTH that the arrangement is necessary because the Monogram Club dining room has been turned over to the Faculty Club, and a training table must be located somewhere.

It is unquestionably true that a winning team must receive a carefully planned diet as part of its training program. Training tables have existed as long as the sport of college football and there is no reason to expect that they will vanish overnight.

Still, this is a rather weak reason for roping off a fairly large area of a dining room designated for use by all students so that UNC can put out a winning football team.

Protests against crowding are probably out of proportion to the situation that actually exisits. Still, athletes are not so valuable to this university that any hardships, great great or small, should be put on the rest of the students for its benefit.

The question of crowding in Lenoir Hall is only a minor part in the older question of coddling athletes.

Carolina is certainly no worse than any other large university in respect to the coddling of athletes, but this does not mean that the program here is above criticism. The system of college athletics throughout the country will merit some strong criticism; and Carolina, as part of it, deserves her share.

Chancellor Aycock and President Friday went a long way toward putting Carolina back on the right foot with her athletic program, but we cannot sit back and blandly say we're in grand shape.

We aren't. Athletics are still getting more attention and causing more headaches than their worth warrants.

The Lenoir Hall issue is a case in point. Why should a small segment of the UNC community receive special consideration at the expense of others merely becuse it "has always been that way?"

Carolina athletes have just undergone a careful scrutiny as a result of the basketball scandals and a rather drastic shakeup instigated. But UNC has not gone far enough.

Carolina judged her program in relation to other programs throughout the country. In relation to these, Athletics here are now less important. But this does not mean that they are not still too important. Chancellor Aycock has been a prime force in upgrading academics while deemphasizing athletics. Before he assumed office, Carolina was fast on her way toward becoming an athletic Valhalla. During his term of office, he has done much toward correcting this situation by slowing the athletic grant-in-aid program, bringing coaches salaries below that of most of the professors, and recently, by assisting with the program of athletic deemphasis.

The pressures on him are great. He stepped into an athletic program that looked as if it were too great for any one indivdual to reduce. But he has done a commendable job.

We only hope that he will not stop until athletics here are scaled to fit more evently into the rest of the University.

THE DEFENSE ANSWERS:

Fraternity Target Fires Back At Paper

Last week the Daily Tar Heel, through editorial and by-lined comment, attacked social fraternities on this campus.

In doing so, certain relevant information was omitted and other facts were slanted—but the purpose of blasting a convenient, "stock" target was achieved.

It is time the target fired back.

Fraternities were accused of "crash programs to attract good men," of "lack of foresight," of being "conformist" and "stifling." It was suggested that prospective members will not be accepted because of their dress, their handshake or their religion. It was declared that the "system" is on the way out, that tyrannical national hierarchies are hastening the doom by adherence to outmoded concepts.

* * *

IN THE FIRST paragraph of the recent editorial, "Death of An Issue," the editor states that his comments were made simply because there was nothing to talk about, and it was time to pop off with his "popgun." Is an attack solely for the sake of attacking justifiable?

Fraternities do seek good men; if this is wrong, then the Greek world will plead guilty. A "crash program" is inherent in the Carolina rush system, but the individual chapters advise rushees to contemplate their decisions carefully, and to be sure of their commitments.

Good men are not lured unawares into a sinister trap; they are sought because fraternity men believe in their organizations, in the benefits derived therefrom and attendant thereto, in the social and intellectual advantages of fraternity life which round out a liberal education.

* * *

THE GREEK SOCIETY at Carolina has recognized and acknowledged many of its problems. If in the past little action toward their solution has been evidenced, it does not necessarily follow that constructive measures are not being attempted today.

In fact, fraternities here are striving to effect a true integral relationship with the university, recognizing that a peripheral relationship is in the best interests of neither party.

Last spring the fraternity-faculty conference at Pinehurst laid substantial groundwork for an harmonious accommodation of the university and the fraternity world. Faculty members have signaled this initial step as a move forward, and current efforts in many channels are accomplishing additional steps. The Interfraternity Council has established a committee to examine the question of deferred rush, consulting the faculty and administration to draft acceptable proposals.

Are these measures stifling? Conformist? Lacking in foresight?

Cannot the Daily Tar Heel recognize and encourage such action, rather than shooting from the hip without preliminary investigation?

* * *

WHAT ABOUT NATIONAL "dictatorships"? Does not a private, nationwide organization have a basic democratic right to choose its members? Are these choices different in manner from the businessman's selection of qualified employees?

Are not judgments of intellectuality and sociability made in both areas? Is there not still implicit in the democratic right to succeed the right to fail? Are majorities and minorities and all interest groups to be merged into one huge amalgam for the sake of equalitarianism?

Fraternities at Carolina have been accused of anti-intellectualism. The past validity of this charge has not been denied. But, to counteract this, many chapters have established strict scholarship regulations, inaugurated or increased evening discussion programs with faculty members on topics of intellectual interest, and stressed in pledge training that academic accomplishment is the primary obligation of the student. And the IFC has proposed certain scholastic requirements for the chapters in addition to the university rule.

* * *

IN SHORT, THERE is a "new look"—a forward look—in the Greek world at Carolina. It should be expected that the Daily Tar Heel recognize such effort, rather than obfuscate it with a stylish attack at a convenient target.

No one will oppose constructive criticism, but slanted charges based on misinformation are of no value to anyone.

The Tar Heel suggested that the fraternity world will be non-existent by 1971-72, and that the DTH editor in that year will be lacking a perennial "issue." The Greek world believes that quite another situation will then exisit.

Fraternities, although they may undergo significant changes (some of which have been proposed by the IFC on this campus), will not perish, for their foundation is an inherent democratic liberty, and their attitude toward the future is one of constructive action.

* * *

BUT THE DAILY TAR HEEL, if it continues such perfidy to journalism and violation of press freedom as last week's comments exhibited, may indeed find itself devoid of audience, indeed of newsprint, in the years to come.

It is hoped that the DTH rather will perform as it knows it should—aiming criticism and offering commendation where each is due. If on some occasions we shall need the former, we shall on others most certainly deserve the latter.

Conservatives Appear!

Our Conservatives have appeared! Sound the trumpets; bring on the flowers. Those heroes of the right have come to save the world.

But the air is still cloudy. These disciples of isolationism have appeared clothed in strange apparel. They claim to be Republicans.

This was printed on a sign above the Republican desk in Lenoir Hall: "To stamp out . . . free trips to Berlin for males, 18-26 yrs. old."

I suggest that these pseudo-Republicans do their campaigning elsewhere. This policy is totally unacceptable as a representative statement of the Republican party.

On reading this sign, Goldwater would faint, Nixon would go into a coma, and Rockefeller would die of a heart attack.

No true Republican (or American) would advocate not defending Berlin.

JOE WILLIMAN

And They Talked And Talked..

Talk, talk, talk—that's all you hear any more. People at Carolina have nothing better to do with their time than to talk to one another. The University itself seems like nothing so much as a vast, humming mass of varied accents, vocabularies, viewpoints, and languages.

The easiest way to remember most people is by what they have said and how. But then, it's always been this way. Listen to Thomas Wolfe: ". . . And they talked—always they talked, under the trees, against the ivied walls, assembled in their rooms, they talked—in limp sprawls—incessantly, charming, empty Southern talk; they talked with a large and easy fluency about God, the Devil, and philosophy, the girls, politics, athletics, fraternities and the girls—My God! how they talked!"

* * *

AND HOW THEY still talk, and how much! Mundane matters and spiritual, verbal surrealism, "methodic" grunts and inexpressible agony, all are always with us.

There are misapprehensions about which are the most common subjects—sex, for example, frequently takes a "back seat" to courses, professors and instructors.

One's schedule is as solicitously asked after as one's sciatica or post-nasal drip, especially among underclassmen. Football weekends are often tacitly conceded to be pie in the sky compared, for instance, to Free Flicks or a neighbor's record collection.

Good times and partying are there, but only as anchors to keep conversation from soaring too high on DTH editorials, human nature, and the unconcealable excitement of certain facets of the academic life.

* * *

AT FRATERNITY HOUSES, at the required two meals, discussion is a close second to food. It ranges from Madras to vacations to personalities of absentees to cigarette brands to Kemp and back again. Dorm rooms are no better off. One visits, one is visited—frequently to get another view on a sticky assignment, as frequently for the availability of one's car, time, history notes, or sport coat.

As innocuously as these tete-a-tetes begin, almost invariably they divagate to major courses, reasons, philosophy, religion, and morals.

Lenoir Hall is probably the most flagrant hotbed of rampant conversation on campus. No longer is the dramatic monologue possible to a great extent; here the communion of food and unavoidable proximity make for a swift and telling interchange.

A critical and impatient audience of anywhere from one to a dozen makes the speaker more concise, trenchant, and incisive: he is on his toes and wants to stay there. However, one can sample here.

Table-hopping is the rule, and exchange, graduate, and specialized students give an unparalleled range of subject matter and depth. So great is the camaraderie engendered that a daily member has suggested a co-educational fraternity charter: Gamma Delta Iota.

You're not likely to get away from it easily. Our finest professors rely heavily on conversational momentum in their courses. Seminars, colloquia, group meetings, debates, WUNC-TV, all would be lost without interchange. And if somebody does have something better to do with his time, it must be pretty wonderful.

Berliners Ready For Next Russian Move

By Phil Newsom
(UPI Foreign News Analyst)

BERLIN (UPI) — West Berliners have regained their old fervor and are ready for the Russians' next move.

Morale, shaken by the Communist closing of the East-West Berlin border on Aug. 13, is high again.

The biggest boost came with the arrival of Gen. Lucius B. Clay, hero of the 1948-1949 blockade, as President Kennedy's personal representative.

* * *

CLAY WON the respect and affection of Berliners as no other American has when he was American military governor from 1945 to 1949.

When he left Berlin, grateful Berliners named a street for him. It is Clay Allee leading into the American sector in an area of parks, boulevards and stately homes. The American consulate is on Clay Allee.

Some news reports quoted him as saying at a press reception that East Germany would have a part in control of West Berlin's air corridors to the West and that the two German governments should conduct their own negotiations.

* * *

CLAY SAID neither. This correspondent stod at his elbow through the entire conversation and heard him say flatly that the East Germans would "absolutely not" have a hand in the air ways and at no time did he suggest the two governments should negotiate.

The reports shocked Clay.

He came to Berlin as a symbol of U. S. determination. He remarked he did not come to sell it out.

When West Berliners awakened on Sunday, Aug. 13, to find the city border closed they almost panicked. The very AXIS OF THE CITY'S EXISTENCE SEEMED THREATENED. Hopes for the future appeared to vanish.

* * *

WEST BERLIN had taken pride in the fact that it was the West's "show-window" deep in Communist territory, a haven for East German refugees, a lasting meeting place for Germans from both sides of the split nation.

The wall the Communists erected impressed on every Berliner the fact that his city and country were split and might never be reunified in his lifatime.

It emphasized the Russians' determination to isolate West Berlin and make it a so-called free, demilitarized city.

The unpleasant facts still must be faced. But they are being faced without panic and without despair. There is sadness but no gloom.

A few days ago, West Berlin opened a new opera house.

* * *

THE WEST GERMAN federal Government has granted the city an additional $125 million to meet special economic needs arising out of the present crisis and to assist in an expanded cultural and economic program.

Mayor Willy Brandt has announced that $27.5 million will be spent on construction of 4,000 new apartments for workers coming in from West Germany. Work on the first 1,000 will start in the next few weeks.

Reflections

. . . the United States and its allies represent the only real barrier to destruction of the United Na-Nations. This is an agency upon which the African-Asian countries must depend for the aid, guidance and independence they will need in the years ahead. Khrushchev is dedicated to wrecking the UN or turning it into a Communist weapon.

"Peace" cannot be accomplished by painting it on the side of a plane bearing "neutrals" to Washington. The sooner the uncommitted get committed, the sooner peace will come.

Opera Workshop Slated Wednesday

An organizational meeting of the UNC Opera Workshop will be held in the auditorium of Hill Hall Wednesday at 4:30 p.m., immediately following the weekly student recital.

Dr. Wilton Mason of the Music Department will be director of the group.

"This is to be a study group," Dr. Mason explained, "whose purpose will be the preparation of scenes and acts from the standard operatic repertoire. We hope to present a fully staged presentation of some of these segments in the early spring."

Various Works

"By having portions of various works under rehearsal at the same time we can accommodate many more types of voices than if we undertook a single operatic production, and there should be roles available for all who are inteersted."

All singers who are interested in auditioning for membership in the Opera Workshop should plan on attending the meeting on Wednesday and should bring a selection, preferably an operatic excerpt, said Dr. Mason. An accompanist will be available.

Announcement of the works to be performed by the group will be made after auditions are completed.

Tar Heels Meet N. C. State Today At 2 O'Clock

State End Johnny Morris

Carolina To Open With Gabriel & Co.

By Harry W. Lloyd
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina fans have been waiting a long time for a vintage year.

Today at 2 p.m. in Kenan Stadium, the cork comes out of the bottle labeled "1961," and more than 40,000 fans will be on hand to see whether the product fizzes or comes out with a bang.

That's because it's football time again in Chapel Hill. The Wolfpack of N. C. State, considered by many to be a challenger for the Atlantic Coast title this year, will provide the opposition as the Tar Heels open the season.

It will be the 51st meeting betwen the two bitter rivals. Coach Earle Edwards of State, in his eighth year at Raleigh will bring the country's most highly touted quarterback with him in the person of Wilmington's Roman Gabriel.

Gabriel, the 1960 All-American, whose passing makes the State team go when it goes, will be throwing mainly to end Johnny Morris, who caught four passes last week in the 15-14 loss to Wyoming, the first Wolfpack game of the year.

Two more ends, Dennis Kroll and John Gill, and backs Jim D'Antonio, Tony Koszarsky, Al Taylor, and Joe Scarpati, will be the other ducks on Gabriel's target.

The State line, which showed some obvious weaknesses against Wyoming, will likely be the same this week. Tackles Nick Maravich and Bert Wilder, guard Joe Bushofsky and Graham Singleton, and center Walt Kudryan will get the green light from Edwards.

* * *

For the Tar Heels, the question will be whether a team with balance and experience can do better than one with a superstar. Carolina has no single standout, but several individuals who have shown promise of playing well together as a team.

There are still some questions marks left as far as the starting lineup is concerned. Coach Jim Hickey has hinted that Jimmy Addison, a junior, may get the nod over senior Gib Carson at halfback on the starting eleven. At right tackle, there is still a decision to be made between Hegarty and Jim Shumate.

However, the Tar Heels have been keying their offense toward a two-team attack, with both platoons sharing in the ball-moving chores.

Quarterback Ray Farris, a rival of Gabriel's since their schoolboy days, will be at the helm of the team. He will call on fullback Bob Elliott, halfback Lennie Beck, and either Carson or Addison to run the ball. Second unit leader Junior Edge, who may give his kicking toe a workout on field goals, has hard-hitting Joe Davies and scatback Ward Marslender.

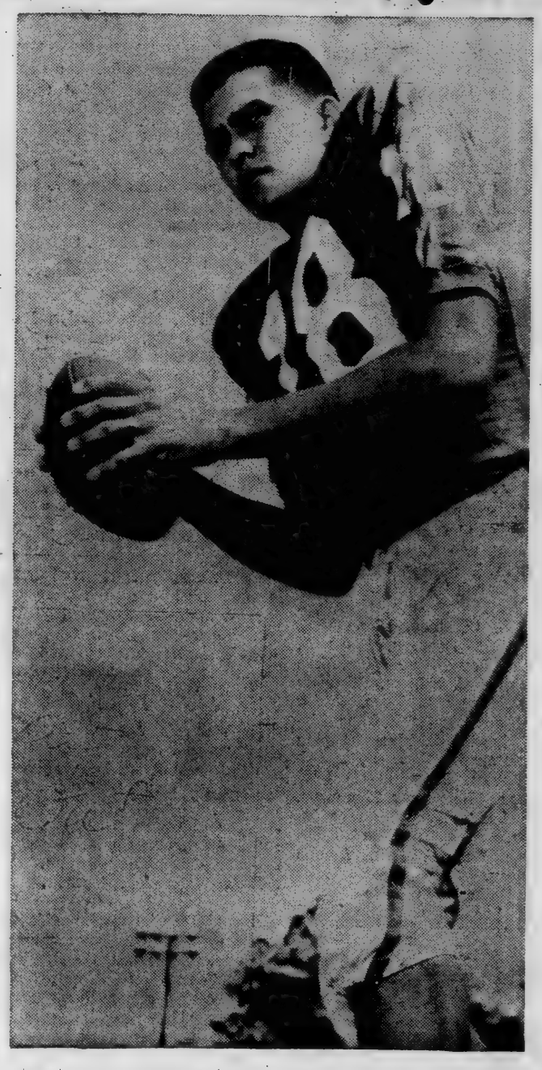
There may be a lot of switching at the ends. Conrad Sloop and John Runco are the probable starters, but sophomore Bob Lacey may see a lot of action on passing plays. Steve Yates could play a lot of the game, as could George Knox and Jimmy Ray.

* * *

Close viewers of the game will have a lot of things to keep in mind. One of the big things to watch will be the passing of Gabriel and the defense Carolina sets for him. Last year, they practically held him to nothing, but lost the game on their own mistakes.

The field goal may play almost as big a part as it did last year when Jake Shaffer kicked one for a 3-0 State win. Carolina's bigger line will have to be watched, especially on passing plays.

This battle of the red and the blue, if it lives up to expectations, should be a great one.



State quarterback Roman Gabriel, a 6-4, 220 pounder, will be throwing the passes today against the Tar Heels. Gabriel, a Football Writers All-America last year, is also a baseball star at State.

All ACC Teams Active

All the Atlantic Coast Conference teams will be in action today, and all of them will be going against conference foes.

At Virginia, Duke tries to take its second straight league win against the rejuvenated Cavaliers, who are fresh from a win over W&M.

Wake Forest is at South Carolina in the other contest.

Booters Lose 2-1 To Amphibs

By Martin Kruning

Unable to discover a scoring punch which will click fairly regularly, the varsity soccer squad dropped its second and final preseason scrimmage to the Little Creek Naval Amphibious Base 2-1.

Scoring began and terminated in the second period when the visitors pushed two successive goals past Tom Griffith, the stunned Carolina cager. The Tarheels bounced right back though as center halfback George Beim grounded a pin-point pass up the middle to sophomore sensation Peter Blake. He in turn wheeled around and drove a sizzler just beyond the outstretched hands of the Little Creek goalie.

Although the unit's apparent scoring lapse continues to be a handicap, its caliber of play and the individual performance of certain members is of the highest degree. Larry Steele, whose diving saves and alert goaltending were key factors in the team's brilliant second half performance, certainly deserves all the praise given him. Also outstanding were Ward Hamilton, an aggressive lineman and deft passer; Kingman Brown, the flashy right wing whose heading and shooting climaxed many thrilling plays; and of course the indispensable Mr. Blake, a center forward with incredible breakaway speed.

All afternoon Carolina's passing game and ground attack proved to be the main reasons for its ability to stay in the game. With four minutes remaining in the final frame, the Tar Heels demonstrated the type of soccer which Coach Marvin Allen feels will secure the ACC crown. The forward line was moving the ball well and the shots were beginning to find the range. As was true throughout the entire contest, it was Little Creek's defensive clearing boots which placed a damper on many of Carolina's scoring threats.

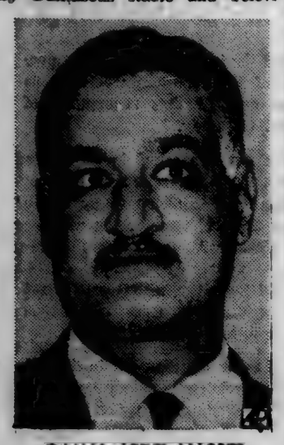
Syria Orders All Egyptians Leave Independent Country

By DAVID DUGAS

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI)—Newly independent Syria Saturday ordered all Egyptians to leave the country. Premier Mamoun Al-Kuzbari pointedly told President Gamal Abdel Nasser the new government "accepts no tyranny nor is it subject to any foreigner."

The Middle East was tense. Baghdad Radio said Iraqi Premier Abdel Karim Kassem had ordered his armies to Iraq's border with Syria to guard against any possible "imperialist aggression." Israel was reported to be watching Mideast developments closely. Kuzbari, in a message broadcast by Damascus Radio and Televising the union of Egypt and Syria. There were shouts of "long live Nasser" and of "down with separatist reactionaries."



GAMAL ABDEL NASSER

sion, followed up his expulsion order to Egyptians by saying Syria's goal is the "great Arab unity" based on equality for all.

". . . unity among brothers and not that of the master and the slave," he said, "unity among beloved men and not that of the oppressor and the weak, unity between man and man and not that of tyrant and the oppressed."

No Arab Unity

Kuzbari said the basis of Arab unity under nearly four years of rule from Egypt was "tyranny, dictatorship, terror and liquidation." This, he said, was not unity.

Newspapers warned that if the old political and military struggles resume in Syria, only the Communists will benefit.

The feeling was that Nasser's influence in Syria was a formidable bulwark against the Soviets in the Middle East and that there must be growth of Arab statesmanship to combat the dangers. Cairo dispatches said demonstrators marched throughout the streets of the Egyptian capital Saturday denouncing the Syrian revolt and support-

Egyptian Efforts Ended

But Nasser's speech calling off a military invasion appeared to have ended for the moment any serious Egyptian effort to win Syria back into union.

The new civilian government which appears to have taken over from the military junta that carried out the Syrian revolution already has won recognition by Turkey and Jordan. Iran announced Saturday it planed to recognize the new government.

Syria Saturday opened its border with Lebanon and permitted diplomatic personnel and persons with special permits to leave the country. One of them, Yoshito Shimoba, Japanese Consul-General in Damascus, drove into Beirut Saturday.

He disclosed that he and other consul generals met last night with revolutionary Prime Minister Kuzbari and received permission to go to Beirut to send diplomatic dispatches. The American and British Consuls also met with Kuzbari.

Situation Calm

Shimoba reported the situation in Damascus was calm but that tanks were stationed all over the capital. He said gunfire was heard in Damascus for 20 minutes during Thursday's revolt but there were no figures on the number of casualties.

During the revolt, he said, there were demonstrations both for and against the revolt but later the demonstrations became completely anti-Nasser.

Grass Roots Must Back Bond Issue

COMMENTARY
By Jim Clotfelter

Gov. Terry Sanford, at a luncheon Thursday, kicked off a statewide campaign to push over the Nov. 7 bond election, showing the great importance he attaches to this and similar efforts.

State Rep. John W. Umstead of Chapel Hill is chairman of the campaign group, the Citizens Committee for a Better North Carolina, the membership of which includes UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock and James Godfrey, dean of faculty here.

The Citizens Committee of 200 of the state's most respected citizens makes it clear that it is backing all ten parts of the bond issue.

State Affairs

Similar pro-bond issue groups, including UNC's energetic State Affairs Committee, while having special interest in certain portions (appropriations for higher education) still express favorable views toward all of the issue.

Primary efforts of the State Affairs group toward securing passage of the bond issue will be exerted in the field of personal correspondence and person-to-person speaking to county newspapers, civic clubs, and other "grass roots" organizations.

The most effective action which students can take if they are interested in the passage of the bond issue, is to write a letter to their hometown newspaper urging passage of the bill . . . tell their parents about the need for the capital improvements and tell them to tell their friends . . . encourage fellow students to act similarly.

White and McDevitt

UNC students interested in helping to get the issue passed should contact either Tom White (at the DKE house) or Larry McDevitt (at the Beta house) to see how they can aid the State Affairs Committee.

UNC appropriations included in the issue will be:

—$2 million for additions to the Health Center.

—$1 million for the student union —undergraduate library, the other $622,000 needed for the student center will be raised through student self-liquidating funds.

—$730,000 for a cafeteria—service building to be built out toward the new Craige and Ehringhous dormitories.

—An additional $2,162,000 for additions and renovations to Phillips Hall, Wilson Hall, Cobb dormitory, additions to the Heating Plant, and paving of driveways and parking lots.

Last Hurdle

Over a year has been spent in getting these requests through the Department of Education, the State Board of Higher Education, the Advisory Budget Commission, and the Legislative Joint Appropriations Subcommittee and Committee. Now the only hurdle remaining is the general public, which will go to the polls Nov. 7 to vote on the $61.7 million omnibus bond issue.

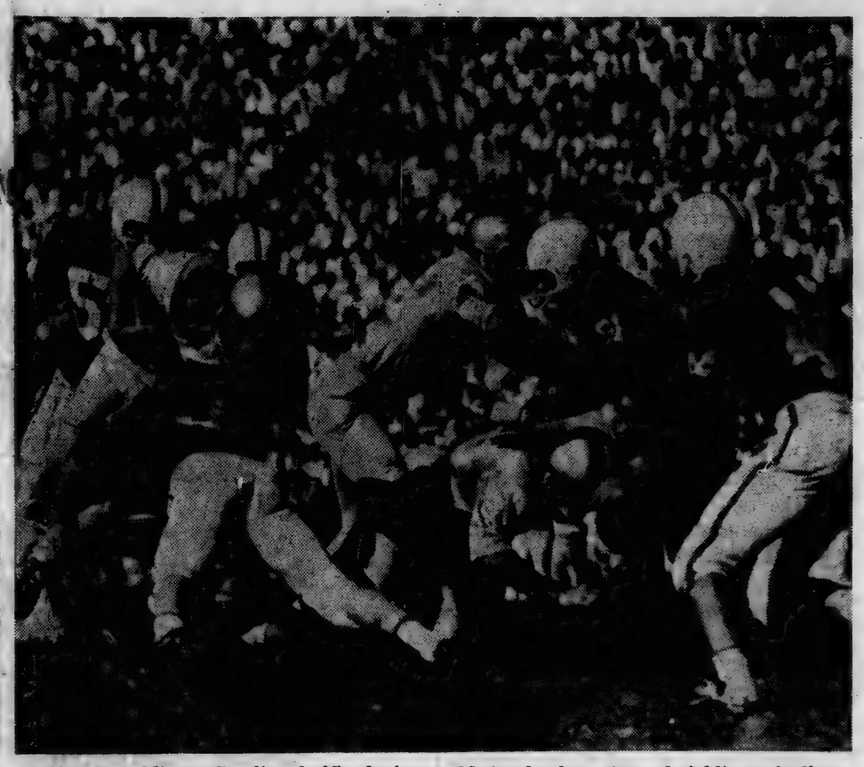
Tar Heels Come From Rear To Rock Wolfpack By 27-22



Jimmy Addison, Carolina halfback, is shown being tackled in the middle of the line after a short gain. State's number 32 who has stopped Addison, is linebacker Jim D'Antonio. Joe Craver, center, is blocking.

Team Shows Real Power In Victory

By Harry Lloyd

A-Okay, off and away. The first stage of North Carolina's project '61 has fired successfully.

The Tar Heels rose up here yesterday to defeat N. C. State, 27-22, and almost dominated all offensive play in the game. They showed merciless power on the ground, and threw up an impermeable defense that limited the Wolfpack runners to a total of 7 yards.

Roman Gabriel, the celebrated State quarterback, did not complete a pass until the final quarter of play.

Ray Farris went all the way at the signal calling post for UNC, and directed one of the most successful games of his career. He completed 5 of 8 passes for 77 yards, and had none intercepted.

Bob Elliott, the big bull of the high-stepping Carolina backfield, ripped the State defenses to shreds with his powerful running, and gained 85 yards on 24 carries.

10 Point Comeback

In order to win, the Tar Heels had to come from 10 points behind in the first quarter. The visitors took the lead on the opening play of the game when halfback Mike Clark returned Junior Edge's kickoff 83 yards for a score. The play took 14 seconds. Jake Shaffer, who beat the Tar Heels last year with a field goal, kicked the point to send the Pack off and running with a 7-0 lead.

After Lenny Beck picked up a UNC first down, the hard rushing NCS forward wall threw Farris for three straight losses and forced a punt. Tony Koszarsky, a sophomore, returned the kick to the Carolina 24 and set the stage for Shaffer's field goal, which made the score 10-0.

The two teams exchanged ball possession before Carolina took over at the State 46 on John Flournoy's nine-yard punt return. Four downs later, on an unglamorous, yard-by-yard drive, Gib Carson spun over left tackle for one yard an dthe first Carolina score. The touchdown came on the second play of the second quarter. Bob Elliott kicked the extra point.

Lose On State

The Tar Heels stopped State at fourth and two on the next series, but lost possession on downs at the State 24. The two teams battled back and forth during the first half, with the State offense completely stymied and Carolina not quite having the punch nor the time to get a second score.

Carolina took the second half kickoff and went grinding down the field for its second score. Bob El-

Paintings To Go On Exhibit In Morehead

The paintings of Jaquelin Jenkins and Irene Reichert will go on exhibition Tuesday in the South Gallery of the Morehead Planetarium. The exhibit will run through October.

The works are in various media including casein, gouache, pastel, pen and ink, and pencil. Nearly all of the works are recent; most of them were completed this year.

Both of the artists are from Chapel Hill and have studied tensively both in America and abroad.

Studied in Raleigh

Mrs. Jenkins studied at St. Mary's in Raleigh, and in Paris from 1952-53. In Paris she worked at the Sorbonne and the Louvre and was a member of the Alliance Francaise.

Recently she studied with Karl Agricola in Key West for two years. Mrs. Jenkins has exhibited her works in many places including Winston-Salem, Charlotte, Durham and Chapel Hill.

Mrs. Reichert studied under Charles Leclaire at the University of Alabama. She has also studied at Stetson University, Duke, and UNC.

She studied abroad under a Fulbright Grant at the Universities of Innsbruck and Vienna. Mrs. Reichert has exhibited her works in Florida and Alabama as well as Greensboro, Durham and Chapel Hill.

SG Carrier Current Joins Music Clubs

Student Government is joining two record clubs to provide music for Carrier Current, due to resume broadcasting Oct. 8.

The move came Thursday night when Student Legislature passed a bill to appropriate $225 to purchase membership in the RCA Victor Classical Record Club and the Columbia Popular Record Club. The two clubs will provide 300 long play records during the coming year.

The job of selecting Carolina's head cheerleader will be taken over by the cheerleaders themselves, if students so vote in the coming fall elections.

Legislature passed a bill to present the question of choosing the head cheerleader to the students as part of a constitutional amendment. In past years, the head cheerleader has been chosen by students in popular campus-wide elections.

Increase Members

The Men's Council will increase its membership from 11 to 16 as the result of action taken by Legislature Thursday.

The new number will allow the council to split into two groups of six members each to hear cases when business is pressing, with four members acting as "stand-by's" to alternate with members who are unable to be active under certain circumstances.

A permanent committee to deal with judicial legislation was set up by Legislature to replace the special committee with which it has been operating.

New legislation to be considered at Thursday's session includes bills to establish a study of the UNC undergraduate advisory system and to appropriate $343 to the Men's Interdormitory Council.

Two Legislators announced their resignations. They are Bud Broome of Dorm Men's District I and David Rubin of DM III.

Appointed By Archbishop

Episcopal Bishop Will Speak Here On Christian Problems And Missions

The Right Rev. Stephen F. Bayne, Anglican Executive Officer and Bishop in Charge of the American Courches in Europe, will speak at 8 in Gerrard Hall.

The Bishop's address, "Old Wine in New Bottles," will be a consideration of the changing form of the mission of the Church in modern time. He will cover problems which face, not his own Anglican Communion in particularly but all of Christianity.

Bishop Bayne was born in New York City on May 21, 1908. Graduating from Trinity School (1924) and from Amherst College (1928), the Bishop entered General Theological Seminary in New York City. There he received his S.T.B. in 1933 and his S.T.M. in 1934.

Appointed by Archbishop

The Bishop assumed the newly-created post of executive officer of the Anglican Communion on January 1, 1960. Appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop Bayne holds a unique position in the Anglican Communion, a body composed of some 40 million members.

Technically, he is the executive officer of two Pan-Anglican bodies; the Consultative Body of the Lambeth Conference and the Advisory Council of Missionary Strategy. Membership of both bodies consists of the Metropolitans and Presiding Bishops of all the Anglican Churches or their deputies. Practically, his task is to draw the Anglican Communion closer together and to guide the missionary strategy for Anglicanism as a whole.

Bishop Bayne is also serving the Episcopal Church of the U. S. A. as head of the Convocation of American Churches in Europe, as a member of the Church's National Council, and as a member of the Episcopal Church's House of Bishops.

Served Parishes

Prior to his present position, the Bishop served parishes in St. Louis, Missouri; Northampton, Massachusetts; and as Chaplain at Smith College.

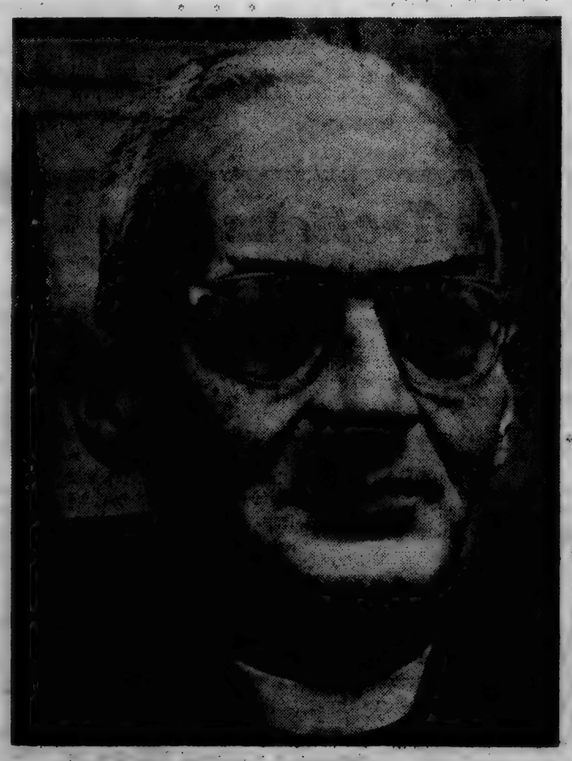
From 1942 until 1947, Bishop Bayne served as Chaplain and chairman of the Department of Religion at Columbia University in New York City.

Bishop Bayne has received his S. T. D. from both General Theological Seminary (1947) and from Columbia University (1952). His D. D. degrees have been awarded by Amherst College (1945), Whitman College (1952), Anglican Theological College of Canada (1954), St. Paul's of Japan (1960), and by Harvard University (1961). Mills College awarded him his LL.D. in 1951, and he received his D.Litt. from Hobart College in 1957 and from Kenyon College in 1960. The University of Puget Sound in 1959 awarded him his L.H.D.

"Warm and Immediate"

Time magazine has described the Bishop as "a Bishop who has made theology almost as warm and immediate as politics and baseball." He is the author of "The Optional God," "Christian Living," "In the Sight of God," and as of this week, "Enter With Joy."

He is also the editor of "Ceylon, North India, Pakistan: A Study in Ecumenical Division," and is a of Education," a Yale Paperbound contributor to "The Christian Idea book.



The Right Rev. Stephen F. Bayne, who will speak here Monday on the changing form of the mission of the Church in modern times. Bishop Bayne's address is sponsored by the Episcopal Student Congregation of the Chapel of the Cross.

GREENSBORO (UPI)—The new state blue laws go into effect Sunday here and there around North Carolina, prohibiting the sale of this and that.

The law has been termed vague and unenforceable in some quarters, but generally merchants have appeared to favor it on grounds it is stronger than many locally-enacted prohibitions which have been in effect for years.

Questions of religion and constitutionality of blue laws have been part and parcel of local controversies from Manteo to Murphy ever since the state statute, which prohibits the sale of certain items on Sunday but allows any municipal body to exempt itsself, was crammed through the 1961 General Assembly.

The Rev. R. E. Gibson, seeking to have all blue laws nullified in Greensboro and Guilford County, declared that "people cannot be converted into the kingdom of God through legislation.

"In general, all Sunday legislation is based on the asumption that minorities who do not observe Sunday as the Sabbath as well as non-religionists who choose not to comply, have no rights of dissent that the majorities are bound to respect," the Seventh Day Adventist minister said in a condemnation of all blue laws.

Seventh Day Adventists observe Saturday as the Sabbath.

The city fathers in this textile-tobacco city voted to exempt Greensboro from the state statute, but the new law will apply in the county despite objections by one commissioner that if the sheriff tries to enforce the statute "we are going to have suits for improper arrests on our hands."

Greensboro, which will continue to go along with its own blue laws, is one of the few places in North Carolina where beer can be purchased on Sunday.

The state law prohibiting sale of such things as clothing, hardware and furniture on Sunday goes into effect in Charlotte and Mecklenburg County, and Mayor Stan Brookshire is hoping for "voluntary compliance with the law" in the Queen City.

The city of Mooresville will be exempt thanks to a 4-2 vote against the state law.

Alamance County and the cities of Graham and Burlington won't be bound by the blue laws.

Fayetteville will enforce the state blue laws and its own local Sunday blue laws.

Censorship, Bob Jones

Students and faculty of Bob Jones University at Greenville, S. C., recently attacked what was termed "Muzzling of the military" on Communism and asked that Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara resign, according to an Associated Press release.

A resolution adopted unanamously by about 3,300 students and teachers at a chapel program expressed support for the campaign of Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.) concerning his charge that speeches of military men have been censored to delete strong anti-Communist charges, the release stated.

The story does not explain who introduced the action at Bob Jones, but it looks as if someone there did a fancy bit of oration. Since when does it befit a university to unanimously adopt a resolution to support Strom Thurmond's attempts to unifying America's official opinion —a unification that can't be accomplished unless officials, military and otherwise are asked to adhere to that policy?

The resolution also asked for a "Thorough, unbiased" inquiry into the case of Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker "and any other cases of similar nature to determine the true facts and either to vindicate these men or to make public valid reasons for their dismissal and/or censure."

Walker was relieved of his command in Germany for reportedly disseminating the tenets of the John Birch Society and other extreme Rightest approaches to quelling the Communist threat.

It looks as if the students and faculty at Bob Jones are getting caught up by the threads of the New McCarthyism. The suggestion that McNamara resign reeks strangely of some other suggestions that have gained some support lately. One of them is the "Impeach Earl Warren" move supported by the birchers and other extreme devotees of the Right. And it is equally ridiculous.

Far too ridiculous to be solidly supported by an entire university, with no dissent.

Military policy must be made at the top, and it must be hewn to all the way down the heirachy to the last man. Military officials should not and cannot be allowed to espouse propoganda for any organization whose ideas deviate from that by McNamara and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Walker had no more right to sell Birchism to his troops than he would have to sell them Communism. Any military officials in a ranking position, by virtue of that position, acts as a spokesman for the U. S. Government on matters of policy. His own views should not be allowed to appear as official views. particularly when they are in conflict with actual policy.

The U. S. government does not support or advocate the views of Robert Welch and the Birch Society —Maj. Gen. Walker had no right to associate his uniform and position with those views.

We are not aware of all the facts behind the passage of the resolution at Bob Jones, but our guess is that the students and faculty were swayed more by fear of "the Communist threat" than by actual analysis of the facts in the case.

Dangerous Ground

The following editorial was clipped from the Southern Pines Pilot. It is reprinted here because it does an excellent job of answering the question, "How much merit is there in education courses?"

• • •

One of the aspects of education in which professional educators appear to resent lay comment is the matter of courses in education which, to many lay observers, appear to occupy far too large a proportion of a teacher's training and subsequent further studies through the years.

Knowing that we are treading on dangerous ground, we can't help feeling, from what we have read and heard on the subject that such courses should be reduced drastically, in favor of concentration on a better general education with specialization, of course, in the subject the teacher is most interested in.

So used are we in North Carolina to state certification of teachers (the state pays teachers in this state, with supplementary pay from local districts in some instances) that we were startled recently to talk with a school board member from a city in another state who said that in employing teachers her board tried to avoid hiring graduates of teachers colleges and get smart liberal arts college graduates to teach subjects in which they had majored. As we understood it, these would be young men and women who were thoroughly versed in and enthusiastic about their specialities but had perhaps never had any courses in "how to teach." The high school in question, incidentally, ranks high in its state and in the nation.

There is much to be said for keeping up educational standards on the state level. Yet if local districts are to be allowed to hire and fire teachers, it seems as if these boards should be permitted to employ college graduates who know their subjects well but have had little or no training in how to teach.

Looking back—and we ask readers to make this test—it seems doubtful that the best teachers we had in school or college had ever been instructed in teaching methods. These teachers had the authority of a sure grasp of their subjects, a personal interest in their students and ability to transmit an enthusiasm for scholarship and the immediate matter at hand.

A Word On The Rights Of Cannibalism

Due to the phenomenal and wonderful success of the N.A.A.C.P. a new minority protest group has begun to stir in this liberal land of ours. The N.A.A.C.P. (The National Association for the Advancement of Colored Cannibals) made its bid for recognition last week when it held its first public roasting of a segregationist.

It is the claim of thi sgroup that a cannibal cannot help being a cannibal any more than he can help being colored. The group also argues that this country cannot truly ever be a democracy until it accepts the practices of minority groups like itself.

• • •

DURING THE ROASTING of the segregationist last week Mr. Joshua Moses Ghana, the self-anointed leader of the group, was quoted between bites as saying, "It is one of the human being's basic rights to choose what he wants to eat. This never can be called the land of the free so long as this right is denied a certain group."

Mr. Ghana also said that several buses had been chartered by his group to travel all over the country to gain recognition. HE had no comment on whether the riders would be called "Freedom Eaters" and denied that his group had anything to do with communism.

• • •

THE REACTION to this group throughout the country has been varied. The word from prominent liberal leaders in the North is that the group can probably be worked into society since every other known group has been able to fit in somehow.

A spokesman who wished to remain anonymous was quoted as saying, "This might just be what the North has been needing. We have some undesirable groups in our society which this new group, due to its unique practice of cannibalism, might help to eliminate."

Police chiefs in several northern cities admit that the new group would probably present some problems to law enforcement agents.

• • •

SOUTHERN SPOKESMEN vehemently claimed that the traditions of the South would never permit cannibalism. Reaction in Mississippi was quite violent. A policeman was quoted as saying, "If any of those cannibals or those who sympathize with them set foot in this state, we don't bother to throw them in jail. We'll lynch every last one of them."

The Attorney General is expected to keep a close eye on Mississippi and the rest of the South. The only encouraging word from the South came from Atlanta, Georgia, where a liberal leader wrote in his daily column in reference to the N.A.A.C.P. that, "Atlanta must not listen to the voices of hate and prejudice against this group. Atlanta must continue on in the mainstream of progress and tolerance."

• • •

MEANWHILE IN Washington, D. C. the Senate has approved a new committee (House on Inhuman Practices Committee) to investigate the N.A.A.C.P. Many liberals have spoken out against the formation of this committee, and the N.S.A. is expected to vote for its abolishment. From all reports gathered so far another liberal crusade is about to be born. Just who is to be crucified this time no one really knows.

Public Opinion:

Most Folks Back War In Berlin If Necessary

PRINCETON, N. J.—A majority of the American public interviewed in the latest Gallup Poll continue to give solid support to President Kennedy's "hold-the-line" policy on Berlin.

By a ratio of more than 3-to-1 they say that the United States and its allies should fight their way into Berlin if Communist East Germany closes all roads to Berlin.

It remains to be seen whether East Germany will carry out her threats to control the highways and airways leading into Berlin.

If she does, then American opinion would support an attempt by force to open these lines of communication and supply.

Here is the question asked of those who have been following the crisis in that ity (89 per cent):

FIGHT INTO BERLIN IF NECESSARY?

Should fight	64%
Should not	19
No opinion	17

The attitude of those who think we should fight if necessary is summed up in the following comment from one of the 1534 adults selected to provide an accurate measurement of the nation's views:

"We have to fight if necessary. Berlin has become a symbol of freedom, Russia will try to get one country after another until we were forced into a world war."

Surveys conducted in Great Britain and France have turned largely on the issue of whether the people of those nations would go to war over Russia's recognition of East Germany.

The question asked in the United States goes beyond the issue of recognition and poses what many believe to be the real issue which will face the Western Allies, namely the question of what steps should be taken if East Germany, with Russia's backing attempts to close off the access routes to the city.

A further question put to the public in this latest U. S. survey sought to get the public's views on the possibility of the Berlin crisis leading to war.

The question asked of those informed on the Berlin problem.

"If Russia insists on controlling Berlin, do you think this will lead to a fighting war, or not?"

WILL BERLIN LEAD TO FIGHTING WAR?

Yes, will	61%
No, will not	25
No opinion	14

A survey conducted in mid-July, found virtually the same percentage of the American public of the opinion that the Berlin crisis might explode into a fighting war: 60 per cent thought that if Russia insists on controlling Berlin that this would lead to a fighting war, 31 per cent thought that it would not, while 9 per cent expressed no opinion.

Cold War: Cat-Mouse Game In Germany

BY PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

HAMBURG, West Germany, UPI —Down the River Elbe from here, past small fishing villages and reed-covered farm houses, past Cuxhaven and then heading northeast to the meeting of the North and Baltic seas, the cold war is a game of cat and mouse.

In those waters in recent days, NATO completed naval exercises. And, there, standing grimly at the entrance to the Baltic were a Soviet cruiser and destroyer escort.

• • •

So far, the only shots fired have been by camera.

But each side understands the deadly underlying motive accompanying these exercises. The Baltic and the Atlantic for Submarines in case of war and the NATO games look to a way to block the menace.

• • •

ONE KEY is the Denmark Straits. Young skippers of fast German Navy PT boats hold yachting races there on weekends to learn the treacherous shoal waters.

For there, without the bouys and lighthouses, a vessel could become hopelessly trapped, with only helicopters able to approach close enough for rescue.

Yet such is man's determination for order in the midst of world crisis that Hamburgers press.

On order is electrification of the rail line between Hamburg and the Ruhr, cutting many hours off shipping time for the Ruhr's coal and steel.

IN THE PLANNING stage is a deep water harbor near Cuxhaven, a sure target in wartime but a valuable adjunct to the shallower waters of Hamburg's upriver harbor.

• • •

IN HAMBURG, a dozen or more large and small shipyards turn out hundreds of thousands of tons of new shipping annually for the world's sea lanes. Thirty thousand men work in the shipyards, 9,000 of them in the Deutsche Shipyards alone.

Hamburg is proud of its history as a free and great port going back many hundreds of years. It opposed the Kaiser and it opposed Hitler. Today it opposes the European Common Market as a deterrent to worldwide free trade.

Reflections

Pathos and humor play an important part in the business of finding missing people. This is reflected by a collection of excerpts from letters received at the office of Tracers Company of America:

• • •

". . . so please find out if my husband is ded because the man I am living with wont eat or anything until he nos for sure."

• • •

"My wife ran away and I want you t owarn me if she decides to come home as I am very happy now."

• • •

"This is what I know about him. I met him in the mountains and he told me his name was Joe and that he lives around East 56 Street but hangs out down in the Village. He is a good dancer. Can you find him?"

"You may discontinue your efforts to find my husband, as I am happy to report that he died."

• • •

"My husband has been deceitful and I want to find out who he is spending his money on . . . I will send you your fee when my boyfriend returns from his business trip."

• • •

"You wanted to know something about how my sweetheart looks so I am filling out her form in the enclosed envelope."

• • •

". . . and if you find that my husband is a bigamist I want to be fair and share him with the other lady."

• • •

"Sir: I have no birth certificate and would like you to prove I was born and where so that my husband will not call me that name again."

• • •

On of the nation's most interesting magazines was begun some several years ago. It was titled ONE MAN'S OPINION and edited by Robert Welch, Founder of the John Birch Society.

When the Society begun to attract national attention a couple of years later the name of the magazine was changed to AMERICAN OPINION.

Could it be Mr. Welch is predicting the swing in opinion he hopes to bring about?

• • •

"If the boys play hard, they will win their share—all I want them to do is play hard."

Chancellor Aycock said this of the UNC team before Saturday's game. He had his wish. Carolina's men ducked their heads and ran against State with a fury. They won.

Win, lose or draw, that's all anyone can ask.

College Now Open 12 Months

KALAMAZOO, Mich.—College and universiy doors across the country are swinging open this fall. One small Midwest liberal arts college, however, intends to keep it doors open the year around beginning this month.

Kalamazoo College, which restricts its enrollment to 750, is breaking the traditional pattern of education in the United States by launching a four-quarter program which will operate around the calendar, 12 months a year.

• • •

THIS IDEA, although not a new one, rarely has been attempted by a small liberal arts college. The Ford Foundation has contributed 100,000 to help Kalamazoo get its new program under way.

One of these quarters will be spent overseas, Dr. Hicks explained. This foreign study will be provided at no extra cost to the student. It is financed by a $2 million private trust fund established in 1957 exclusively to aid Kalamazoo students in foreign study programs.

Racial Segregation Attacks Going To Supreme Court

By CHARLOTTE G. MOULTON

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Supreme Court convenes for its 1961-62 term Monday with attacks on racial segregation, including the hotly-contested "sit-in" issue, still prominent on its docket.

The court also is going to take another look at a matter of vital importance in state politics. A challenge to the present apportionment of state legislative districts. And there should be action on the latest American Communist party effort to avoid registering with the government.

The nine justices return to the bench facing a record 1,050 cases. After opening day formalities are disposed of they will tackle appeals from lower courts during the long summer adjournment.

On Oct. 9 the court will announce which of those petitions for review will be granted. Chief Justice Earl Warren will then call the first case for argument and the term will be in full swing.

The first case will be the reapportionment test. It comes from Tennessee. But the decision could affect many areas. Despite the big population shift from farm to city, many metropolitan districts have been allotted no additional state senators or representatives. The result has been a cry by city voters that their needs are ignored by legislatures dominated by rural interests.

In agreeing to examine the issue last term, the justices turned their backs on a doctrine enunciated in 1946 that such "political" matters are outside the court's jurisdiction.

Contend Constitution Violation

The complaining Tennesseans contend that inequality in voting rights is a violation of the constitution's guarantee of "equal protection of the laws."

Another case from Michigan has been pending since last winter.

Scheduled to be heard the week of Oct. 16 are three appeals from sit-in demonstrators in Baton Rouge, La. They were filed by 16 students at Southern University. The students were convicted of disturbing the peace at the Greyhound bus station, the Kress Department store, and Sitman's Drug store.

Louisiana law forbids all acts committed in a manner that will "unreasonably disturb or alarm the public." The students are represented by lawyers associated with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The appeals contend, among other things, that a state may not use its police power to enforce racial segregation in a place of business open to the general public.

Other sit-in type cases awaiting action stems from incidents in Glen Echo Amusement Park in Montgomery County, Md.; and in Gwynn Oak Amusement Park, Baltimore; and from lunch counter demonstrations in Howard Johnson's Restaurant, Arlington County, Va.; Thalhimer's Department Store, Richmond, Va.; Jones Drug Store, Monroe, N. C.; McCrory-McClellan Store, Raleigh, N. C.; and Kress in Durham, N. C.

Fighting Rest Room Segregation

In another appeal a Memphis Negro is fighting segregation of rest rooms and eating facilities at the Municipal Airport. He sued under the federal civil rights law.

School desegregation is before the court in the form of four appeals by Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion of Louisiana. Lower federal courts have ordered an end to segregation in the public schools of St. Helena and Baton Rouge and admission of Negroes to trade schools in a number of Louisiana cities. Another decision barred enforcement of two state laws entitled "bribery of parents of school children" and "intimidation and interference in the operation of schools."

Gremillion is appealing all these decisions.

A different type of school case was brought by the Highlander Folk School, a racially integrated adult facility near Monteagle, Tenn. The state revoked the charter of the school, which contended it was penalized for challenging Tennessee's segregationist traditions. The Tennessee Supreme Court upheld the action on non-racial grounds.

Also before the court are appeals of two Negro ministers convicted of disorderly conduct in Birmingham for challenging segregation on city buses.

Alabama Ouster Suit Returns

On other race issues, a five-year-old ouster suit by Alabama against the NAACP is back in the court again. In a petition filed during the summer, the association said it wants to get on with the proceedings but state courts are not moving. Meantime the organization is barred from activities in the state.

The court agreed last term to hear two other NAACP suits which will be argued later. One was appealed by the Rev. Theodore R. Gibson, convicted of contempt for refusing to bring NAACP records to a Florida investigating committee.

The other case tests a Virginia law which the NAACP claims may destroy it in that state. The statute has been interpreted by the state's highest court to mean the NAACP is "engaged in the unlawful solicitation of legal business" for its attorneys in the anti-segregation fight.

In the Communist party registration case, the court ruled 5 to 4 last June that the party must register with the attorney general as a Soviet conspirator. Justice Felix Frankfurter stayed the decision after the party petitioned for reconsideration.

If the petition is rejected, the party will have something more than 40 days in which to register. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy announced after the June decision that the Justice Department intends to enforce the law promptly.

Kennedy Signs $4.2 Billion Foreign Aid Bill

By ALVIN SPIVAK

NEWPORT, R. I. (UPI)—President Kennedy Saturday signed into law a $4.2 billion foreign aid bill, largest in eight years but still a defeat for the Chief Executive at the hands of a Democratic-controlled Congress.

The President also signed $4.9 billion worth of other money measures before joining his wife and daughter Caroline, 3, on the White House yacht Honey Fitz for a cruise in Narraganset.

The foreign aid measure allots some $3.9 billion to the foreign aid program itself and $300 million to related help projects, including $30 million for the Peace Corps.

Short of Hopes

The bill, the products of a bitter House-Senate struggle, carried over into the closing hours of Congress. In the final form it was $861 million short of even Kennedy's last-ditch hopes.

A coalition of Southern Democrats and Republicans in the House also beat down Kennedy's original plea for a five-year, $8.8 million long-range loan program that could be operated with funds drawn from the Treasury rather than through individual Congressional appropriations.

Instead, the President got a five-year authorization that merely yielded $1.1 billion in cash to cover the first year's loans and set a ceiling on new spending.

Largest Since 1953

However, the total appropriation still was the largest since 1953, when Congress voted $4.5 billion to the Eisenhower Administration. Kennedy also approved legislation, passed in the final stages of Congress, to allow a television network to make a package deal to carry all games of a professional sports league without risking anti-trust action.

The vacation White House at the Newport Naval Base announced another item of business-plans for a U. S. government survey team to arrive in Okinawa Oct. 5 to review major economic and social welfare problems facing the people of the Ryukyus. The team will be headed by Carl Kaysen, assistant to McGeorge Bundy, Kennedy's special assistant for national security affairs.

Approves Child Bill

Late Friday, the White House reported, Kennedy approved a bill dealing with admission of adopted alien children. But the bulk of the bills awaiting his action will not be signed or vetoed until Kennedy returns to Washington early next week. Present plans are for him to fly back Monday afternoon. The President, his family, and their weekend house guests had delightful Indian summer weather for their outing on the Honey Fitz. They have gone yachting each afternoon since Kennedy's arrival four days ago.

Mrs. Kennedy, as she has been doing every day here, went golfing this morning while her husband was occupied with daily intelligence briefing, bill-signings and other matters of state. But in the mornings, Kennedy has gotten in swims in the heated pool of Mrs. Robert R. Young, widow of the railroad magnate, near Hammersmith Farm, the estate of the first lady's parents, where the Kennedys are staying.

Faces Busy Schedule

The other money bills besides foreign aid signed by Kennedy included:

$3,877,915,980 for Federal Public Works Projects.

$1,133,453,164 in supplemental appropriations for a number of agencies.

Kennedy will face a busy schedule next week in Washington, including a three-day state visit by President Ibrahim Abboud of Sudan. Abboud will arrive Wednesday.

On Tuesday, Kennedy plans to speak at a lunch in connection with publication of the first four volumes of the John Quincy Adams papers. Friday, he will be host at a White House lunch for a group of New Jersey newspaper publishers.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

By United Press International

American Goes Castro

HAVANA UPI—American Negro Robert F. Williams Jr., wanted in the United States on kidnapping charges, has requested political asylum in Cuba, the official Cuban government news agency said Saturday.

Prensa Latina said Williams asked asylum because he was "under threats of death and persecution" as the result of his "courageous fight" for integration and "Determined defense of the Cuban revolution."

Among other things, the agency said, Williams was falsely accused of kidnapping a white couple and holding them as hostages for two hours during street clashes between the whites and "freedom riders" in Monroe, N. C.

A spokesman for the Department of Justice in Washington said Williams' appearances in Cuba was "no surprise." He said Williams "long has been a Communist sympathizer and an outspoken advocate of Fidel Castro."

No U. S. Lebanon

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States, in an apparent attempt to avoid any action which might be interpreted as "interference," postponed indefinitely Saturday a planned visit of the U. S. 6th Fleet to Beirut, Lebanon.

The action was announced by the State Department which said it had asked the Defense Department to cancel the visit scheduled for Thursday.

A spokesman declined to give the reason for the postponement but it obviously was due to the tension in the Arab world created by Syria's revolt against the United Arab Republic.

23 Mayors In Berlin

BERLIN (UPI)—Twenty-three American mayors arrived here Saturday on a "grass roots display of national unity" for President Kennedy's firm stand on the city's future freedom.

Lord Mayor Willy Brandt immediately invited them on a tour of the city to see the East-West Berlin barrier wall erected by the Communists and the injustices it has inflicted.

Bonn Expresses Mistrust

BONN (UPI)—Expressions of mistrust of American support continued in many influential newspapers Saturday despite government assurances that the Western powers will stand firm on Berlin and Germany.

Most newspapers front-paged long accounts of the East-West round table talk in Rome at which U. S. Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., said the American people consider recognition of the oder-Neisse line as Germany's Eastern frontier to be possible.

Many fear this might endanger eventual German reunification. Official government insistence that this possibility has not been discussed by the Western four power ambassadorial committee—meeting in Washington to coordinate policy on Germany—was ignored in most cases.

Old Books News

Featured this week in the Old Book Corner is a large collection of NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC MAGAZINES, mostly circa 1920. Prices range from 50c to $1.00, depending on date and condition. We think that folks in the anthropology and geography fields may find treasure here.

If time permits, we also plan to add to the display a few specialized books on American Indians.

And by the way, we have a small pinch of Horatio Alger books, and a nice little collection of Peter Parley's Cabinet Library, set aside. Ask to see them. All are old dusty, and delightful.

Hoping you are the same,

Edwards Was Afraid Of UNC Running Game

By ED DUPREE

It was just another close game for Coach Earle Edwards yesterday—typical of N. C. State's losses over the past three seasons.

"We had a fast start, slow middle and a fast finish," Edwards said. Then he added, "I believe the turning point of the game was when Carolina got the ball and started marching on us."

Edwards pointed out that he didn't have any idea how the Tar Heels would operate. "I knew we would have trouble stopping a good running attack." He didn't feel that Carolina's excellent ground game was a big surprise.

The Wolfpack mentor hesitated to single out any Carolina men for outstanding play, putting it this way: "It would be unfair to the team to point out one man. I think this was pretty much a team effort."

As for his Wolfpack, Edwards was pleased with the defensive play of quarterback Tom Dellinger. "My impression was that he did a pretty good job. He and Mike Clark were in there all the time. Dellinger made a couple of key plays, including the fumble recovery that set up our last touchdown. I only remember one time when the two boys were caught off guard in the defensive backfield."

Edwards thought Roman Gabriel looked well, despite his slow first half. "He was off a little for a while, but he started hitting in the last half. I think he played his usually fine game."

He thought that UNC had good line play and was quick to admit that he has problems in his own line. "We've got a lot of inexperienced men in our line—don't overlook that center position. The center tends to be taken for granted sometimes, but it's an important position. We're having a hard time finding a boy that can do everything well at that spot."

When the Tar Heel backs started hitting the right side of his line, Edwards said that "we started adjusting men, trying to find the right combination." He added that he used two ends, Kroll and Golden, on defense for the first time.

Blocking was another one of Edwards' problems. He said, "We've got some good runners, but we don't give them anywhere to run."

"We couldn't stop them and we couldn't run the ball well enough to stop them," Edwards said, "this was our big problem against both Wyoming and UNC."

Then the Wolfpack coach summed it up like this: "If you don't move the ball, you have to give it up. And if you don't stop the opposition, you don't get the ball back." That was the story of the game.

Dukes Ax Virginia By 42-0

By CHARLES MAHON

RICHMOND (UPI)—Duke blasted Virginia's comeback road with a long-range scoring blitz Saturday to bury the Cavaliers 42-0 in an Atlantic Coast conference football game.

Virginia, which snapped the nation's longest losing streak at 28 last week, made a game out of the 13th annual Tobacco Bowl in the first period. But the Blue Devils cranked up their mighty offense at the turn of the second period and ran the outmanned Cavaliers out of breath.

Duke shook six different players loose for touchdowns, five of which came on long home run plays of 48, 67, 65, 17 and 46 yards.

After the roof caved in, Virginia looked like the team it was in posting a record-tying losing streak the past three seasons. The Cavaliers got back in the win column last week with a season opener 21-6 victory over William and Mary.

This was Duke's second victory of the season, both in conference play. The Blue Devils beat South Carolina 7-6 last week.

Duke, forced to punt every time it got the ball during the first period, engineered a 72-yard scoring march in the first three minutes of the second period. Halfbacks Mark Leggett and Joel Arrington sparked the drive with substantial runs.

Arrington capped the march with a three-yard end run for the score.

Virginia barely had its hands on the ball on the ensuing kickoff when the Blue Devils intercepted a Virginia pass on their own 27 and took over the ball on their own 13 as a result of a personal foul penalty.

Five plays later Blue Devil quarterback Gil Garner hit halfback Jack Wilson with a 48-yard pass play for the second touchdown.

After that, Garner and Walt Rappold found Virginia's leaky pass defense to their liking and the Blue Devil halfbacks found the Cavaliers' tired line quite porous.

Before the half was over Duke had run the score up to 28-0, adding a 67-yard touchdown play on a pass from Rappold to Leggett, and a 65-yard punt return by sophomore quarterback Jay Wilkinson, son of Oklahoma Coach Bud Wilkinson.

Duke closed out its scoring in the third period with a 17-yard run by Rappold and a 46-yard touchdown pass from Garner to halfback Billy Futrell.

Virginia never even came close in its scoring efforts. Duke buried the Cavaliers with a total offense of 380 yards to 161 for Virginia.

Scoring—Duke: Arrington 3 run kick failed.

Tar Heels Wallop Wolfpack, 27-22

liott and Jimmy Addison, mixing power with speed and deception, did practically all of the running in the drive. Elliott scored once from the three, but the TD didn't count because the team had been penalized for taking too much time.

Two plays later, however, Farris hit halfback Gib Carson with a swing pass for the genuine thing. Elliott booted the point to put the Heels ahead by 14-10.

On State's second play from scrimmage, Gabriel fumbled at the 40 and Steve Serenko recovered for UNC. This miscue proved to be the point of no return for the Wolfpack, for the Tar Heels were quick to capitalize.

On the first play, a Farris-to-Carson aerial accounted for 1 yards. In two plays, Carson picked up another first down. Farris sneaked on third down for a first and goal on the 4. Elliot carried to the one, and after Farris was held short, he blasted in for the score. Elliot's kick was blocked, but the Hickeymen found themselves ahead by 20-10 with 1:39 left to go in the tird quarter.

Carolina's extremely effective defensive job on Gabriel was the factor in the next score. State was forced to punt after three tries, and the Tar Heels took over on their own 25. On the first play, Farris threw long to end Steve Yates for 47 yards. The hard running of fullback Joe Davies and halfback Carson carried to the one, where on fourth down, Carson dived over for the fourth consecutive Carolina score. Edge kicked true and the Tar Heels enjoyed a 27-10 lead. Only 13 minutes and 19 seconds were left to be played.

It wasn't until the third down of the next series that Gabriel completed his first pass of the day. Johnny Morris took it, and lateraled to Al Taylor, who carried to the UNC 31. Another completed pass, plus a Carolina penalty, put the Pack in scoring position and allowed Gabriel to sneak over from the 1.

With 4:07 left in the game, State struck again, scoring their final point of the day.

A fine punt by Dave Houtz had put Carolina back on the four. On the first play, Farris fumbled forward, and the ball was grabbed by Dellinger of State, who carried down to the 8. On third down, Gabriel passed to Taylor for seven.

The Tar Heels, in winning their third straight game over two seasons, used only 25 men.

The devastating Carolina line, presumably responsible for the defensive success, was led throughout the afternoon by center Joe Craver, with five tackles, and guards Jim LeCompte, Duff Greene, and Jack Tillery, tackles Tony Hennessey, Jim Shumate, and Vic Esposito, and ends Conrad Sloop and John Runco.

State Frosh Hold Off UNC To Score 7-6 Win On Friday

By ED DUPREE

The UNC frosh dropped a 7-6 thriller o the N. C. State yearlings Friday night in the annual Shrine Bowl contest. 7,400 fans were on hand at State's Riddick Stadium for the preliminary to Saturday's varsity battle.

The baby Wolfpack went 32 yards in five plays to score the first touchdown late in the second quarter. Fullback Gibbons Sloan scored from the 4 to climax the drive. Mike Malone booted the winning point.

Tar Baby fullback Ken Willard was a thorn in State's side all night, picking up 96 yards rushing in 20 carries. The 6-2, 192-pounder from Richmond, Virginia, plowed through the State line on play after play to account for more than half of UNC's rushing yardage.

Carolina's frosh started their touchdown drive on their own 44 and chalked up their six-pointer 12 plays later. Quarterback Ron Tuthill went 7 yards to the State 49 and a personal foul against the Wolflets put the Tar Heels on the 34. Willard and Tuthill alternated carries and pushed the ball to the 17 to set up a crucial fourth and seven play. Tuthill hit end Frank Gallagher on a ten-yard play for the first down.

Willard drove through the State line to the 1 to set up the touchdown. Tuthill then sneaked over to score with 5:32 left in the game to narrow State's lead to 7-6.

The Tar Babies went for the two-pointer, sending their bread-and-butter fullback, Willard, through the middle, but the Wolflet line rose to the occasion and stopped Willard short of the goal line.

The Tar Babies got the ball two more times within the last five minutes and went to the air to try to overtake State. But State's James Guin came to the rescue, intercepting passes both times, once on the State 22.

The Tar Heel backs moved the ball well. Speedy halfback Tommy Ward picked up 41 yards in 4 carries for a 10-yard average, while halfback Dave Braine went 47 yards in 11 carries for a 4.3 average. Willard averaged 4.8 for his 20 carries.

The Blue and White picked up 16 first downs to State's 12, but the Wolflets outgained them 164-117 on the ground. UNC had 45 yards passing to State's 10. State was penalized 23 yards, the Tar Babies 50, to give the home team 151 net yards over UNC's 112.

Maryland Shades Clemson By 24-21

By TOM PRICE

CLEMSON, S. C.UPI—End John Hannigan booted a 23-yard field goal with eight seconds remaining in the game Saturday to give Maryland an action-packed 24-21 Atlantic Coast Conference win over Clemson.

The winning three-pointer was set up when Maryland tackle Dave Crossman recovered a fumble by Clemson quarterback Jim Parker on the home team's 19 yard line with a minute and 54 seconds to play.

Maryland, which had riddled the Clemson pass defense for 219 yards on 19 completions in 26 attempts, took no chances with the clock running out. Halfbacks Dennis Condie and Murnis Banner worked the ball to the six on four sucessive plays, but there the Terps drive stalled.

With the clock showing eight seconds left, Hannigan rushed onto the field and split the uprights on the fourth down. Earlier, he hit on three conversions, but was short on a field goal attempt.

The win was Maryland coach Tim Nugent's third in as many tries over Clemson's Frank Howard by margins of three points or less. The loss left Clemson with a 0-2 record for the first time since 1925.

The passing of quarterbacks Dick Shiner acounted for all three Terrapin touchdowns.

Novak drew first blood when he hit halfback Jim Davidson on a two-yard toss and struck again in the second period when he tossed one six yards to end Dick Barlund.

Shiner, a bright sophomore from Lebanon, Pa., hit Banner with a long one on the Clemson five. The halfback wrestled away from two Clemson defenders for the score.

Fullback Ron Scrudato plunged a yard for Clemson's first touchdown and his understudy, Bill McGuirt, plowed 11 yards for the third. In between, quarterback Jim Parker hit end Tommy King.

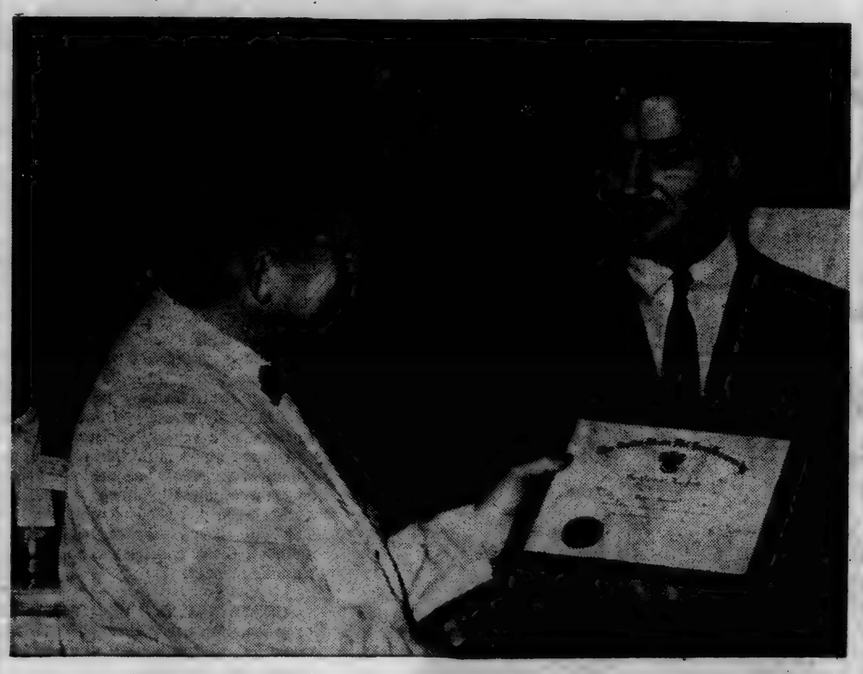
UNC's Battle Senate Awarded



Paul Whitfield Accepts 'Outstanding Senate' Award

The William H. Battle Senate of the Delta Theta Phi Law Fraternity has been awarded the "Outstanding Student Senate" award in regional competition.

The award is determined on the basis of excellence in fifteen phases of scholastic, extra-curricular and fraternity activity.

Dean of Battle Senate, Paul L. Whitfield, accepted the award at the farternity's 32nd biennial convention in Atlanta. The presentation was made by William Henry Caswell of Detroit and Meredith M. Daubin of Washington, D. C.

The award was won for Region Three, a division of the national law fraternity, which includes student senates in North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and western Pennsylvania.

Among the more important of the 15 standards for determining the award are: (1) scholastic standing of the senate, (2) scholastic achievements and honors received by the brothers and (3) participation in student bar association work.

Battle Senate named after UNC's first law professor, was founded in 1924.

Students To Move To Canadian Wilds

BY LINDA CRAVOTTA

UNC's Canadian Exchange Trip club is organizing its third annual trek to the wilds of the Canadian frontier during mid-term break, January 31-February 3.

Applications will be available today through Friday from either the main lobby of Graham Memorial, Y-Court, or the Reserve Reading Room of the library.

Applications should be submitted to the main desk in Graham Memorial by Friday, October 6, and applicants should sign up for interviews to be given from October 9-11.

"Genuine Friendliness"

Applicants should possess a genuine friendliness and interest in people, combined with a willingness to share personalities and communicate ideas, according to Pat Morgan, chairman of the Canadian Exchange Trip.

Miss Morgan is working closely with the Woman's Coordinator Lynda Richert in preparing plans for both UNC's trip to Canada, and a reciprocal visit of Canadians to the UNC campus.

Extra-curricular activities are not necessarily a prerequisite for application, although they will be taken into consideration along with any particular talents and interests which an applicant has.

Homecoming Weekend

The Canadian students will visit the UNC campus on November 10-12, during the Germans-Homecoming weekend. Student Government will pay all expenses of the Canadians during their stay at Carolina, and this will be reversed when UNC students are in Canada.

Transportation and expenses for UNC students will be limited to $50.00, unless individuals plan to spend extra money.

The quota of UNC students who can be selected is twenty-four (12 men and 12 women). A possible trip to New York City may be included in the trip to Canada.

De Gaulle Calls For Unity; May Resume Dictator Power

Edwards Asks Y-Court Litter Be Curtailed

Rudy Edwards, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs yesterday issued a plea to students to exert an effort in helping to keep Y-Court clean.

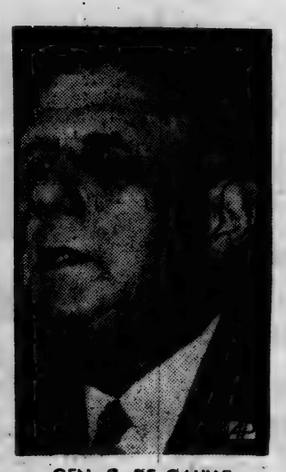
"There has been increasing difficulty in keeping Y-Court clean simply because people haven't been using the trash cans," Edwards said.

"We have had a number of comments from administration members and from students about the general slovenliness of the area.

"Rather than station an official to police the area, I would like to appeal to the students' resonability to help keep the area clean," Edwards stated.

"I believe the students are fully capable of self-government and of conducting themselves in a responsible way, and that there is no need for outside interference;" he continued.

Edwards also mentioned that there are six trash cans strategically located in Y-Court for students to use.



GEN. C. DE GAULLE

There will be an important staff meeting for all members of the Daily Tar Heel in the DTH offices this afternoon at 4 p.m. Attendance is required.

Speech Sabotaged In West Algeria

PARIS (UPI)—President Charles de Gaulle appealed Monday for national unity to combat the mounting wave of terrorism, continued bloodshed and the haunting fear of civil war. His television speech was sabotaged in Algeria.

DeGaulle threated to resume supreme dictatorial powers to guide France through its "hard and dangerous passage." He said he would dissolve parliament and hold a nationwile referendum vote if France becomes embroiled in another grave political crisis.

His speech was broadcast here and in Algeria but in the West Algeria port of Oran settler extremists sabotaged it by blowing up transmission cables 10 minutes before the broadcast was due to begin, darkening screens throughout the city.

The action in Oran, crippled Monday by a 30-minute strike called on orders of the Secret Army Organization OAS followed similar moves recently in Algeria where the OAS twice took over a TV station to broadcast anti-DeGaulle statements.

De Gaulle's voice was stern as he told the nation:

"If it should happen that the political situation endangered the regular functioning of the authorities, government and parliament, and in these threatening times endangered the very destiny of the country, then the people would have to make its decision known by the means open to it."

De Gaulle had abandoned last Saturday the emergency powers he assumed during the April generals' revolt in Algeria but warned he would not hesitate to use them again if necessary.

"They remain, in their fullest possible extent, the supreme guarantee for the country and the state," he said.

De Gaulle spoke against this background:

—Movements against De Gaulle have been reported in right-wing circles in France and extremists recently tried to assassinate him with a plastic bomb.

—The OAS is openly defying his regime in Algeria and has carried out a series of demonstrations, including a half-hour work stoppage Monday.

—Moslem terrorists in Algeria have been arming for a showdown with the OAS and the government seems powerless to stop them.

—There was no certainty the powerful French Army in Algeria would obey De Gaulle in event of a new OAS coup or a fight with the Moslems.

Atlas Spans Oceans

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI)—An Atlas missile carrying two "piggyback" packages of instruments to be used in future U. S. space flights thundered into the sky today on a planned ocean-spanning flight.

The gleaming 80-foot rocket blasted from its launching pad at about 1:22 p.m. A delicate guidance system aimed an instrument-packed dummy warhead at a target 5,000 miles away, in the South Atlantic.

Pressure On Union

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy will put just as much pressure on the steelworkers union to make non-inflationary wage demands as he exerted on the steel companies to avoid price increases, Labor Secretary Arthur J. Goldberg said Monday.

The cabinet officer said the administration would speak with equal force to the union before negotiations start next spring on a new contract covering half a million steelworkers.

Money For Ghanaian Dam?

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana has written President Kennedy asking for a firm U.S. decision on aid to the controversial Volta River dam-smelter project.

Informed sources said Nkrumah asked for a reply by Oct. 13. He said he had no objection to Kennedy's suggestion that an economic mission be sent to Ghana for a final review of the project.

The United States said last week it was withholding, pending a final review, a decision on whether to go ahead with more than $30 million in loans to the Akosomba Dam and loans or investor guarantees for an aluminum smelter which would cost between $128 million and $178 million, depending on size of the plant.

DeGaullists Raid Settlers

ALGIERS (UPI)—French police loyal to President Charles de Gaulle Monday raided a headquarters of the Secret Army Organization (OAS) at Blida, 25 miles south of Algiers. Earlier the OAS successfully called out French settlers in a 30-minute strike.

Informed sources in Algiers said the "forces of order" arrested about 20 members of the underground organization. They acted on a tip by a young army sergeant who deserted last week with a truckload of arms destined for renegade soldiers who had gone over to the OAS.

Agraian Reform For Spain

BURGOS, Spain (UPI)—Generalissimo Francisco Franco outlined Monday a new program of agrarian reform that will keep his regime busy for years, but he kept quiet about his own political future.

Franco, in a speech to the Falange party's national council, said economic development study for the country is in progress and assured Spanish citizens there would be no problem of succession to the post of chief of state.

Y Launches Drive For New Members

By NANCY BARR

The YWCA launched its annual membership drive for junior women transfers today.

Over 15 committees ranging from international relations to the office force are available to the new junior students who will check their preferences on interest cards Wednesday.

At this time the freshmen women students will be invited to join the the '65 club, the YWCA's equivalant to the YMCA's Freshman Forum. Especially designed for new college students, the '65 club headed by Harriet Cox will present programs and discussions of special interest to women entering a university for the first time.

The YWCA committees are planned to appeal to student interests in national and international affairs, welfare work and office work.

Chest Committee

The Campus Chest committee, headed by Jeanie MacDougall, sponsors the annual student Campus Chest drive at UNC. This drive is the single, authorized appeal for funds on campus and employs a working committee of over 200.

The Public Affairs committee, headed by Sara Jo Allen, studies current U. S. problems. Several times during the year the committee brings speakers and films to the campus as well as holds discussions on national affairs.

The International Relations committee handles on the international level the same type of world problems as does the Public Affairs committee on the national level. This year the committee is planning to sponsor several book and clothes drives for university students in colonial countries.

Under the committee foreign students on campus and other speakers on international problems will present programs.

Race relations in the South will be the major topic of studies and discussions in the Human Relations Committee this year. During the year several conferences, forums and speakers will be dealing with human relations in the South.

The Collegiate Council of United Nations, formerly the U. N. Education committee, will again sponsor a multitude of activities concerning the U. N. As well as the annual seminar Thanksgiving trip to the U.N., the committee will participate in the inter-collegiate U. N. Model Assembly along with 25 neighboring colleges and universities.

Welfare Activities

Along with national and international interests, the "Y" also sponsors welfare activities in and around Chapel Hill.

Hospital Aid, headed by Sinclair Kemper, and Hospital Visiting, headed by Blanche Bonner, do afternoon visiting and entertaining in the N. C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill. Kay Fletcher heads the Gravely committee which does visiting, shopping and presents programs to the patients in the local TB sanitorium.

The Dix Hill committee, headed by Angelyn Stokes, and the Catholic Orphanage committee, headed by Betti Brown, do welfare work in Raleigh through visiting and entertainment.

Working with young people in Chapel Hill centers around the Girl Scouts committee, headed by Jane Shaw, the Negro "Y" Teens headed by Pat Stallings, and the Blind "Y" Teens, headed by Sylvia Mullins.

Autos To Be Charged

Beginning today owners of unregistered cars on campus will be charged $7.50 to register them and to re-enter school.

Rudy Edwards, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, announced that boys from the Student Affairs office will put a blue ticket on all unregistered cars found parked on campus. The license number, make and model of the car will be taken in order to trace the owner of the car.

When the driver of the car is located, he will be dropped from school and must pay a $5.00 late registration fee to be reinstated. He then will have to pay the normal $2.50 fee to register his car.

Students keeping cars on campus have already been informed that they must have them registered with the Dean of Sudent Affairs, according to Edwards. They have had time to register them.

Coeds Shocked By Mannikin In Bra And Very Little Else

BY CHARLES COOPER

"Lord, I was shocked!"

This was one coed's reaction to the latest addition to the many signs and announcements in Y-Court. The addition is a mannikin dressed in a skirt and a brassiere, accompanied by a sign reading: "I dreamed I saw the Four Aces in my Maidenform bra."

The display is a part of the publicity campaign being conducted by the University Entertainment Committee in preparation for their first show of the year.

Good Idea

Most coeds, after their initial shock thought the idea a good one and the whole thing funny.

"I didn't think it was in bad taste at all," said one coed, "although I was a little shocked."

Another coed thought it very funny: "I didn't see anyone die or anything. I don't think it was so bad."

Unfavorable reaction was voiced by some coeds. "I wish they would take it down. I just noticed it and looked the other way, was one of the negative reactions.

"Very Impressive"

All male students contacted found the mannikin very amusing. In contrast to the embarassed coeds, one man said, "It was very impressive."

There was one dissenter among the men who thought the display showed poor taste. But he said he was very amused by it, despite its "bad taste."

CAUSING CONSTERNATION among some coeds and raucus laughter among some males was an item of Feminine apparel similar to this which appeared on a mannikin in the Y building yesterday. The mannikin in question was purportedly "seeing the Four Aces" in her Maidenforms. —Photo By Jim Wallace

Takes Possession Of New CU Flag

As a result of Saturday's win over the State College Wolfpack, UNC took possession of the new Consolidated University flag.

"We didn't think we could add to the rivalry but we did want to recognize it," said Bill Shipp, president of the Consolidated University Student Council, in explaining the creation of the symbol of State-Carolina football wars.

Made at a cost of $190, the flag contains the emblems and colors of all three institutions which comprise the Consolidated University. The seals joined are the blue and white of UNC, the red and white of State College and the gold and white of the Woman's College. The background is white and the lettering C.U.S.C. is in gold.

The flag will be displayed at key university functions and at all football games.

It will remain in Chapel Hill until the 1962 Carolina-State game. The winner will then take possession for the next year.

As to how Woman's College can win the flag, Shipp had this explanation, "In case of a tie . . . . the flag will go to them."

To Stay In Race

Rayburn Sees Tax Lift

By ROBERT BARKDOLL
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Speaker Sam Rayburn said Monday that Congress will not hesitate to raise taxes if more federal revenue is needed to keep this country in the arms race with Russia.

He predicted that federal spending and tax rates would remain high as long as "reckless people have hold of weapons that are totally destructive." The United States will stay in the arms business just as long as Russia forces it to, he said.

Until the Berlin crisis flared up last summer, President Kennedy had looked forward to some tax cuts next year. But Commerce Secretary Luther H. Hodges said several weeks ago that the U. S. military buildup had about wiped out any chance of reductions.

SAM RAYBURN

However, Congress is scheduled to act early next year on the President's big tax revision proposals. The most controversial feature is the proposed tax incentive for businessmen who invest in new plants and equipment.

Other parts of the plan would withold taxes from dividends and interest, repeal the special tax credit for stockholders, limit expense accounts deductions and eliminate tax advantages for Americans living abroad.

Rayburn discussed the tax and spending outlook in a copyrighted interview in U. S. News & World Report.

Declaring that the United States must stay in the arms race with Russia as long as it lasts, Rayburn said: "If we just had to have more money—I don't think there would be anything that would prevent Congress from raising taxes in certain places."

The veteran congressman said he believed the people would pay higher taxes without great protest if they were convinced that the international situation demanded it.

'. . . Of State And Nation'

'The Best Interests'

The Florida unit of the NAACP nearly two weeks ago asked Gov. Farris Bryant to "consider revising" Florida's ban against Negroes joining its National Guard, "in light of the Berlin Crisis."

Gov. Bryant countered the request a few days later with one of his own, asking that Negroes not try to enlist in the Guard because the state was "anxious not to be involved in any controversies which might bring about a disharmony detrimental to . . . national defense goals and to the best interest of the state."

We are not sure what Gov. Bryant considers" the best interest of the state," but it is doubtful that Jim Crowism in the Florida National Guard does much toward protecting that state's best interest.

Any detriment that Florida suffers from a plea for an integrated National Guard is the fault of the state, not of the NAACP or of the Negroes that want to train in that state's Guard unit.

The state is directly responsible for allowing itself to be put into a position where squabbles over color bars can do it harm. Florida has made itself vulnerable by allowing racism to remain a part of its tradition to the extent that the right of military training is deprived the Negro.

It is a strange paradox that Gov. Bryant should invoke the name of the state and nation in an argument to stop Negroes from attempting to defend that state and nation.

Instead of wasting more time in the defense of racial bias, using some rather tortured logic in the process, Governor Bryant could better direct his efforts toward integrating the Guard unit.

The right of any American to defend his state and country should not be denied on racial grounds. Gov. Bryant's position is untenable. The sooner he realizes that, the sooner he can cease to lose sleep over "the best interest of the state and nation."

Perhaps North Carolina's Gov. Terry Sanford should give this problem some consideration along with Bryant, since this state also practices segregation in its National Guard unit.

He may be also called on to defend some interests.

Uneducated Educators

The following letter appeared recently in the "Public Pulse" column of The Greensboro Daily News.

We are reprinting it because it gives an insider's view of the "Uneducated Educator."

Are the writer's comments just as applicable to Carolina as to Woman's College?

Editor of the Daily News:

I have changed the intended tone of this letter. It was to have been satiric, humorous and entertaining. But that style is inappropriate for this topic. The topic is critical. I have read in our papers and magazines of this topic or variations on it. The topic is education.

Our papers have criticized our school buildings, our school materials and facilities, and our underpaid and overworked teachers. These criticisms are just, perhaps, but these are not the most important themes in the anthem of "American School Improvement."

Would we put a million-dollar school building on a five-cent foundation? No? But we do. The foundation I am referring to is the training of the elementary school teachers.

I speak with some authority, I think, in that I am presently enrolled in primary education at the Woman's College. I take a normal senior load—15 semester hours — including germs, games, songs, reading, and maps. The college jargon by which these courses are named is used here to suggest the frivolity with which these courses are taught and taken. Though such courses are required by the state for certification, the requirement is not peculiar to North Carolina.

All these courses are shallow; they are taught by the latest education theory that method rather than knowledge is most important. The professors struggle in an attempt to make the content of the course last through a 4½-month semester. Some through their cunning succeed; others do not — which leaves the college girls free to go to Carolina every weekend, read fewer than 2,000 pages a semester, and literally let a possibly vital brain grow inactive and stagnant.

She is forced into a shallow existence, thinking that clothes, "Weejun" loafers and college weekends are the most important things in this life.

What kind of girl is attracted to primary education? Is it the girl who sincerely wants to improve the minds and lives of the children she teaches? Too often it is the girl who wants "a good time in college and an easy degree," who wants an insurance

These are the future teachers. Their heads are filled with original bulletin boards, cute games,, and songs; and their hands are full of lesson plans. There are, thank heaven, exceptions. There are girls that audit philosophy, sociology, art, history and literature courses that require more work and more stimulation of their minds.

They are the ones with depth, understanding and mature values, with which to help mold the children who are at such a crucial age in their development.

HUAC To Investigate Lenoir Hall Next?

As a cafeteria, Lenoir Hall is uniquely paradoxical.

Its interior is clean and comfortable, the food is tasty, prices are low and the atmosphere is mellow. Yet everyday it becomes a less appealing place to eat.

There are two good reasons for this: Overcrowding and surly food servers.

Of the two reasons, the over-crowding is excusable. An enrollment increase of 490 students has pushed UNC's student population to a record high of 9,082, and everyone of them gets hungry approximately three times a day, at about the same time.

This, and the fact that the Pine Room below the cafeteria is still closed for renovations, accounts for the over-crowding.

But what excuse is there for the surliness of most of the food servers? Are they underpaid, overworked, or otherwise mistreated? It would be nice to know. Then perhaps something could be done to improve their lot, and thus their dispositions.

* * *

ONLY A FEW OF Lenoir's many food servers don't fit into the Surly category. God bless those few. Their smiles are all the brighter for the gloom their co-workers exude. Their pleasantries are all the more appreciated, so scarce have they become.

What's wrong with the rest of Lenoir's food-serving employees? Courtesy seems to have no discernible effect on them, even though it is faithfully practiced from one meal to the next in the hope that surliness is a veneer consistent politeness will eventually penetrate.

But two weeks of this has done not one shred of good. Prefacing your request with "please" seems to be useless. The casual what-in-the-devil-do-you-want silent treatment is still tendered. It is still a solemn occasion when you wind up with a dry-saucered cup of coffee. Soup is still quite often evenly divided between the inside and the outside of the bowl. Gravy continues to be tossed at potatoes in a most unmarksmanlike manner.

* * *

CERTAINLY THE WOMEN who work behind the counters have no easy job. For every customer who is polite, there probably are ten who aren't. But reacting to courtesy by ignoring its presence is no way to cultivate the quality.

Let us have a meeting of the minds. Let's try being polite to each other. "Please" and "thank you" are easy enough to say. Only the ignorant stumble on such single-syllabled words, or forget them completely. Let's try killing them with courtesy, fellow patrons.

And if that doesn't work, well, we can always request the House Un-American Activities to investigate.

On second thought, we'd better forget about that alternative and put everything we've got into the politeness program. After all, think how bad it'd look if the committee found that Lenoir is just a front organization, and they're not really renovating the Pine Room, but using it to print up Russian war bonds.

Is Money Allotted To NSA Well-Spent?

Your consistency is to be commended. Again you have perverted the words of a Conservative spokesman. Contrary to the article entitled "The What, How, Why of NSA," William F. Buckley, Jr., in his speech which included the word "semi-savage," referred only to the Congo not Ceylon, Pakistan, Northern Rhodesia and Ethiopia.

His words were: "It is impossible to equate Washington, Jefferson and Franklin with Patrice Lumumba, Joseph Mobutu and other semi-savages of the Congo."

Divergent groups were not represented quite as well at the 1961 NSA Convention as the DTH would have its readers believe. Governor Gaylord Nelson, a Liberal of the Hubert Humphrey type, delivered a verbose welcoming address that had the Liberal members of the body of 500 nodding their heads in agreement, slapping each other's back and occasionally murmuring "Amen."

The Conservative speaker, William F. Buckley, Jr., was not allowed to address the body of delegates. Instead, Mr. Buckley spoke to an overflow crowd of 1500 at a nearby inn.

Equally as bad as your distortions is your failure to include the whole story. For example, when the Conservatives tried to sponsor the appearance of a Cuban refugee student at the 1961 NSA Convention, the Liberals would have no part of it. The Liberal vote against hearing the Cuban refugee was overwhelming.

Instead, the Liberals passed their bill for military non-intervention in Cuba and sent Fidel a telegram. In 1960 the Liberal controlled NSA Convention commended the Japanese students who rioted against President Eisenhower's proposed visit.

Is the student money allocated to the NSA delegation well spent?

The Defense Answers

(Editor's Note: Mr. Clotfelter was the writer of the NSA article. His name was unintentionally left off the page.)

Mr. Somers—

Mr. Buckley's original use of the term "semi-savages" in his speech at the Madison Inn at the Madison, Wisc. NSA Congress, was admittedly applied only to the Congolese leaders. Later, however, in a question-and-answer period the Algerian FLN leaders came in for the same abuse.

Then, after four foreign students from Ceylon, Pakistan, Northern Rhodesia and Ethiopia publicly protested Mr. Buckley's "racist" and "colonialist" us of words, Buckley retorted with a public statement referring to the heads of these four nations as "semi-savages."

As to Wisconsin Gov. Nelson's being allowed to speak, this was not TOO unusual, I think, considering that the Congress was being held in his state.

Again, Mr. Somers, your "facts" concerning the Cuban refugee are very shaky. The Young Americans for Freedom, a rightist group, tried to convince the Congress to hear a secondary officer in the refugee association. Instead, the Congress asked the President of the refugee association to speak at a general plenary session. The President spoke and was given the longest standing ovation of the entire Congress.

YAF pouted in the corner, however, and held an outside meeting with the secondary officer as speaker. Ever since the Congress, YAF has been screaming "suppression," an absurd charge at best.

NSA has positively NEVER "commended" or endorsed or favored the Japanese rioters who opposed Eisenhower's visit.

TO THE EDITOR:

Have Beer, Good Cry, Forget It

The briefest examination of the history of Congressional Committees will reveal that HUAC is not only legal but approved by an overwhelming majority of Congressmen. Such an examination will also reveal that the Supreme Court records are replete with decisions upholding the right of HUAC to compel attendance of witnesses and the answering of questions.

This was, incidentally, the same Supreme Court that gave the celebrated decision of 1954. What do you propose? Should we honor the opinion of the Court with regard to civil rights, but disregard it when it approves HUAC? Just what is your position? Should we join the Birchers in campaigning for impeachment of Earl Warren? Or, in keeping with your logic, should he adopt a double standard?

HOUSE RULE XI, 83rd Congress, defines the Committee's authority:

The Committee on UN-American Activities, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to make from time to time investigations of (1) the extent, character and objectives of un-American propaganda activities in the United States, (2) the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries or of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the forms of government as guaranteed by our Constitution, and (3) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

2 U.S.C. 192 (1938), makes it a misdemeanor for any person summoned as a witness by either House or Congress or a Committee thereof to refuse to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry.

* * *

IN BARENBLATT V. UNITED STATES, 360 U.S. 109 (1959), the Supreme Court upheld a conviction for refusing to answer a question asked by HUAC. Justice Harlan, in his opinion, gave a Legislative history of HUAC and concluded that the "Committee's Legislative Authority to conduct investigations is unassailable."

The opinion included the folowing:

The Un-American Activities Committee, originally known as the Dies Committee, was first established by the House in 1938. The House has steadily continued the life of the Committee at the Commencement of each new Congress; it has never narrowed the powers of the Committee, whose authority has remained throughout identical and it has continuingly supported with that contained in Rule XI; the Committee's activities with substantial appropriations. Beyond this, the Committee was raised to the level of a standing committee of the House in 1945, it having been but a special committee prior to that time.

* * *

WHEN THE QUESTION of continuing HUAC came before the present Congress earlier this year, the opinions of the DTH, Walter Reuther and Eleanor Roosevelt had little effect. Of 437 Congressmen, only 6 (six) voted against continuing HUAC.

What are you to do? It seems that both the Supreme Court and Congress disagree with you. I suggest that you, Eleanor and Walter meet somewhere (perhaps the DTH office), have a beer and a good cry and forget it.

'In Loco Parentis' Writer Just Loco?

Mr. Garry Blanchard's recent prose contribution to The Daily Tar Heel, "In Loco Parentis," seemed to this writer a trifle ambiguous, if not just plain "loco." Perchance not "loco" if the reader were to infer that the article was on a universal rather than a specific basis, i.e., aimed at colleges in general; not at the University of North Carolina. However, there is the point of ambiguity.

Surely few student bodies enjoy the freedom of action and affiliation than does the student body of Carolina, so far as is this writer's knowledge.

If Mr. Blanchard has suffered some sordidly stupendous persecution at the hands of Carolina's administration, then let him speak specifically of it, rather than write an article without clear premise which seems so strongly to imply that there are Beelzebubs in South Building.

Of course, such reasoning on the reader's part may well be misconstruing Blanchard's meaning; nevertheless, had he something else in mind, there seems little plausible motive for having it said at Carolina. Now, were he attending the University of Virginia . . .

—John Allen Quintus

Were UNC Less Free It Wouldn't Be Inked

"In Loco Parentis" was and is nothing more nor less than an attempt to define the theory and appraise its value. The suggestion that the article is ambiguous may be valid; the suggestion that it was written to revenge some dark act of South Building is not. Readers who so construed the article simply read into it what is not there.

The fact that the article's conclusions were "said at Carolina" only accentuates the leading role The Daily Tar Heel, hence Carolina, is playing in supplying a forum—unfettered by all but the dictates of good taste—for the airing of ideas, opinions and disagreements of far-ranging significance. Were UNC an institution less free than it so admirably is, the article would never have seen the dark of ink.

New Weed Building A Pleasure To Dig

By PETE IVEY

Digging the first shovelful of earth for the new botany building at the University was a ceremony memorable because of the academic people involved—and especially because of the presence of the widow of the scientist for whom the building is to be named.

The William C. Coker Building, to house the Department of Botany in the University, is now under construction following the groundbreaking ritual.

Mrs. W. C. Coker, widow of the botanist who headed the department at Chapel Hill for many years and who was the founder and developer of the famed Coker Arboretum, attended the ceremony.

The Coker Botany Building is being erected on the Raleigh Road, between the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower and H.V.P. Wilson Hall. The structure, with equipment, will cost $1,136,742.

The groundbreaking event was a "double ceremony" with Prof. Victor Greulach, chairman of the Department of Botany, turning the first shovelful, and Kenan Professor John Couch, former department chairman, digging the second shovelful.

When the structure is completed in 1962 the Department of Botany will be moved from William R. Davie Hall to the new Coker Building which will be one of the buildings in a "Science Center" between the main campus and the Health Affairs Campus. In immediate proximity will be the departments of zoology, chemistry botany, with the Department of Geology and Geography to be established in a building there within a short time.

U.S. Rejects Russian Bid For New Secretary General

By BRUCE W. MUNN
United Press International

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—The United States Monday rejected Russia's proposal for an interim secretary general and three deputies to succeed the late Dag Hammarskjold.

Although the Soviet delegation insisted its proposal—not yet offered formally—provided for a veto-free administration of the United Nations, U. S. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson said it maintained the "troika" idea and would divide the world organization into three blocs.

Despite U. S. opposition, explanation of the plan circulated by the Soviet delegation Monday found favor among many of the "neutral" delegations. While few were ready to announce full support for it, several said it contained the groundwork for compromise on the threatened deadlock in choosing a new head for the United Nations.

The Soviet explanation did not contain the formulation of the plan in resolution form. As obtained by United Press International and published last week, the Soviet draft resolution declares that:

Heard No Word

"The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, as a temporary measure up till April 1963, invites Mr. K to organize the work of the secretariat together with Mr. A, Mr. B and Mr. C, his duties and believes that these persons will do their utmost to act in common agreement in discharging the functions of the secretariat which have been entrusted to it by the U.N. charter."

The assembly heard no word of this as it continued its annual general debate with a policy statement by President Joaquin Palaguer of the Dominican Republic.

The Security Council postponed a showdown on membership appications of Outer Mongolia and Mauritania, the outcome of which might decide Nationalist China's future in the United Nations.

Russia has threatened to veto Mauritania's application unless Outer Mongolia is admitted. The dozen "Brazzaville group" countries of Africa have threatened to vote against Nationalist China when the assembly considers later this year the Chinese representation issue unless Mauritania is admitted.

The council agreed without objection to the proposal of Ambassador Christie Dee, deputy chief of the Liberian delegation, to an indefinite adjournment to permit further private consultation.

Yack Queens Should Apply

Candidates for the Yackety-Yack's "Queen of the Yack" and 12 members of her court should submit their applications as soon as possible, according to Bolling Puller, contest manager.

The contest, to be held Oct. 23 in Memorial Hall, is open to all women undergraduates who have not previously entered a Yack beauty contest.

Candidates will be judged on their beauty, poise, grace and performance. The contest will be emceed by a professional disc jockey from a nearby radio or TV station.

Contestants will probably get "late" privileges as the event is expected to last all evening, Miss Puller said. She said any questions concerning the contest should be directed to her at 210 Pittsboro St., here in Chapel Hill.

Last year's Queen, Sharon Cates, has urged all interested Carolina coeds to enter without delay.

Faculty Drive On

A three-day drive for faculty donations to the "Y" begins today.

The goal for faculty donations this year is $1,600, some $31 higher than the actual donation last year. The faculty contributions are approximately one-ninth of the proposed $14,200 budget for 1961-62.

The largest contribution made to the "Y" each year comes from the students, who usually give $7,-100.

The second largest contribution is made by parents of UNC students who give about half the amount of the students.

Mantle May Miss Opener In Series

NEW YORK (UPI)—Mickey Mantle Monday night became a doubtful starter in Wednesday's World Series opener against the Cinderella Cincinnati Reds but there was enough power left, headed by record-setting Roger Maris, to keep the New York Yankees a solid 11 to 5 favorite.

"If I feel the way I feel now I can't play Wednesday," Mantle mourned as he appeared at a Yankee workout but merely put on his uniform, looking tired and wan as result of a heavy cold, touch of virus and the lancing of an abscess on his right thigh.

"I'm a little encouraged, considering the way I feel now compared with three days ago," said Mantle, who watched on television Sunday as Maris smashed his 61st home run for the most ever hit in the major league season. "But I feel pretty weak and I'm still coughing."

Mantle and Maris, with a total of 115 homers between them this year, comprise the greatest one-two home run punch in baseball history. And Mantle is looking for a Ruthian record, too, for he needs only two to wipe out the legendary Babe Ruth's total of 15 in World Series play.

In a record year in which they also set a team home run mark of 240 circut blows, the Yankees were expecting another series standard when they sent Whitey Ford to the mound Wednesday. The chunky left-hander, who had a 25-4 record this season, is tied at seven with Red Ruffing and Allie Reynolds, two former Yankees, for the most series victories.

Freddie Hutchinson, who led the Reds from sixth place last year to the pennant, said that all his players felt that they could get the job done.

"We've been underdogs all year," he grinned, "we're used to it. I know we're not supposed to win but I haven't told the players yet so they don't know it.

"But let me tell you this," he added grimly, "the only place either team is going to win this is out there between those white lines. We weren't supposed to win the pennant, and the odds were higher against us there than they are here."

Hutchinson asserted that the Reds' chances were being ignored in view of the fact that he felt the National League was a stronger circuit than the American League this season.

"I would think that our benches and our secondary pitching are stronger than theirs," he insisted. "They had to lose some in their expansion and setting up two new teams. We'll face that problem next year. But this time it has to give us an edge."

Has Injury Problem

Hutchinson had an injury problem, too, which to the Reds was every bit as important as Mantle's possible absence. First string catcher Darrell Johnson, suffered a strained side muscle Friday night at Pittsburgh and it was doubtful whether he would be able to start.

"I know one thing," he said in announcing his lineup, "my staff is better than I had when I managed either Detroit or St. Louis."

His lineup includes Don Blasingame, 2B; Ed Kaske, SS; Vada Pinson, CF; Frank Robinson, LF; Wally Post, RF; Gene Freese, 3B; Gordy Coleman, 1B; either Johnson or Jerry Zimmerman behind the plate, and O'Toole on the mound.

Ralph Houk, who led the Yankees to the American League flag in his freshman season as manager after succeeding the fired Casey Stengel, said that because of the Mantle situation he would hold off naming his lineup until after the Yankees work out at 11 a.m. Tuesday. The Reds also will work out, at 1:30 p.m.

Houk said, however, that if Mantle was unable to play in the opener he would shift Maris to center field. With Yogi Berra playing left field, he said, his right fielder in that case would be John Blanchard, who batted .305 and hit 21 home runs in 92 games this season.

There was no indecision in the mind of either manager as to pitching assignments.

Ralph Terry 16-3 will go for the Yankees in the second game against Jay 21-10, and when the sries resumes at Cincinnati on Saturday it will be the Yankees' Bill Stafford 14-9 against Bob Purkey 16-12.

HARRY W. LLOYD

THE SPORTS Tabloyd

A plan for feeding the athletes at Carolina, which at first glance appears to be the best method for all concerned, has drawn some underhanded criticism from a few individuals, who, in the most part, have preferred to remain anonymous.

The first of these scorching blasts at the football team appeared in the DTH accompanied by what can be most accurately be termed as a false name. The writer signed it "Junius Goodman," and by some accident, it appeared in print without the name being checked as to its accuracy. A later check of the student files and the Chapel Hill telephone book showed no evidence of any "Junius Goodman" living on campus.

The football team was both angered and distressed by the letter, and some subsequent articles along the same line of thought. The writer had not only manufactured a problem, but he had slandered all of the university's athletes.

* * *

What was the fuss over?

A partition had been set up in one of the small dining rooms in Lenoir Hall, dividing the public eating area from a small space with about the same area as a classroom. In the smaller, divided-off area, the football players and other athletes on scholarships were fed.

Until last year, all of the scholarship athletes were fed in the Monogram Club dining room. When these facilities were made into a semi-exclusive meeting place for the faculty, then the athletes were ordered out. Instead of being fed together, they were given a stipend each month to buy their food. This plan worked well enough in the off season. The players were satisfied with it.

However, this system isn't practical during the playing season. Athletes engaged in playing the tough game of football are put on a restricted diet. What they eat determines to a great extent how well they play. The only place that could be used to seat all of them was Lenoir Hall.

* * *

Did the influx of the players cause any of the serving lines in Lenoir to close down? No. The line is still open in the south dining room, even though the seating space is diminished. In the past, that room wasn't open a lot of the time, anyway. The fact that the athletes are served at their tables instead of going through a line speeds up, rather than slowing down service to other customers of Lenoir.

So what's the gripe? People waiting in line don't like it when they see someone else walk in and be served right off the bat. Someone who planks down 40 cents for hamburger and mashed potatoes and iced tea doesn't like it when husky boys are served steaks "free." The pseudo-intellectual who doesn't gain attention for his mental acrobatics doesn't like it when the affections of a student body go toward one who is skilled at running the football.

Football players and basketball players alike were mystified as to why anyone would hide behind a fake name and use such brusque language. Even after the victory Saturday, some of them still wondered if "Junius Goodman" would come forward with his stinging words again.

* * *

"Does the whole campus feel that way?" co-captain Bob Elliott asked us. "They certainly didn't sound that way out there today. If they do, then I would like to know about it."

However, some of the other players took the writer for what he was, a crackpot. But if coach Jim Hickey had wanted his boys to really tackle hard in a football scrimmage, he could have stencilled the name "Goodman" on the practice dummies.

John Flournoy said last week, before the opening game: "He said that the university shouldn't support athletics because the football team was a loser and the basketball team accepted bribes. He's wrong. Only one basketball team was connected with the bribery scandals. And we're going to have a winning football team."

John was right. After the game of last Saturday, we think all the Junius Goodmans at Carolina will stay in hiding for a while.

Allen Says: "Better Than Last Year"

Soccermen Open Against Roanoke

By Harry W. Lloyd
DTH Sports Editor

An improved North Carolina soccer team opens its official 1961 season here today against Roanoke College. Gametime is at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

Last season, the Tar Heel team of coach Marvin Allen defeated this same Roanoke team by 2-0.

Coach Allen said yesterday that he had his lineup "just about set" for the opening contest. He isn't sure who will start in the goal, and two different players may alternate between a forward and inside position.

"I think we are capable of playing some very good soccer," the coach said. "In fact, I think we have a better team than we had last year. We're stronger at just about every position. Our defense is better, and our front line is as good or better than it was last season."

In 1960, the Carolina booters finished with an 8-3 overall record, and were third in the ACC.

Allen has a lot of respect for his opponent of today. He says that the Maroons, who operate in the Mason-Dixon Conference, play a very good brand of soccer. The Roanoke coach is Elwood Fox.

Peter Blake will be at center forward, the principal offensive position, when the Tar Heels take the field today. Blake, a sophomore, was made the offensive star in the warmup tilts played last week.

Kingman Brown, a senior, will start at right wing, with Bill Shettle at inside right. Either George Beam or George Kendrick will open at inside left, and the one that isn't there will be at halfback.

Herman Prakke will be at right wing, and either Bill Sidbury or Howard Gordon will be at the other halfback.

Fullback may be a problem spot because of injuries to two starters. But these two, Bill Snyder and Bob Jones, are expected to be ready to go by gametime. Captain Dick Bordogna is a sure starter at the other fullback position.

Utility man Bob Kepner may not start, but should see a lot of action at either halfback or fullback, according to Allen.

The goalie's job may see split duty between Tom Griffith, a senior, and Larry Steele, a sophomore. "Griffith has shown that he is capable of handling the job," Allen commented. "He has improved tremendously over last season."

Steele was the sensation of the early season last year. He didn't allow a single goal for several games.

"I'm looking for a successful season, and I don't think the fellows will let me down,' the coach intimated. "They have shown a lot of team spirit and hustle and desire, even more than we had last year."

Of the two practice game losses, Allen said that his team was better than either of the teams they lost to, Fort Bragg and Little Creek military bases. "If our offense had been together, we could have beaten either of them," he commented.

On Saturday, the Tar Heels travel to Annapolis, Md., to battle a strong Navy team. After that, they play home contests with Washington & Lee and West Chester before starting conference play at N. C. State.

Kingman Brown, a senior letterman, will be starting at right wing today at 3 p.m. when the Carolina soccer team opens their season against Roanoke on Fetzer Field.

'Today's Revolutions' Topic Of Next Carolina Symposium

Dr. Crane Brinton of Harvard University and Sen. Gale McGee of Wyoming are two of the several speakers who will discuss "Today's Revolutions" at the April 1-5, 1962, Carolina Symposium, according to Joe Oppenheimer, chairman of the Symposium's executive committee.

Dr. Brinton, co-author of several required reading textbooks in UNC's "Modern Civilization" course", will begin the series April 1 with a discussion of "The Concept of Revolution."

Sen. McGee, an educator and presently the youngest Senior Senator in Congress, will speak April 3 on "Political Revolutions."

The Symposium will feature several other nationally-known figures, to be announced later. Each will discuss some aspect of current social, political, economic, technological, literary and artistic "revolutions."

In addition, each speaker will be requested to remain on campus the day following his lecture to participate with students in classroom discussions and afternoon seminars.

Chairman Oppenheimer met with the heads of the dorms, fraternities and sororities last week, to discuss an idea for informal discussions between the various living units to prepare the campus for Symposium week. He said the idea was favorably received by those present, including Bill Sullivan, president of I.F.C.; Jim Gaulden, president of I.D.C.; Janice Haley, president of the Pan-Hellenic Council; and Pam Parker, Women's Resident Council.

Oppenheimer said the program, to start this fall, will consist of informal discussions among students from fraternities, sororities and dorms.

The nature of the discussions between two or more living units at a time will be determined by the students who attend them. Faculty members will be available to assist in leading the discussions.

UNC Student Said Improved

Jerry Knight, 21-year-old UNC student injured Sunday when he fell 40 feet into rocky Linville Gorge in western North Carolina, was reported still in fair condition but improved at N. C. Memorial Hospital last night.

Knight, of Chapel Hill, was brought out of the gorge late Sunday by rescuers who clambered for hours over the mountainous terrain. He was given emergency treatment at a nearby Spruce Pine hospital, then transferred by ambulance to Memorial Hospital here in Chapel Hill.

Knight, admitted to the hospital's intensive care unit, suffered possible skull and spine fractures and multiple scrapes and bruises, authorities said.

Louise Lamont, Playmakers' Lead, Is Actress And Cook

By Gordon Clark

Louise Lamont is a rare combination — top-notch actress and skillful homemaker.

How does she do it? "If you don't get the leading role, go home and bake a cake," she says with a smile.

But the talented actress is seldom caught in this situation. The Chapel Hill resident will appear as Mrs. Levi in The Carolina Playmakers 1961 tour production of "The Matchmaker," opening in the Playmakers Theatre here Oct. 11 for a five-night run. The role was played in the motion picture version of Thornton Wilder's farce-comedy by Shirley Booth. Ruth Gordon played the role in the hit Broadway production.

Born in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Mrs. Lamont (the wife of manufacturing representative John Lamont) has acted professionally throughout the United States and Canada. Her performances include "Criminal at Large" and "Good News" opposite Cameron Mitchell, "Everywhere I Roam" in New York, and "Her Cardboard Lover" with Tallulah Bankhead.

National Tours

Mrs. Lamont played in national tour productions of "Stage Door," "You Can't Take It With You" and "George Washington Slept Here." She had previously worked with The Carolina Playmakers as Queen Gertrude in "Hamlet," the production in which the Playmakers' founder, Frederick Koch, played Hamlet.

Then came New York, seven years of acting in stock and the national tours prior to returning to Chapel Hill to live. Why didn't she remain in New York?

"There are old people still hanging on in New York waiting for that one part. With no home, no other life, they become nothing but shells. I always said I'd never be like that."

She compares her homemaking to the theatre. "Both are creative, both are an effort to make something beautiful. You can combine domesticity and art."

Likes Gardening

Among her favorite activities are gardening, making dried flower arrangements and jewelry at her Laurel Hill Road home.

Upon her return here from New York, she found time to finish work on her degree in drama at the University and set up the Lamont School of Drama for children.

"There was no children's theatre when I came here," she said, "and theatre can be a great help in a child's development."

She also helped organize a religious drama group called The Pulpit Players, teaches in The Carolina Playmakers summer program for high school drama students and serves as a regular judge and critic at the Carolina Dramatic Association's state festival every spring.

"Rain"

She has performed with the group as Sadie Thompson in "Rain," Regina Giddens in "The Little Foxes," Mama in "I Remember Mama," title roles in "Lysystrata," "Mrs. McThing" and her most recent success, "The Curious Savage," this past summer.

Of her performance as Mrs. Savage, reviewer Joe Nagelschmidt said: "Her every moment onstage, her every line, her every heavy-lidded, foxy glance, her every all-knowing rejoinder spell Lamont at her best. She makes golden everything she says and does . . ."

"I guess I'll go on acting when I can, as long as I can, for the pure enjoyment of it," she says. "But it won't get in the way of my homemaking. I'll be a woman and an actress."

Tour N.C.

Mrs. Lamont will tour cities throughout North Carolina and as far south as Augusta, Ga., following "The Matchmaker." The Playmakers carry the play to Goldsboro, Oct. 16; Buies Creek, Oct. 17; Wilmington, Oct. 18; Wilson, Oct. 19; Statesville, Oct. 20 and Augusta, Oct. 21.

Tickets for the Chapel Hill run are on sale at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall (next to the Scuttlebutt) and at Ledbetter-Pickard .

Casualties High In Viet Nam

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The State Department said Tuesday that the Communists' "mounting campaign of terror and guerrilla warfare" in South Viet Nam is claiming 1,500 lives every month.

The toll of South Vietnamese was cited as part of a U. S. effort to show that this Southeast Asian crisis has been growing steadily while the world's eyes were focused on Berlin.

The situation is such that the United States announced Monday that it is pressing ahead with "urgent measures" to bolster the defense of South Viet Nam against the Communist guerrilla attacks.

Bomb Banners Can't Speak

MOSCOW — A band of Western "peace marchers," including 13 Americans, walked into Moscow Tuesday to complete a trek that began in San Francisco 10 months ago. But the marchers were forbidden to make any disarmament speeches in Red Square.

The 31 marchers, some dressed in blue jeans, baggy sweaters and tennis shoes, were halted by Soviet officials 100 yards short of the Lenin-Stalin tomb in Moscow's main square.

The leaders obviously were upset by the ban. Eight of the Americans had trampled 8,000 miles across six countries on two continents to carry their message to the Russian people.

"Legalized Terror" In Cuba?

WASHINGTON — Cuban exile leader Jose Miro Cardona told the Inter-American Human Rights Commission Tuesday that Fidel Castro has "legalized terror" in Cuba. He asked the commission to intercede.

He made the plea during an hour-long private session with the human rights group at the Pan American union here.

Production Speeded-Up

WASHINGTON—Senate military investigators called Tuesday for a speedup and expansion in production of the M-14 Army rifle, only recently issued to U. S. troops in Berlin after years of delays.

The Senate preparedness subcommittee charged that for 16 years the M-14 fully-automatic rifle project has been "marked by a continuing absence of a sense of urgency and emphasis."

International Situation Looking Better

WASHINGTON — Commerce Secretary Luther H. Hodges said Tuesday that because the international situation "looks a little better" he is hopeful that consumers will begin to spend more freely.

Hodges told a news conference that although most other measures of business activity have been rising, consumers have been "holding back" and saving a large part of their incomes.

US Helicopter Lift Rescues 5 Germans

BERLIN (UPI) — A U.S. Army helicopter flew five East German refugees over the Iron Curtain border to West Berlin Friday from the barbed-wire ringed Western anclave of Steinstuecken one mile inside East Germany.

The helicopter lift, second such flight in a week, came as Communists police fired bursts from their automatic pistols at other refugees who continued to brave death to flee to West Berlin.

In Goettingen, police disclosed that a group of 55 East Germans—including an 89-year-old woman, 23 children and an expectant mother—fled in one group last night to Western Germany.

The group, representing one-tenth of the residents of Boesseck-Endorf, bundled their belongings into a coveerd farm wagon, muffled the horses' hooves with rags, and rolled quietly across the border. The East Germans fled after hearing reports that the Communists planned to destroy or oust all inhabitants from the village because it lay too near West Germany.

Lifted Refugees Out

The five airlifted East Germans had entered the Steinstuecken enclave when they saw signs in the village saying the territory was under American jurisdiction. They thought they were in West Berlin.

After a tense day of waiting, the American helicopter lifted out the refugees to Berlin. A U.S. Army Berlin announcement said: "During a routine visit, a Berlin command helicopter lifted five individuals from Steinstuecken to another part of the American sector of Berlin today."

Steinstuecken residents, however, identified them as refugees.

Dramatique Tryouts Held

Forecast for the Petite Dramatique's first production, "The Rainmaker" may be "undercast" if more students don't try out.

Director Kermit Ewing will hold tryouts tonight from 7-9 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge No. 3 in GM. He is particularly looking for H. C., the father of the Curry family and his elder son, Nash.

Callbacks for the six male and one female parts will then be posted and final tryouts held.

No previous experience is necessary. Approximately 20 persons have already tried out for the romantic comedy by N. Richard Nash which takes place in the midwest in the middle of the last decade.

UAW Strikes On Ford Plants Across Nation

DETROIT (UPI)—The auto industry's second major strike in less than a month shut down Ford Motor Co. Tuesday when the United Auto Workers Union called 120,000 members off their jobs at 88 plants across the nation.

UAW President Walter P. Reuther said the company and union reached accord on a national economic agreement four hours before a 11 a.m. EDT, strike deadline but that "there wasn't time to work out a full agreement" on non-economic issues by the deadline.

Malcolm L. Denise, Ford vice president, said this first company-wide strike against Ford in 20 years was "unnecessary . . . not over economic issues" and would cost hourly paid employes about $2.6 million a day in lost wages.

Reuther emerged from an around-the-clock bargaining session at 11:04 a.m. EDT, to announce the strike was on. He said negotiations were being recessed until 11 a.m. EDT, Wednesday because the bargainers on both sides were exhausted.

Might Make Progress

"We feel that if we come back with clear minds, we might be able to make meaningful progress" toward a quick end to the strike, he said.

General Motors was plagued by strikes during much of September with more than 100 plants closed and a quarter of a million workers idled. The last of the walkouts at GM did not end until eight days ago.

The strike action against GM also was in the non-economic area. Agreement was reached on Sept. 6 between the largest of the carmakers and the UAW on a three-year economic package, but then the union authorized walkouts five days later over unresolved local contract issues.

Reuther said the strike against Ford was called over such non-economic matters as production standards, outside contracting of work the union wants its members to do and union charges that lower-paid unskilled workers were being assigned to do the work of higher-paid skilled employes.

Will Draw Benefits

The union built up a $42 million strike fund in advance of this year's negotiations with the auto companies.

Last month's strikes against General Motors ate up about $5 million of this.

Ford workers would not begin drawing strike benefits until the second week of a strike.

In addition to Ford, the UAW still must work out a new contract with Chrysler Corp., last of the industry's big three, and with Studebaker-Packard Corp.

Girls To Have Later Hours For Concert

Coed hours have been extended to 1:30 a.m. Friday for the University Entertainment Committee's first concert of the year.

Featuring the Four Aces, Alan Black and Richiardi, the concert will be held at 4 and 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Also Friday night will be an IDC-sponsored dance from 9-1 p.m. at the American Legion Hut. Music will be furnished by the Duke Ambassadors.

A bus will leave Y-Court after the Memorial Hall concert and before the dance and will return to the campus afterwards.

IFC To Meet On Rules For Coed Visiting

The IFC will participate in a conference to adopt an acceptable visiting agreement Tuesday.

President Bill Sullivan , vice-president Billy Riley and chairman of the IFC Court Bill Farrell will join with representatives from the Pan - Hellenic Council, Woman's Residence Council, the Dean of Women's Office and Dean William Long to revise the present short-term agreement.

Dean Long spoke to the IFC Monday night and told them that the temporary (valid until November 1) visiting agreement signed by Sullivan was not acceptable to the administration. He mentioned that there was a discrepancy between coed and "import" visiting hours as well as an inadequate ruling on chaperones.

The present agreement has eliminated the unenforceable drinking clause (no alcohol consumed in front of women) but some method of supervision of house functions will be demanded by the faculty.

Dean Long asserted his belief in the necessity of fraternities and said that the IFC and the administration must work hand-in-hand to see that it is perpetuated.

Other Business

It was announced by Dean Long that ZBT will soon break ground for their new fraternity house by Finley Golf Course.

There will be a meeting of the entire membership of all the fraternity houses on October 25 to discuss the new visiting agreement and other rules which the IFC wishes to make explicitly clear for all fraternity men.

A Beer And A Cry

A letter which appeared in yesterday's letters column disagreed with our stand against the House Committee on Un-American activities.

The writer of the letter, Bob Somers, suggested that opponents of HUAC "have a beer and a good cry and forget it."

Somers based his argument on the points that the Supreme Court and Congress agree that HUAC should continue, despite the opposition to it.

Although the Supreme Court has upheld in broad terms the investigating power of HUAC, this is far from being the complete picture. Somers seems to have conveniently forgotten details of the February 27 decision of the Supreme Court which supported HUAC by a bare margin, 5-4.

The Court was bitterly divided on the decision to affirm the contempt convictions of two critics of HUAC who refused to testify about possible Communist affiliations. They were Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles and Carl Braden of Louisville, Ky.

* * *

Of the four dissenters, the most vehement was justice Hugo Black, who accused the majority of following "a constitutional doctrine that is steadily sacrificing individual control."

"It is already past the time," Black said, "when people who recognize and cherish the life-giving and life-preserving qualities of the freedoms protected by the Bill of Rights can afford to sit complacently by while those freedoms are being destroyed by sophistry and dialectics."

Justice Black was joined in dissent by Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justice William O. Douglas in one case and by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. in the other.

* * *

Justice Black dissented on constitutional grounds and said that the result of the committee's investigations of their critics would be to intimidate all who disagreed with it and to perpetuate its own power.

We quote here from Black's dissent:

There are not many people in our society who will have the courage to speak out against such a formidable opponent.

If the present trend continues, this already small number will necessarily dwindle as their ranks are thinned by the jails.

Government by consent will disappear to be replaced by government by intimidation because some people are afraid that this country cannot survive unless Congress has the power to set aside the freedoms of the First Amendment at will.

Justice Brennan in his dissent in the case of Wilkinson added to the chorus of voices which oppose HUAC's policy of "exposure."

* * *

"I also dissent because on these facts the interence is inescapable that the dominant purpose . . . was not to gather information in aid of law-making or law-evaluation but rather to harass the petitioner and expose him for the sake of exposure."

The above comments are but a few of those voiced by the dissenting justices on the question of HUAC's investigating power. This is hardly the kind of support that the Supreme Court gives to the committee.

Somers also mentions that Congress has upheld the investigative right of HUAC. It might be pointed out that Congress also supported Senator Joe McCarthy's Permanent Subcommittee. Only one man, Senator William Fulbright of Arkansas voted against appropriating $214,000 to the committee in February of 1954. Does this mean that McCarthy was right? History would argue otherwise.

* * *

The situation is not, as Somers suggests in his letter, one in which only a few insignificant individuals oppose a body which has the undying support of the rest of the country.

Opposition to the committee has been growing, and it will probably continue to grow. President Franklin D. Roosevelt said of its activities, "It is sordid—flagrantly unfair—and un-American."

President Truman called it "The most un-American thing in America" in 1959.

* * *

During the recent presidential campaign, President Kennedy said, "The legislative investigations, designed and often exercised for the achievement of high ends, has too frequently been used by the Nation and the State as a means for effecting the disgrace of private persons."

The above three remarks are recorded by Frank Donner in his documented work, "The Un-Americans."

Of course, the more opposition that the committee meets, the more individuals it has at which to aim its "investigatoins"—investigations which are more nearly trials than anything else.

The committee need only have "reason to believe" that a person is a Communist or that he might be participating in some activity to which the Communists are partial in order to start the inquisitorial gears meshing. These are broad enough terms to allow the committee to bring almost anyone desired under its thumb for "exposure."

In response to Somers' suggestion that we "have a beer and a cry and forget it," we can only answer that we might have the beer and will probably do some crying about the situation.

But we don't intend to forget it.

There's A Fog Round Liberalism

Clyde Wilson, to his everlasting credit, has at last broken the ice and prompted his fellow conservatives to speak out. His column in the September 29 Tar Heel shows that there are those who have the courage to go against the tide; the trouble is that this tide seems overwhelming.

Last summer I asked a friend of mine, a highly intelligent physics major, which he would rather live under, Communism or Facism.

"Communism," he replied instantly.

I was startled, not by the answer—which certainly reflects the majority view here—but rather by the speed with which it was given. I felt the question was worthy of some thought.

"Why do you prefer Communism?"

"It's a more liberal philosophy," he said.

Months later, he admitted that he didn't know what he had meant by its being "a more liberal philosophy." Neither do I, at this point.

* * *

NOWADAYS THE TERM "liberal" has almost universal application. It is applied to an easy test, to a desirable candidate, to a broadminded viewpoint—even apparently, in a relative sense, to the Soviet world movement. Outsiders begin to wonder just what liberalism is. Maybe it's time for the insiders to tell us; we haven't found out by asking them.

The opinion quoted above, incidentally, is typical of the group we might label as the amateur liberals. There are a few professionals, who flaunt a quiet disdain for any differing views. Consider the fanatical hatred of Senator Barry Goldwater. The fashion here is to despise Goldwater's views in advance. If Goldwater likes something, it stinks; what it is makes no difference.

* * *

ONCE I SAT ARGUING with some all-missile-strategy fans on the need for the B-70 Valkyrie bomber. To support the contention that we need this plane, I adduced the views of General Thomas Power, General Curtis LeMay, General Thomas White, Senator Stuart Symington, Clair Engle. These names were O. K. with the all-missile clan. But as I mentioned Senator Goldwater, screams of anguish resounded.

This dominated the rest of the argument. Goldwater was a reactionary; they wanted no part of him. It makes no difference that he is a jet flier, and acknowledged expert on aeronautics, and a brigadier general in the U.S. Air Force Reserve. He still doesn't rate.

* * *

APPARENTLY THE reasoning goes as follows:

(1) Goldwater has reactionary political views;

(2) These views are worthless.

(3) He also has views on the B-70;

(4) Ergo, these views are also worthless.

The irony of it is that these same people would—and should—listen with interest to the opinions of Soviet Defense Minister Rodion Malinovsky, a dedicated enemy of the United States.

If liberalism holds that a conservative-minded man is politically unrealistic, that's all right with me. But if, on the same grounds, it disqualifies his military judgment, then I say it looks, and smells rather like spinach.

What happened to Oxford University's student magazine could never happen at Carolina.

The magazine started a practice to review faculty lectures in the same critical way that books and movies are reviewed. But the professors, some of whom received "bad reviews," censored the next issue of the magazine by deleting the lecture reviews.

This could not happn at Carolina because students find all their professors are dynamic, dedicated men, who constantly give stimulating lectures.

What is the profound reason that a college education is not three and a half years, or five or six, but four years?

Well, it's like this. Harvard adopted a four year course in 1636 (324 years ago); Harvard adopted it from Oxford and Cambridge; they had it because Oxford, when it started in the 13th century, adopted it. Oxford adopted it because English parents, who had sent their children to study informally in Paris, thought that four years was a reasonable length of time to stay away from home.

In this careful, studied, scientific fashion, we have concluded that four years constitutes a complete college education.

* * *

Those who loudly laud a liberal arts education might do well to ponder the following facts:

Russia graduated 117,000 diploma engineers last year, while the U.S. graduated 38,000; the Soviets expect to graduate 145,000 by 1965, while the U. S. will remain at its present level for at least the next five years. Both countries started the decade with about one million college-level technically trained people.

It doesn't take a genius to project where the U. S. wil be in ten years, unless . . .

Russian Pilots Well-Treated

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Russian airlines pilots are well-trained, well treated, well-regulated and compartively well-paid, according to an American aviation expert.

Clarence N. Suyen, president of the Air Line Pilots Association (ALPA), who recently was given a rare chance to inspect the Soviet Union's commercial aviation setup, said Russian pilots "enjoy a position in society comparable to scientists, successful literary figures . . . and the heads of large trade unions."

Suyen flew with the Soviet pilots on 3,000 miles of regularly scheduled trips, visited them in their homes and interviewed them at airports. His special report on Soviet civil aviation appears in the current issue of the ALPA monthly magazine, "Air Line Pilot."

SUYEN SAID IT was impossible to determine how many airline pilots work for the single Russian state airline, Aeroflot. He explained that Aeroflot is not just an air carrier but a "holding company" which controls all Rusian civil aviation from international flights to crop dusting, from air traffic control to airport passenger facilities.

His report contained these little-known facts about Russion commercial avaiation.

—Pilot medical standards appear similar to ours but Russian crews are given a brief medical examination before EVERY flight.

—The Soviet Union plans to move all intercity passengers by air within a few years but all cargo by truck or rail. There are no plans to match the expected U. S. cargo boom.

—A TYPICAL Aeroflot international jetliner pilot makes about $745 a month, gets 60 days subsidized vacation annually, enjoys free or very low cost medical care and never has to pay more than 3½ per cent of his annual income for housing, including utilities.

A U. S. international jet pilot gets about $2,500 a month and about 25 days vacation annually. The Russian salary, however, still is four times that of the average worker's and as much as three times what a Soviet doctor makes.

—The Russians have an airborne anti-collision device something with which the United States still is experimenting on some planes.

It is integrated into the storm-warning radar system but Suyen was unable to see enough of it to judge its effectiveness.

—RUSSIAN AIRLINERS operate under instrument flight rules positive control from the ground on trips of more than 200 miles; navigation aids are roughly similar to ours and the larger airports have excellent runway lighting.

Aerflot's schedules generally ignore public demand, convenience and travel habits. They are spread throughout the day instead on concentrating on peak periods as in the United States.

—Russian airliners have excellent load factors. They average at least 75 per cent full and during the summer months run between 90 and 100 per cent.

—Most flight crews, including the jets, contain only two pilots. U. S. jets require three.

Liberals Promise Too Much?

I strongly disagree with your view on campus conservatism, i.e., it is almost dormant if not dead. It is true that conservatism is relatively quiet at Carolina, but there is a reason for this; the liberal promises everybody everything they want and further promises to do it right away. This rouses the rabble to raucous verbal support.

This is like promising a group of pre-school children all the cake, candy and ice cream they could eat for life without having to do anything at all for it.

* * *

THE CONSERVATIVE, on the other hand, tries to do what is best for the nation as a whole and not just the lazy.

He is a careful thinker and planner, trying to foresee the consequences of his actions, not just saying "let's do it now and let whoever follows us straighten out any mess we make."

He tries to find ways to lighten the burden of the taxpayer by means which will not hurt the financial or security position of the nation, meaning in current usage "the government."

This is the way it should be. Why should some be taxed in commodities the government is producing for the general use of others, tax free?

* * *

I REFER specifically to the Tennessee Valley Authority power system. Power from private companies, which are taxed, costs three times as much as power from TVA dams. The taxes we pay are paying for power in that area, because the government is losing money on the deal.

I invite any comment or criticism on this or other points.

For Entertainment

Fri. May Be 1st & The Last

This Friday may be the first and last chance for UNC as a whole to have big-name entertainment at small-time prices.

The matter in question was conceived by the University Entertainment Committee. This committee, founded last year, is a first attempt to establish a more unified social life on this campus.

The committee has lined up top-rated talent for its first show this Friday. It has spent a good deal of time and effort in this venture.

This concert presents an excellent opportunity to those students who are really interested in a socially unified campus and who are not simply paying lip service to it.

Unfortunately, the nature of the committee is such that it must succeed a this time or not at all. If the Four Aces program which the group is presenting does not receive an active support from the students—all the students—the committee is likely to be discouraged. More pertinent, it is likely to get its funds cut off by the student government.

The weekend planned by the committee is similar to the "Joe College" weekend at Duke. This type of affair has been widely accepted at Wake Forest, Georgia Tech, and many other colleges in the area.

It has been so well received because it is basically a good idea—to make good entertainment available to all of the members of a school. It lends an air of unity to a college which is becoming increasingly disunified with its increasing enrollment.

More important, it will be a hell of a lot of fun.

In short, this committee has provided the means for both a socially unified campus and a good time. It must succeed with its first show if it succeeds at all.

So instead of just saying that this is a good thing, why not do something about it? Mainly, why not buy a ticket?

Russian Literature

Can U.S. People Be Seduced?

The other day, Rep. Ralph Scott of Danbury rose in the House to protest the use of the U. S. mails for pieces of literature which frankly originate in the propaganda mills of Moscow. He had in mind "The Soviet Stand on Germany . . . With A Letter To The American People From Nikita S. Khrushchev," printed by Crosscurrents Press of 156 Fifth Ave., New York.

The argument seems, at first glance, powerful: The Russians, rejecting the Western notion of a free press, never would allow American books and pamphlets to penetrate to their people—so why should we open the channels of a free society to circulate their own?

One may disagree here; but two questions ought to be asked:

Should the traditions and practices of this country be geared to every move the Communists make, so that they may play upon our nerves and reflexes as if on a harp plucked at a distance of thousands of miles? Are every stupity and suppression in Moscow to be reciprocated in Washington? Self-confidence is a powerful counter. Certainly one of the strongest decisions the U. S. has made bared Project Mercury to the hazardous glare of publicity, for all the world to witness its failures as well as its successes. Here is something the Byzantine darkness of the Kremlin would never permit.

Secondly, are Americans really so ill-informed about the facts of international life that they are apt to be seduced in significant numbers by mere Russian bombast? If they are not, as I believe, then it is quite condescending for self-styled wise persons to set themselves up as censors of what is "dangerous" for us of the hoi polloi, is it not?

Certainly if the censors are right and we are so mentally flabby as to be prone before Soviet propaganda, we are in pretty bad shape.

Senate Subcommittee Hits Electronic Waste

By WILLIAM THEIS

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A Senate subcommittee said Tuesday that taxpayers may be losing $200 million a year in "unwitting, needless duplication of effort" in electronics research and development because of a shocking weakness in information services.

The cost represents about one-tenth of federally supported efforts in the electronics field, a Senate government operations subcommittee reported.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., subcommittee chairman, called for a "top policy mandate" from the White House level for "effective and efficient information management."

Humphrey reported that information services "are often so weak or are presumed so weak that innumerable scientists and engineers state that it takes less time to perform research than it takes to try find out of the research has already been performed."

Reflects Shocking Circumstances

The senator said "this attitude reflects a shocking set of circumstances."

He added: "The overall fact is that the federal government today has no coordinated program of science information in electronics or, for that matter, in virtually any other scientific area."

The executive branch, he said, has a hodpodge of services scattered throughout a number of agencies.

Humphrey said electronics may

SEN. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY

be regarded as "the central nervous system of the security of the United States and the free world".

"As a deterence key," he said it provides the means by which:

"—The activities of a potential enemy can be kept under surveillance.

Criticized Information Handling

"—Indications of aggression may be instantaneously flashed to strategic centers.

"—Counter-action may be initiated and firepower pinpointed against aggression."

The report criticized the handling of information by both the Defense Department and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Space science, it said, "has been slowed by the absence of a reliable system for dissimination contract data."

Ultimately, the report said, there "should emerge a national network of electronic information centers, coordinated with a larger network covering all scientific and technical information."

UNC Students Miss Football For Paint Job

Two Carolina students who police said were caught in the act of painting "UNC" on various parts of the State College campus in Raleigh last Friday night, were given a strange sentence in court the next day—the day of the State-UNC football game.

City Court Judge Pretlow Windborne, borrowing from Gilbert and Sullivan, made the punishment fit the crime. He sentenced them to not attend the State-Carolina football game and to assist maintenance men in removing their daubings.

Monogramming Building

The students, Robert Newman and Michael Albright, both 20, were nabbed by State's campus security police while monogramming the Leazer building on the State campus.

Arrested on two warrants for property damage, the pair were given a 30-day sentence, suspended providing they pay $30 for use by State College.

Their sentence on the other warrant was to not attend the game and to help the maintenance crews remove the bright blue "UNC's" from the buildings, the Memorial Bell Tower and Riddick Stadium.

Queen Makes Jones Lord; Margaret Expecting Baby

By MARGARET SAVILLE

LONDON (UPI)—The Queen Tuesday made her commner brother-in-law, Anthony Armstrong-Jones, a nobleman in time to give an automatic title to the child Princess Margaret is expecting soon.

Buckingham Palace announced that Margaret's husband will henceforth be known as Viscount Linley and the Earl of Snowdon. The one-time commoner photographer may now be addressed as either Lord Snowdon or "My Lord."

His wife will be called her royal highness the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon.

Expecting First Child

Princess Margaret is expecting her first child late this month or early in November. If it is a boy he will automatically become Viscount Linley. A daughter will be known as Lady Armstrong—Jones.

Tuesday's action by Queen Elizabeth II removed the slight possibility that an untitled person might succeed to the throne.

The first child of Tony and Margaret will be fifth in line of succession to the throne behind the Queen's three children—Prince Charles, Prince Andrew and Princess Anne—and Margaret herself.

Although taking title from the father, children of Tony and Margaret technically will remain commoners in the sense that they will not be "royal"—since their father was not royal.

Queen Confers Titles

Tuesday's brief palace announcement said:

"The Queen has been pleased to confer on Mr. Antony Armstrong-Jones the dignity of an earldom of the United Kingdom. His styles and titles will be Viscount Linley and Earl of Snowdon."

No money or lands come automatically with the title.

Armstrong-Jones will be entitled by right to sit in the House of Lords but it would be unprecedented if he exercised the right and actually took his seat.

Both the princess and her husband are 31. A palace spokesman said Armstrong-Jones, when offered the earldom, accepted it "with great pleasure."

Police believed an armored plated shield Miss Dennis wore over her abdomen during the act slipped just before the bullet was fired.

Memphis Integrates Under Heavy Police

By Duren Cheek

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — The "surprise" desegregation of four elementary schools in this river metropolis deep in the cotton country was carried out without incident Tuesday under a heavy police guard.

Thirteen Negro children, all first graders, were accepted with adult calm by their diminutive white classmates, who had been thoroughly briefed in advance by their teachers.

Only a few parents outwardly objected when news was released that the four schools — Gordon, Springdale, Rozelle and Bruce—had been desegregated.

Three white mothers turned up at Rozelle and withdrew six children. Eight other white pupils were withdrawn from Springdale school and three girls were taken out of Gordon.

The break with the century-old custom of school segregation in this city of a half-million was carried out under Tennessee's pupil placement plan.

Details Kept Secret

Although the decision to integrate classrooms had been long known, the date and details of the "Memphis desegregation plan" was kept a secret until early Tuesday.

Newsmen were permitted to talk to the Negroes and their parents briefly after they left their cars and began the walk.

The children included: At Gordon—Pamela Mayeu, Alvin Freeman, and twin sisters Shela and Sharone Malone; at Springdale—Deborah Ann Holt and Jacqueline Moore; at Rozelle—E. C. Freeman, Clarence Williams, Lean-Drew Wiggins, and Joyce Ann Bell; and at Bruce—Michael Willis, Dwania Kyles and Harry Williams.

The Negro children were taken to the principal's office at the four schools about 8:35 a.m. where they were given a "briefing" and taken to their classrooms about half an hour later.

The 13 Negroes were admitted to the four white schools after they appealed their assignments to Negro schools under Tennessee's pupil placement law.

Fifty-Three Applied

Fifty-three Negroes applied for admission to all-white schools at the beginning of the fall term. The school board rejected all 53 applicants and 42 appealed.

A special three-man committee was appointed to hear the appeals. This committee sent social workers to the homes of the Negro children to learn something of their family background and give the children intelligence tests to determine if they would "fit" into the schools for which they applied.

World Series Opens Between Yanks, Cincy

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

72 Pct. Say NY To Win But Cincy Is Choice

By Ed Dupree

Campus prognasticators are 72 per cent in favor of a New York Yankee victory in the 1961 World Series, but sentiment is with the underdog Cincinnatti Reds, winners of their first National League pennant since 1940.

Eighteen of the 25 interviewees chose the Yanks to emerge victorious and ten of th e picked the Bronx Bombers to win in six games. Only three picked the New Yorkers to sweep the series in four games.

Four chose the Redlegs to pin the Yankees in seven games, while three picked them in six. None of the campus "swamis" went out on a limb by picking the National Leaguers in four or five games.

Sentiment is with the Reds, but not by a wide majority. Thirteen are hoping to see the Ohioans defeat the hard-hitting Yanks, 11 are siding with the American Leaguers, and one is partisan. A coed, the 26th interviewee, couldn't name the Yankees' opponents in today's contest.

Jay Stultz picked the Yanks because "You just can't beat them." Harold Norris based his choice on the Yanks' better pitching, better hitting and better fielding. Nile Dixon's "Mantle and Maris, what else" was a popular reason. John Kelly says that "Cincy can't beat the Yanks but once."

Professor Joe Morrison, School of Journalism, picks the American League champs, but thinks Cincy's pitching will extend the series to six games. Ted Garrett chose the Yanks in six games and thinks Jim O'Toole and Bob Purkey should win Cincinnati's two games.

Mike Morris picks the underdog Reds, because "they're the best team in a superior league." Bryon Seagraves likes the Redlegs because "they have the best pitching, Frank Robinson, and Vada Pinson." One forecaster picked the Reds to win in six games because he was a "Yankee-hater."

Campus TV rooms will be crowded with these and other fans and prognasticators for the next week. Whatever the outcome the Yanks and Reds should provide the fans with plenty of thrills. The Bombers will be seeking to redeem themselves for the 1960 loss to Pittsburgh and the Redlegs will be looking back to 1940 when the Yanks spilled them in four straight games to take the World's Baseball championship.

Mantle Still A Question; Ford, O'Toole Hurl Today

By OSCAR FRALEY

NEW YORK (UPI)—Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees still was a question mark Tuesday night on the eve of the opening of the World Series as the underdog Cincinnati Reds counted on pitching to silence the most thunderous home run attack in baseball history.

Fate conspired with the Reds who are 9-5 second choices in the opener at 1 p.m. EDT. Wednesday, when lefty Whitey Ford, a 25-game winner, goes to the mound against the Reds' Jim O'Toole, winner of 19 games this season.

Because Mantle, weak and seven pounds under weight after a bout with virus and the lancing of a still draining abscess on his right hip, announced after a risky job in the rain that while he was "encouraged" he wouldn't start in the opener "if I feel like I do now."

The weather, with rain expected to "continue into Wednesday," thus became more and more of a factor.

Would Help Yanks

A postponement would give Mantle an extra day of recuperation and possibly permit him to rejoin his mates who, led by Roger Maris with 61, this season broke all home run records with a one-club total of 240.

The Reds, who hit only 158 in comparison and lack the World Series experience of the perennial American League champions, had to be hoping they could make a fast getaway while Mantle was inoperative.

This despite the fact manager Freddie Hutchinson of the Reds, revealing that he had received information from the Pittsburgh Pirates on how they defeated the Yankees in last year's Series, felt his pitchers could handle Mantle, Maris and Company.

"The way to stop good hitting," he said, "is with good pitching."

Could Use Rest

A postponement also would provide another healing day for Red catcher Darrell Kohnson, who suffered a strained left side in a game against Pittsburgh last Friday. So, Hutchinson opened publicly, a postponement wouldn't bother him, either.

So "There's no nervousness on this club," he insisted.

Despite the possible absence of Mantle from the lineup, which would shift Maris to center field and cause manager Ralph Houk to use Hector Lopez in right, the Yankee manager asserted after a day in which both teams went over scouting reports on their rivals that he was against a postponement.

"Let's get this thing started," he said.

Houk, who won the pennant in his freshman year as manager after succeeding the fired Casey Stengel, admitted he had been "deeply concerned" that Mantle might miss the entire series.

Intramural Results

Competition in the fraternity white division got off to a slow start Monday afternoon, with three forfeits out of the six scheduled games. Two ATO white teams, the Eagles and the Colts, both picked up victories via the forfeit as did Zeta Psi. PiKA forfeited to the Eagles, TEP to the Colts, and Pi Lamb to Zeta Psi.

In the three games played, the Delta Sig Rogues blanked the Beta Eagles, 12-0, on two TD's by Doug Page, while Sigma Nu shutout the Phi Delts, 8-0. Calvin Jones scored the only TD of the game, with a safety bringing the other two points. The DKE Dogs chewed up Chi Psi, 35-0, with two touchdowns apiece from Ben Willis and Hutchinson. Bill Boardman also got a TD while Hunton Tiffany, Tim McCoy and Rumsey notched extra

Prakke, Brown Get Scores In 2-0 Win

The North Carolina soccer team kept the pressure on little Roanoke for a long time here yesterday before squeezing out a 2-0 victory over the plucky Maroons.

The Tar Heels, who took a lot of good shots but weren't lucky enough to have most of them go in, were the offensive team all the way. But it wasn't until 18 minutes had passed in the second quarter that left wing Herman Prakke kicked in the first goal.

Many of the Carolina shots just missed the goal, or were right into the hands of Roanoke goalie Bill Briener, who had 22 saves for his afternoon's work.

With 3:50 left in the game, right wing Kingman Brown booted a short shot from the right of the goal by Briener for the final score.

Despite the fact that he didn't score, center forward Pete Blake was the leading offensive performer for Coach Marvin Allen. Blake, performing in his first regular season game as a sophomore, amazed the small Fetzer Field crowd with his fine ball handling and leadership play.

Co-Captain Dick Bordogna, the left fullback, was a defensive leader, coming up with some long, important kicks in tight situations.

The 2-0 win had the identical score with the opening victory that the Tar Heels registered over Roanoke in their opening appearance last season.

Canada Papers Due Fri.

Only one more day remains for students to submit application for the Canadian Exchange Trip to be held during semester break, Jan. 31-Feb. 3. A select group of 24 students will travel northward to the shores of Lake Ontario where they will be guests of the University of Toronto.

Applications for this exchange program should be submitted to the main desk of GM, the Reserve Reading Room of the library, or Y-Court. When a student turns in his application, he should also sign up for an interview appointment.

Will Entertain

Students who participate in the Canadian trip will also entertain the University of Toronto students during their visit to UNC Nov. 10-12.

Expenses for the trip to Canada will be only $50.00.

"Underlying the pleasant social exchange of the Toronto program was an equally valuable intellectual exchange," said Bob Sevier, a member of last year's exchange program. "Often we found ourselves formally or informally discussing government, world situations, politics, education, or philosophies. Although our views sometimes differed greatly, this only added to the educational experience."

Quite A Challenge

Betty Claiborne, another exchangee, said, "The Canadians were quite a challenge to us last year. They were full of questions about our opinions on subjects ranging from integration to international policies and our own UNC Student Government to the U. S. Electoral College."

"I would consider the Toronto Exchange one of the most worthwhile activities in the Student Government realm," said Dennis Rash. "The interchange of ideas between students of different environments, but strikingly similar problems and pursuits, is beneficial and quite revealing."

Students having any questions about the exchange program should contact either Pat Morgan (942-2004) or Lynda Richert (968-9096), co-chairmen of the Canadian Exchange.

Knight told a news conference Edgerton offered him—in a telephone call Sept. 8—any job in the state "including chief justice of the Supreme Court" if he stayed out of the 1962 race.

Carolina folksingers will invade the Rathskellar tonight . . . with the management's blessing.

Shooting Begins As Refugees Flee

BERLIN (UPI)—Communist and West Berlin police fired on each other Wednesday across the divided city's border. It was the first known exchange of shots over the border in the current Berlin crisis.

One Communist policeman was carried away dead or wounded after some 40 shots were traded, West Berlin police said.

The wild shooting fray was touched off when two refugees tried to escape the Communist zone by fleeing across rooftops of houses fronting Berlin's French sector.

One of them was killed when he leaped and missed a safety net being held for him by West Berlin firemen.

Refugee Arrested

The second refugee was arrested and led back by Communists into the Red Zone. West Berlin police said.

Though tear gas grenades on both sides have been exchanged since the current Berlin crisis came to a head and the Communists have fired water cannons into West Berlin, Wednesday night's encounter was the first officially admitted exchange of bullets by East and West.

Shooting Occurs

The shooting occurred shortly after Gen. Lucius D. Clay, President Kennedy's personal representative in Berlin, announced that the United States was more determined than ever to defend the city.

West German police said they believed that at least 34 and 39 shots were fired by both sides in Wednesday night's incident.

East Berlin police opened fire first, according to West Berlin officials. West Berlin police returned the fire on the grounds that the lives of West Berliners were endangered.

Robert Penn Warren Will Address Jarrell Convocation

Robert Penn Warren, acclaimed literary figure, will give an address at the Literary Recognition Convocation in honor of North Carolina poet Randall Jarrell, which will be held here, at 8 p.m. on October 18, in Hill Hall.

The title of Warren's address is "Poetry and Our Moment." Poet and novelist Warren has just returned from Europe to his home in Connecticut. His convocation address here will be his first major appearance since his return.

Randall Jarrell, professor of English at Woman's College, Greensboro, is the 1961 winner of the National Book Award for Poetry.

The convocation, sponosored by the University of North Carolina Press in association with the Historical Book Club of North Carolina, is a special recognition in behalf of the Consoloidated University of North Carolina for one of its outstanding literary figures.

Pay Tribute

President William C. Friday will pay tribute to poet-professor Jarrell for the Consolidated University, and Paul Green, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for Drama, 1927, will pay tribute for the writers of North Carolina. Lambert Davis, director of the University of North Carolina Press, will preside.

Featured speaker Robert Penn Warren is one of America's, and the South's greatest recognized literary figures. He has been awarded the Pulitzer Prize twice—one for his novel, "All the King's Men," in 1946, and again in 1958 for his poetry entitled "Promises: Poems 1954 to 1956." The book, "All the King's men," was an Academy Award winning film. Warren also received the National Book Award and the Edna St. Vincent Millay award of the Poetry Society of America for his publication "Promises."

A native of Kentucky, Warren is one of the founders of "The Southern Review," a distinguished literary magazine which he also edited. At the age of 16, Warren entered Vanderbilt University to study for a scientific career. The influence of John Crowe Ransom, noted literary figure, turned young Warren to literature. Warren completed his formal education at Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar. He has taught at several of the nation's outstanding universities, and held the Chair of Poetry in the Library of Congress from 1944 to 1945.

The public is invited to attend, without charge, this October 18th convocation honoring Randall Jarrell.

Knight In Fair Condition

Jerry Knight of Chapel Hill and the University, who was injured in a 40-foot fall into Linville Gorge Sunday, has been moved from the intensive care section into a ten-bed ward in Memorial Hospital, it was learned yesterday.

His condition was reported to be fair by the nurse on duty. She said Knight was eating and sleeping comfortably.

Knight was rescued and taken to a hospital in nearby Spruce Pine fore emergency treatment. He had suffered possible skull and spinal fractures and multiple scrapes and bruises, according to reports. He was then transferred to Memorial Hospital here.

He may have short visits from friends and relatives, according to the nurse. Knight is now in 512 west.

ON UNIVERSITY DAY

Carolina Honoring Kennedy, Sanford

University Day, October 12th, will be celebrated this year by the presence on the campus of President Kennedy and Governor Terry Sanford. At a convocation scheduled for Kenan Stadium at 11:00 President Kennedy will speak, and honorary degrees will be given to him and to Governor Sanford.

All University classes will be suspended from 10:00 to 1:00 on that day. Other University employees who can be spared from their work will be released by their dean, director, or department head for this three-hour period of time.

Since this is a very special occasion there will be no requirement that this released time be made up later. Those who cannot be released, however, will establish no claim for compensatory time.

The ceremony in Kenan Stadium will follow as closely as possible graduation exercises at June commencement. There will be an academic procession, and all members of our faculty are urged to take part. Arrangements have been made with the Book Exchange to secure a large number of caps and gowns that may be bought at actual cost to the Book Exchange. If you do not have a cap and gown and wish to secure one, please see Mr. Ritchie.

Should the weather not permit the use of Kenan Stadium, the ceremony will be held at Woollen Gymnasium.

Make Haste Slowly

A slight but significant change in the employment practices of the Durham A&P stores has been reported:

—According to the heads of state NAACP chapters, a Negro has been moved to a position as part-time cashier in one of Durham's A&P stores.

—Four A&P managers contacted this week said that there will be no racial discrimination in their employment policy.

The action comes after nearly six months of picketing and selective buying programs by Durham Negroes. It is the latest development in the local integration struggle and is similar to others in recent months. Settlements have been reached slowly, but peacefully.

It is gratifying to note that both sides have been able to accept compromise and avoid violence. Managers and picketers have been able to reach workable agreements, often by only the smallest of concessions by either faction.

The phrase "with all deliberate speed" has found a meaning in many of the issues. Integration forces have been staunch in their efforts, but willing to accept the barest signs of progress, while managers have done their best to allow inroads to be made.

There have been no extreme instances of violence, and the disintegration of discriminatory policies has moved ahead steadily, unhampered by riots, beatings and similar violence which would discredit both sides. Bias against the Negro has existed for centuries. It will not be eliminated at a single stroke. Attempts to hasten its progress beyond certain limits could be disastrous.

The managers of the Durham A&P stores are to be commended for their concession, and the NAACP should be commended for accepting it, with hope for the future rather than malice for the present.

Blow To Nasser

The volatile political habits of Syria have taken precedence over Arab unity in the successful revolt against Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Dissolution of the three-year-old United Arab Republic is a bitter blow to Nasser. It will bring about splits in the Arab world that will be a long time healing.

Observers in Cairo do not believe the Syrian revolution has had a pronounced effect on the prestige of Nasser inside Egypt. There is no question, however, that the U.A.R. president's stock has dropped in other parts of the Middle East.

It had taken Nasser seven years to consolidate his position as leader and spokesman of the Arab League. His aim was to unify some 80 million Arabs in a political, economic and military establishment that would rank among the world's leading powers.

The forming of the United Arab Republic with Syria in 1958 was one of his greatest triumphs. But the Cairo strongman must have underestimated the difficulty of welding together two greatly dissimilar countries.

Syria fled willingly to Nasser's arms to escape the clutches of communism three years ago. The country was like the damsel in distress being rescued from the ogre, only to find after awhile that she and her rescuer were incompatible. So she chose to take her chances apart from the hero.

The ogre—in the form of the Soviet Union—is still in the vicinity. The Communists again have a chance to capture this stormy republic of some three million persons, but the possibility appears poorer than in 1958 when the Soviets posed as Syria's defender against a so-called Turkish menace.

The Syrians lost their national sovereignty, property rights and independence of action. They deeply resented the influx of Egyptians who were given key government and business positions.

The soverity of this feeling was demonstrated in Premier Mamoun Kuzbari's order that all Egyptians be deported. The revolutionary government is determined to remove all who might stand in the way of Syria's self-determination.

The United States has been understandably cautious in withholding diplomatic recognition until things have been stabilized in Syria. The Kuzbari government looks desirable from our point of view, but the dust has not yet settled.

He will seek to have Syria, one of the 51 charter members of the U. N., readmitted. He also wants his country to become a separate member of the Arab League.

One of Kuzbari's first domestic acts was to announce the end of government censorship, a development welcome in the eyes of those steeped in Western freedom. He also trained his guns on Nasser's vast intelligence network in Syria, an organization whose activities hastened the revolt.

The fluid situation in Syria defies confident analysis. But it appears now that the revolt came at a good time for the West and a bad time for the Soviet Union.

Syria is now buttressed on all sides by anti-Communist nations, Jordan, Iraq, Lebanon, Israel and Turkey. And some indication of Communist feeling about the split may be found in condemnation of the uprising by Yugoslavia's Tito.

But the principal question in wake of the split is whether Nasser has the ability to maintain his role of strong leadership among the Arabs, and within the Asian-African bloc.

His efforts in that direction are certain to mean a prolonged period of unrest and instability in the Middle East. And, if Nasser should fall, we can't be certain his successor would be more desirable for the West.

"Ah, That's More Like It"

Use Regular People, i.e. Students On Football Squad?

The football team did everything we could ask on Saturday to justify our pride and confidence. It was evident to all that, if anyone did read to them Junius Goodman's rude and insulting letter in the DTH, they were quite above reacting to such backbiting.

We need not heed, moreover, the jibes of the scoffers that State scored ten points on the Heels in the opening seconds of the game; for as soon as the Blue Defenders were informed that the game had really started, they ran roughshod over their opponents, beating their rushing average for the game down to a Lilliputian four yards.

Everyone at Kenan Stadium on Saturday saw a thrilling demonstration of what hard work, good diet, careful breeding and a minimum of academic distraction can do for the game of Football.

* * *

YET THE BUSINESS of Football has not been going well in Chapel Hill. The truth is that it has been running in the red recently, and has had to draw on its profit reserves from happier days.

At the bottom of the difficulty, many feel, is indecision in the top levels of the Administration as to whether we should continue to hire football players for the team, or reduce ourselves to the absurdity of using regular people, i.e., just students, on the squad.

The question of "de-emphasis," as this patent folly is called, has been debated on college campuses for some years. A few weak-spirited institutions have actually adopted the practice, wishing to think of themselves, and to be thought of, as primarily academic in purpose.

So even here, the Administration has been tempted, in recent years, to drop its athletic pretensions and have a first-class University, while wiser counsels have urged exactly the opposite course of action.

* * *

THE ATTRITION caused by the resulting indecision has told on the team and the coaches, on the long run. Fear of losing their jobs has sapped the energies of coaches and players alike, and their occasional gaucherie can be explained by the concomitant demoralization in the ranks.

Their distress is easily understood on a moment's reflection: what could the poor fellows possibly do if they weren't playing or coaching football?

Therefore I think it is time to close ranks and insist that the administrative spinelessness of recent years be stopped forthwith, by appropriate dismissals if necessary. The really important thing is winning, and with united effort, good will and sacrifice, win we shall!

Silly Argument

A stupid little argument is making the rounds these days—whether this nation is a republic or a democracy. "This country is a republic, not a democracy," the slogan goes. "Let's keep it that way."

In the first place, the two cannot be properly contrasted. It would be like comparing a machine to the man who operates it. The truth is that we are both. We are a republic because the Constitution Convention adopted this form of government in 1787. We are a democracy because the the people—not an emperor, a dictator or a tiny power clique—run it.

To those who started this silly argument, we'd like to ask if they would prefer to live in Canada—a constitutional monarchy and a democracy—or Red China—a republic and the most repressive dictatorship the world has ever known.

Reader Rips Reprinted Education Editorial

(Editor's Note: The editorial in Tuesday's paper entitled "Uneducated Educastor" speaks for itself).

The Sunday issue carried a shallow, trite editorial entitled "Dangerous Ground" that was reprinted from another paper with the explanation that it answered the question "How much merit is there in education courses?"

The editorial in no way answered this question. However, the editorial did an excellent job of demonstrating how an editor can rush into criticism of a subject about which he is poorly informed.

* * *

THE ARTICLE STATED . . . "we can't help feeling from what we have read and heard on the subject that such courses should be reduced drastically in favor of concentration on a better general education with specialization, of course, in the subject the teacher is most interested in."

This statement shows clearly that the editor has no first hand information on the subject. In fact there appears to be a general lack of information of any kind.

Before recommending drastic reduction in education courses, the editor might consider the fact that only 18 semester hours, practice teaching included, are required for the Class A Certificate. Professional courses, consequently, constitute only a small part of the teacher's background.

* * *

BEFORE SPEAKING of "Concentration on a better general education" the editor should consider the fact that education courses are as much a part of general education as are courses in history, psychology, sociology, philosophy, and political science.

A little investigation and reflection would reveal that these "subject matter fields" are the foundation of education courses.

The fact that teachers should have a broad general background and a firm grasp of their field of specialization is not in dispute.

The knowledge of one's field, however, does not necessitate the ability to impart understanding to others.

Anyone who bothers to analyze our school system is met with three disturbing conclusions:

1. Only a small part of the information to which a student is exposed is absorbed.
2. The information that is memorized slips away at a horrifying rate.
3. Students frequently fail to see the conviction between the situation at hand and the material that they have studied.

* * *

THESE THREE CONDITIONS do not rise from lack of available information, but from faulty and inefficient learning. Students are showered with information from kindergarten through college, but so little is retained. The human mind is not a machine that soaks up all information that comes near, stores it automatically in a meaningful framework, and automatically applies it the instant that a chance for application arises.

Until the mind reaches this stage of perfection, a teacher should be more than a person who stands in front of the class and talks about a subject.

The transfer of genuine understanding from the teacher to the class is at best inefficient, and the truly good teacher is constantly alert for better ways of accomplishing this end.

It is ridiculous to assume that a person going into teaching cannot benefit from training in this area.

Professional courses, among other things, attempt to bridge the gap between lecturing and teaching.

Talent cannot be created, but it can be cultivated.

Writer Masticates Author Of 'Cannibals'

Alan Goldsmith's "A Word On The Rights Of Cannibalism" in Sunday's DTH is one of the most repelling examples of poor taste and pointlessness I have ever read. Having produced, and submitted for publication, such a piece of no-think places him in my opinion on a level with such mentally malodorous misfits as ardent Ku Klux Klansmen.

The only information I was able to glean from a very close re-reading of his masterful verbosity is that he fervently dislikes Liberals and the NAACP. It is a pity he lacks sufficient candor to just come out and say so, then tell why.

Although he still might fail to convince, at least he would make sense.

DAVE WILLIAMS

'Educate Yourselves,' Urges SP Officer

It has become increasingly apparent that a large minority of Carolina students are unaware of the state or the extent of politics on the campus level in this university. Even more appalling—that they are unaware of the full extent of Carolina Student Government, of the fact that this Government is recognized as one of the best and most complex and farreaching college governments in the country, reaching into every phase of student life, and basing its organization on a Constitution not unlike the U. S. Constitution in structure.

No, this letter is not being written to educate these students, but to appeal to them to educate themselves, to take an active interest in their Student Government, and to offer their services to their Government.

One of the best ways of achieving this end is to become an active member of a political party.

There are two such parties on campus: the Student Party and the University Party.

Each endorses and supports candidates for seats in the Student Legislature, for President, Vice-president, Secretary, and Treasurer of the student body, for Editors of the major campus publications, and for the class offices.

* * *

IN THE ELECTIONS of the past two semesters, Student Party candidates have won the most class positions, the majority of seats in Legislature (the body which spends your $140,000 budget, besides its other duties); the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer this year, as well as the Editors of the Yack, were also endorsed by the Student Party. And one need not look far to find the reason for the success of the Student Party on the UNC campus. It is the only party with a platform—promising what the students want, including:

* * *

1) CONTINUED SUPPORT for a new student union and undergraduate library, faculty salary increases, and a coliseum;

2) Increased support for academic and cultural programs, including the Carolina Forum, Fine Arts Festival, and Religious Forum;

3) Improved dormitory facilities;

4) An effort to improve student-faculty communications;

5) A sincere and dedicated effort towards elimination of all racial discrimination;

6) A pledge to work for a suitable location for off-campus parties for dorm residents, and for the clearance of more dorm basements to provide room for social functions and study areas;

7) An effort to give all students a just and fair price for used textbooks;

8) An improvement in communication between individual students and Student Government;

9) A pledge to strive to keep Student Government from becoming the exclusive reserve of any one group or clique and to encourage participation from all areas of campus.

* * *

"Have a voice in your Government. Speak through SP." These words form the slogan of the Student Party during this week's campaign for membership. Already this year, at two party meetings, President of the Student Government, Bill Harriss, has led a general discussion of the current and future work of his administration.

Through such sessions students can voice ther complaints and desires where their voice will be heard. The Student Party has planned at least two such meetings this month, plus a Nominating Convention before Fall elections.

* * *

WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, and Friday of this week membership in the Student Party will be made easily accessible by all students at tables set up in Y-Court and Lenoir Hall. Information concerning the Party, its history, and its work will also be available. Membership dues are $1.00 per semester, and any member may vote at his second meeting. This is particulary important since the Nominating Convention for class offices will be at the end of this month.

Have a voice in your Government. Speak through the Student Party.

Judging from the dapper attire of the cowboys and lawmen in television adaptations of the Old West we assume there must have been many branches of Brooks Brothers, Nieman Marcus and Saks Fifth Avenue in those old pioneer towns of Deadwood Gulch, Larimie and Dodge City.

Smacked Homer

Lefty Now Has 27 Straight Runless Innings In Series

By OSCAR FALEY
United Press International

NEW YORK (UPI)—Stubby Whitey Ford's record-setting pitching and the most thunderous home run bats in baseball history swept the New York Yankees to a 2-0 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds in the opening game of the World Series Wednesday.

The bludgeons which bashed an all-time high of 240 home runs this year roared the Yankee victory tune when Elston Howard clipped a fourth-inning clout into the lower right-field stands and Moose Skowron lofted a towering shot into the left-field stands in the sixth inning.

Ford, the ice water blond with an eye on the record books, took care of the Reds with a two-hit shutout—his third consecutive scoreless effort in World Series play and his unprecedented eighth win in the classic.

The Yankees did it without ailing Mickey Mantle as they hung the defeat on handsome young Jim O'Toole, although he handcuffed home run king Roger Maris before retiring for a pinch-hitter after giving up six hits and two runs in seven innings.

It was a heart-breaking defeat for the Reds, whose scorned defense contributed two sparking plays; but on this chill gray day they simply were unable to match that Yankee power and the southpaw slants of the chunky Ford before a crowd of 62,397 fans.

First To Win 8

And it was Ford's day all the way, even the weather conspiring to help the heat-hating 32-year-old who compiled his greatest record this season with 25 victories. For when it was over Whitey had:

—Become the first man to win eight series games, leaving behind him former Yankee greats Red Ruffing and Allie Reynolds—each with seven.

—Run his record of all-time-series strikeouts to 69 by fanning six of the Reds.

—In pitching his third consecutive series shutout, stood only two and two-thirds innings away from the all-time classic mark set by Babe Ruth in 1916 and 1918 when he was a pitcher with the Boston Red Sox.

He had them in his pocket all the way, the futilely swinging Reds getting only three balls out of the infield and getting only one of their three base runners to second base.

On the other hand the tight-lipped O'Toole, who admitted that he would "have butterflies" until after he got his first hitter out, was in an immediate jam as he went to the mound. Bobby Richardson greeted him with a single to left and Tony Kubek walked on four straight pitches.

Then up came Maris, who hit more runs in one season than any man in history. But O'Toole met the challenge by getting him to pop up and the runners held again when Elston Howard flied to short center. O'Toole faltered briefly as he walked Moose Skowron to fill the bases but then got Yogi Berra, appearing in his record 69th series game, to pop up on a breathless 3-and-2 pitch.

Nabs Richardson

O'Toole faced more trouble in the second when Richardson chopped a single into the hole on which Kaske had no play. Kubek popped up but then there stood the menacing Maris again. Richardson was running on the three-two pitch but O'Toole struck out Maris. Catcher Darrell Johnson, playing with a bad left side, whipped the ball to Kaske and his throw to Gordy Coleman nabbed Richardson, who was trying to scamble back to first.

The handsome O'Toole was having trouble with his curve and when he went primarily to his ball it caught up to him in the fourth inning. For those muted Yankee bats started to thunder when Howard arched his fifth World Series home run into the lower rightfield stands.

O'Toole still wasn't out of it for he walked Berra and Cletis Boyer singled him to second with two out. Ford ripped into one of those fast balls then but Kaske made a running back-handed stab of a sizzling line drive to retire the side.

Houk: 'Mr. Ford & Mr. Boyer Did It'

By MILTON RICHMAN

NEW YORK (UPI)—Somewhat smug, cigar-puffing Ralph Houk said it all in five words—"Mr. Ford and Mr. Boyer!"

The obviously elated New York Yankee manager made sure to put a bit of special emphasis on the word "mister" in each case Wednesday, leaving no doubt whatsoever how he felt about the efforts of southpaw Whitey Ford and third baseman Cletis Boyer.

"Mr. For dis the guy who did it," were the first words out of Houk's mouth after he had settled himself in his swivel chair, "and don't forget to give Mr. Boyer a big assist, too."

Even in the face of Ford's brilliant two-hitter, most of the two superb defensive plays Boyer turned in one Gene Freese's line drive in the second inning and a hard smash by pinch-hitter Dick Gernert in the eighth.

Mad Desperate Lunge

Boyer's play on Gernert in the eighth was one of those things you had to see to believe. The Yankee third baseman made a desperation lunge at the ball, stopped it somehow and then threw out Gernert while still on his knees.

"It was the best play I ever made," Boyer said. "I didn't believe it myself.

"You know what I did? I just pulled that ball out of my ears."

His second inning grab of Freese's line smash was almost as spectacular.

"Actually, I had more trouble on that one," he revealed, "I lost the ball for a second in those flags that drape behind home plate. But I found it in time."

Boyer also was the key figure in what looked like a touchy situation in the fifth when Wally Post barrelled into him coming from second base after Darrell Johnson had bounced back to Clete.

"I would've done the same thing he did," Boyer said, gingerly fingering a small bruise on his upper lip where Post's elbow hit him. "He just tried to knock the ball out of my hand. He's got a right."

Ford Not Concerned

Ford, who ran his consecutive World Series scoreless inning streak to 27—only 2 2/3 innings shy of Babe Ruth's pitching record—says he's not going to be concerned about the mark the next time out.

WHITEY FORD

27 Straight Scoreless Innings

"If I break it, I break it," he shrugged.

"All I know is that I had darn good stuff out there today, except for my change-up. That was lousy."

Eddie Kasko connected for the Reds' first hit on a change-up in the first inning and Post caught a fast ball for his single in the fifth, Ford revealed.

"The guy who worried me most was Frank Robinson," added the Yankee left-hander. "Kaske surprised me most. I didn't think he was that good a hitter."

Elston Howard didn't make too much of his fourth inning homer—which was really all the Yankees needed.

"Maybe if he (Post) wasn't playing me over so far toward left, he might have caught it," Howard said. "The ball I hit in the sixth was tagged much harder but Vada Pinson grabbed it."

Houk paid tribute to the Reds by saying they were "a good ball club—one that you can't judge by today—because their hitters didn't get a chance to show much."

Odds Grow Longer

NEW YORK (UPI)—Because of their opening-game victory, the New York Yankees Wednesday night became prohibitive favorites at 5-1 to win the World Series with Cincinnati.

New York's 2-0 triumph Wednesday lengthened the odds from 11-5 to 5-1.

The Yankees also are solid favorites at 8½ to 5 to win Thursday's second contest.

The price dropped from 6-1 to 3-1 against New York winning the series in four straight games. It's 25-1 that Cincinnati does not take the series in the next four games.

Barclay Says Mistakes Hurt

Frosh At Clemson Friday

By ED DUPREE

Clemson's "Little Tigers" will furnish the opposition Friday as UNC's freshmen football team seeks to even its record at 1-1.

The only change in Coach George Barclay's starting line-up finds Ray Jones at left halfback in place of Dave Braine. Braine broke his cheekbone in the Tar Babies' 7-6 loss to the State frosh last week. Jim Morgan, a guard was injured in practice this week. Both Braine and Morgan will be out of the Clemson game.

Fullback Ken Willard was the offensive sparkplug in the State game, picking up 102 yards in 19 carries, but Barclay says that Richard Zarro will also see a lot of action.

"We'll be playing a lot more boys Friday, because we know a lot more about them," Barclay said. "We know what we haven't done and what we have to do."

Barclay pointed out that his team made too many mistakes against State. The Tar Babies blew several scoring chances deep in State territory that proved to be costly.

Barclay was pleased with the play of his backfield, but says that his line didn't perform quite as well as expected. "We blocked well on our plays up the middle," he said, "but we didn't get good blocking on our wide stuff. Also, our pass protection was poor."

End Frank Gallagher's play, both offensive and defensive, pleased the Carolina coach. Gallagher was quarterback Ron Tuthill's chief target in the Tar Baby passing attack and also did an outstanding job on defense.

The Carolina frosh leave today for Clemson and return after Friday afternoon's contest with the Tigers, 35-26 victors over Wake Forest last week.

Ban On Alcohol To Be Enforced Here Saturday

University athletic officials announced yesterday that the rule against taking beverage or ice coolers inside Kenan Stadium will be strictly enforced at the football game with Clemson and at all the remaining home games.

Gate keepers have been instructed to deny admission to the game to anyone with such containers.

It was also announced that Gate 4 again will be open for students. Seats in the West stands will be provided for those who prefer to sit there.

HARRY W. LLOYD

THE SPORTS Tabbloyd

We have received several comments, both pro and con, on our Tuesday column dealing with the athletes' eating facilities in Lenoir. The following is a letter we received on the subject:

Dear Harry:

I read your Tuesday's column with high interest. Being a former high school athlete, I enjoy almost all the sports events at Carolina. I think the writer, "Junius Goodman," has no school spirit whatsoever. He hasn't looked at the players' side of it. They practice hard and play their hearts out. After Saturday's game I would gladly give up my place in line and help serve the players. They played hard for us, I say us, because we are the University of North Carolina.

To answer Bob Elliott's question, "Does the whole campus feel that way?"—NO. I suggest that all of the South dining room be reserved for the heroes of UNC.

Sincerely,
Ashley Ervin Robbins, Jr.

★ ★ ★

In our football predictions last week, we hit five of six. The only game missed was Miami's upset of Penn State. Our record to date is 9-2. So for this week's guesses:

Duke 31, Wake Forest 6. The Blue Devils got cranked up last week against Virginia, and the weak Deacons can't choke them out.

Syracuse 19, Maryland 13. This one is rated even, as the battle of All-Americans, Ernie Davis and Gary Collins. But the Orange can pull it out.

N. C. State 24, Virginia 12. You can't hold down Gabriel for two weeks in a row.

Georgia 22, South Carolina 18. Another even game, but the Bulldogs will win it on backfield strength.

Michigan 29, Army 19. The Wolverines are better than they look.

Notre Dame 19, Purdue 13. The Irish are back in Who's Who.

Virginia Tech 21, West Virginia 12. What has happened to the one-time powerful Mountaineers?

Mississippi 39, Florida State 10. Are the Yankees in the market for any more quarterbacks?

Southern Methodist 22, Air Force 17. The Mustangs will find themselves and keep the Cadets grounded.

Missouri 33, California 8. Another fine team at Mo.

Louisiana State 21, Georgia Tech 12. A definite upset of the Engineers, but the Tigers are capable.

Pittsburgh 10, Washington 7. The Panthers toe will win it.

Ohio State 21, UCLA 0, We shouldn't pick a shutout, but the Buckeyes are It again.

Michigan State 38, Stanford 14. Look out Rose Bowl!!!

Overtime Play Highlights Tuesday Dorm Mural Play

By JOHN MONTAGUE

While such teams as the Town Touts, Mangum Mavericks and Joyner Jocks were sweeping to easy victories Tuesday, the Stacy Studs won one the hard way. Their game with the Avery Ovaries ended in a scoreless tie and the two teams entered into an overtime hassle, which proved to be one of the season's most exciting.

The Ovaries went all the way on their third play with Bill Weems scoring both the TD and the extra point. Seemingly defeated, the Studs bounced back and scored on their fourth play, John Church crossing the goal. J. Longest got the PAT. This forced a continuation of the overtime, and two plays later Stacy won the game by position of the ball.

Another team from Avery, the Addicts, was more fortunate than its brother team. It also went into overtime, playing NROTC. The score was knotted at 7 all on TD's by Lynn for Avery and Curtis for Navy, PAT's by Adams for Avery and Moore for NROTC. The Addicts moved the ball the furthest in the overtime and took the win.

The Town Touts buried the Cobb Carousers, 39-0, with Bruno Brown and P. W. Swing getting two TD's apiece. Bob Rhodes and Bob Watkins also scored six-pointers, Dee Frady got a PAT and Swing was responsible for a safety.

The Mangum Mavericks rolled easily to their third straight victory, downing the Graham Shieks, 36-0. Len Dellolio led the scoring with two TD's and an extra point. Sonny Shelton, Sherm Yeargen and Jim McIntyre also got touchdowns and Dave Honeycutt, Jamie Quinn, McIntyre got the other PAT's. The Mangum defense also chalked up a safety to aid the scoring cause.

The Joyner Jocks marched over Lewis, 29-0, with Jeff Ward scoring twice and Shell Young and George McClean each getting one. Jim Magner and Young added two safeties and Jack Brothers got the only PAT of the game.

Winston edged by Aycock, 13-12, on a PAT by Charlie Wright. Luke Medling scored both TD's for the winners, with Love and Henry doing the Aycock point-making.

In other games, Grimes shutout the Alexander Esquires, 3-0, on a field goal by Buster Harrill, and Old East won a defensive duel over Old West, 6-0, on a TD by Jim Ringers.

In the grad division, the Law Blues downed the Law Whites, 25-2. Pool scored twice, McMillan and Whedbee once for the victors. Happer got an extra point. The only White score came on a safety, credited to Kornegay. Also, the Peacocks dumped Dental School, 26-7. Two touchdowns by Herb Hawks and single scores by Dave Knecht and Ed Burke did the damage. Jerry Koontz and Jerry Steele notched PAT's. Harry Killian scored the Dental School TD, W. Honeycutt adding the point after.

Rhodes Competition Opens At Carolina

Rhodes Scholarship competition for 1961 was announced today by D. Edward Hudgins of Greensboro, who stressed that deadline for receiving applications in November 1. Further information may be secured in Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson's office.

Mr. Hudgins, Vice President and General Councel of Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company, is secretary of the selection committee in North Carolina for next year's candidates for the scholarships at England's Oxford University.

"The selection committee," Mr. Hudgins said, "is interested in good all-around young men—that it, those who have shown some definite quality of real distinction in leadership, scholastic ability and physical vgor."

Any unmarred male student between 18 and 24 who is at least a Junior in college is eligible to compete for one of the awards which each year send 32 American men to study at Oxford.

May Chose

"The Rhodes scholar may choose studies in any of Oxford's fields of instruction," Mr. Hudgins, himself a former Rhodes scholar, pointed out. "The two-year scholarship may be extended to three years at the discretion of the Trustees," he added.

A A Rhodes Scholarship is worth 750 British pounds annually, which with care is sufficient to cover a Rhodes scholar's expenses for term time and vacation, the committee secretary said.

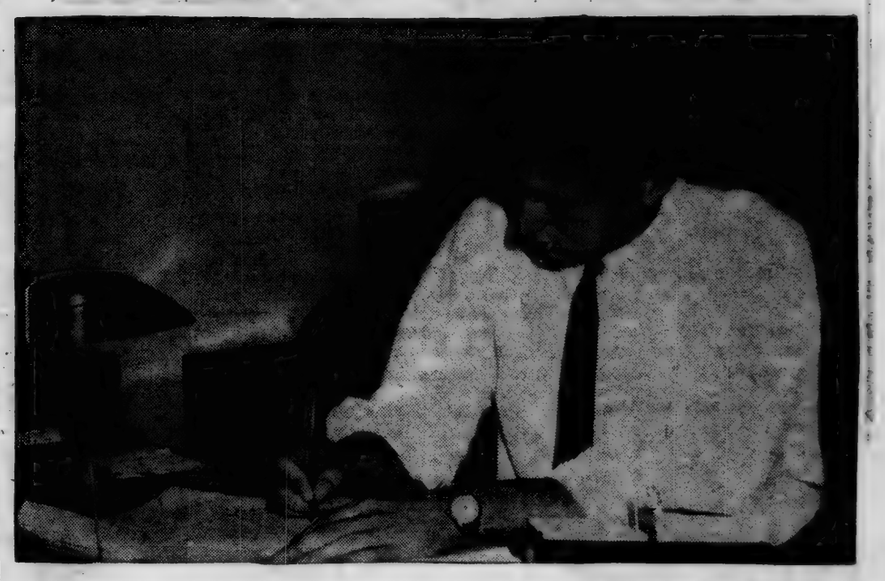
PRESIDENT BILL HARRISS

Idealistic Young Man Leads UNC



95 PER CENT OF THE TIME —William (Bill) G. Harriss, president of Student Government at the University, can be found in the Student Government Office. Government is his leisure time.

University of North Carolina student Bill Harriss is an idealistic young man who moves in several circles—mostly dealing with campus government at the University here.

Twenty-one year old Bill is the son of Major and Mrs. Ernest Bramwell Harriss of the Salvation Army in Columbia, S. C. Although he was born in Richmond, Virginia, Bill credits Burlington, N. C. as the place which has meant the most to him during his young years.

Bill's family has lived in 13 different places, mostly Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina, since Bill's birth, but because he spent all his high school years in Burlington, he considers it as the place most familiar and 'sympatico" to him.

Credits Success

The president of Student Government at the University of North Carolina has been a Morehead Scholar during his four years in school. He credits his success in scholarship to his high school teachers in Burlington, about whom he has many fine things to say.

Bill gives the impression that he is one who has always been in the right places at the right time. He received a trip to England that way; he met his never-to-be-forgotten companions in Burlington that way; and he became president of the Student Government at the University by running on what he terms a more "liberal" platform than his opposing candidate, fitting in with the ideas of the majority of the students.

A major in Religion at the University, Bill is preparing to study law, and explains that a major in religion gives him the proper background for a broad selection of liberal arts courses. He considers his college life and career to be the place where he has been able to iron out his "Weltanschauung," a German word meaning world-view.

Likes Legislation

He likes legislation and social action on a large scale, and believes he can find this in law and government.

Bill's leisure time is taken up by government. "It is government," he said. As head of the Student Government, Bill made a speech to the incoming University students during orientation barely two weeks ago. Bill cites this speech to be the impetus for the most embarrassing occurance of his life.

After giving a talk on the importance of student government—a speech which was serious and deep and not in the least jovial and full of 'Carolina spirit,' Bill was amazed to find that his audience was giving him a standing ovation. This was not what he had expected. Without 'Uriah Heeping,' Bill admitted that he found this reception most embarrassing.

The most rewarding aspects of all his years, Bill cites to be his family life. He enjoys taking friends home with him, and explained that there is a certain atmosphere in his home which he likes to have others share. "After dinner we always have devotionals," he said. "My family is a true example of the way to live a Christian life."

Bill explains the reason that his life has been successful to date to be summed up by the idea that the Lord is taking care of his own. A motto which continually guides him is from a poem of Robert Frost's:

"The woods are lovely, dark and deep,
But I have promises to keep
And miles to go before I sleep."

ZBT's Plan Move To New Fraternity Court Off Campus

By Jean Yoder

Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity has announced plans to build a $225,000 house in new Fraternity Court, making it the first of UNC's social fraternities planning to move out of the general campus area.

New Fraternity Court is a 1½-acre plot on the Finley Golf Couse Road, designated last spring by university officials as the site of six new fraternity houses.

According to Steve Grafman, ZBT president, construction of the two-story brick and California redwood building will begin in February and should be completed by September.

Contemporary Design

The house, of contemporary design, will feature on the first floor a formal sunken living room, a combination recreation-dining area to accommodate 200 persons for dancing and 100 for dinners and a music room opening onto a combination library-lounge. Also on the first floor will be a suite for the resident housemother, a restaurant-style kitchen, a butler's pantry and a utility room and storage area.

Sleeping and studying space for the house's maximum of 44 men will be on the second floor.

10,000 Square Feet

Additional features of the 10,000 square-foot house include a patio surrounding the building, a balcony for each bedroom, air conditioning and courtyards enclosing each end of the house.

The ZBT chapter plans to buy a small bus to provide transportation to and from the campus.

Active since 1927, the chapter has been located since 1947 on West Rosemary Street.

William B. Long, assistant dean of student affairs, in a letter to Alan B. Heiling, principal chapter trustee, has commended the fraternity "for creating a model for succeeding fraternity houses which may be built at this University."

Architects are Cooper and Salzman of Atlanta.

The Four Aces Appear Here

"LOVE IS A MANY SPLENDORED THING" declared the Four Aces, who will appear in Memorial Hall at 4 and 8 p.m. today. The famed singers of "Three Coins in a Fountain," "Written on the Wind" and "It's No Sin" are appearing here on their Southern tour. Richiardi, an illusionist who has performed throughout Europe, will follow the Four Aces with his magic tricks. Master of ceremonies Alan Black, Columbia and Epic recording star, will double as an entertainer. The program will be introduced by Doug Burkhardt, chairman of the University Entertainment Committee. Tickets, which are on sale at Lenoir Hall, Y-Court, and Kemp's, will also be available at the door before each performance.

Harriss Urges Attend Shows

Bill Harriss, student body president, yesteday urged all students to attend the University Entertainment Committee's program today, which features the Four Aces.

Harriss said, "A lot of time, effort and hard work has gone into the program. The Entertainment Committee is the first group of its type to provide good entertainment at a minimum rate to the campus as a whole and the program today is a sincere efort to provide the best in entertainment for each student on the campus."

Doug Burkhardt, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, added that "attendance today will determine whether or not the students will continue to receive good entertainment at low rates."

Germans O.K.

The Entertainment Committee also got a nod of approval from George Cox, president of the Germans Club. "On behalf of the Germans Club, I would like to pledge our full support to the University Entertainment Committee's Four Aces concert today. We of the German Club, feel that this type of program is a definite asset to the campus and will not only improve campus social relations, but will be a big factor in improving the morale of the students. We do not consider this concert to be in any way an encroachment upon the Germans Club's programs."

Caravan For Football Game

The Carolina-Maryland game, Oct. 14, was designated as Caravan Weekend by the Student Athletic Council at their first meeting this week.

Transportation to the game will be $10 round trip. Those wishing to reserve a seat should leave a $5 deposit in a sealed envelope with their name and the words Caravan Weekend at the GM Information Desk.

The remainder of the money will be paid on Friday, Oct. 13. If there is not enough to complete a bus, the money will be refunded. First deposits have priority.

Tickets for the game can be purchased at Woollen Gym or at the game.

Open House

The fraternities at Maryland have scheduled an open house for all Carolina students after the game.

There will be a jazz concert by Ella Fitzgerald after the game. Tickets for the concert can be obtained by sending a check for $2 per seat to IFC Presents, Box 11, University of Maryland, College Park, Maryland, with a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Also at its first meeting, the Council decided to organize a new group called The Carolina Sweethearts.

The purpose of this group will be to greet visiting athletic teams upon their arrival here and to "help these teams enjoy Carolina hospitality."

The group will be composed of an elected representative and an alternate from each woman's dorm, sorority and the Stray Greeks.

Orange To Abide Blue Law

The Orange Couny Board of Commissioners voted this week to abide by provisions of the State's Sunday "blue law." The law went into effect Sunday. It prohibits items in some 25 categories from being sold in stores on Sunday.

These items are basically hardware, home furnishings, appliances and clothing.

Merchants Association executive secretary Mrs. Jane Whitefield said the law would affect only two Chapel Hill stores, Mann's Drug and Kemp's Record Store.

Board Chairman Donald Stanford said that although he was opposed to "blue law" legislation, he understood the problem presented to other merchants by discount houses which sell on Sundays, thus gaining a monopoly market.

Orange County has no such discount houses yet, but the Commissioners felt that not exemtping the County from the law would deter their construction in this County in the future.

DISTRIBUTE BOOKS

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States is being "outgunned" by Russians in the number of books being published in non-Communist countries, U. S. Information Director Edward R. Murrow said Thursday.

Addressing the American Council on Education, Murrow said Russian books, distributed to non-Communist countries rose by 30 per cent last year to a high of 40 million volumes.

Urges U.S. Accept Duty In New Order

Gerald W. Johnson, nationally-known author and journalist, Wednesday night urged the United States "accept its duty to lead the world toward a better political order despite the danger of that course."

Johnson, delivering the Donald Round Mellett Lecture to UNC's School of Journalism at Howell Hall, said the nation could follow Mellet's principal of leadership in accepting that responsibility. Mellett, a newspaperman who was murdered as a result of his failure to back down from a crusade against gangsters in Ohio, believed "that a man in position to lead must lead, regardless of his personal safety, for the obligations of leadership overrides considerations of security. The same reasoning, it seems to me, may apply to a nation."

Duty Over Danger

Mellett, he continued, put his duty above danger, and is dead. If the U.S. accepts its duty "it may be a dead nation before it sees another Fourth of July. To deny the truth would be maudlin." Johnson further said that he did not know if the people of the U.S. were ready to accept such a risk.

Referring to the present polarization of power in the world at two centers, Russia and the United States, Johnson reminded his listeners of historian Arnold Toynbee's promise that a "death struggle ensues" when power is polarized at two centers. No matter who wins, "the civilization involved is mortally wounded," the former editor of the "Greensboro Daily News" continued. He gave historical analysis from Greek, Roman, and other ancient history to show "the story has always been the same" in the decay of Babylon, Athens, Sparta, Rome, and Carthage.

Death Struggle

"Since it has always been so, it is natural to assume that it must always be so," he continued. "In that case, the logical course is to prepare for the death struggle, knowing that nobody can win, but hoping that by a desperate effort we may at least last longer than the Russians. It is a profitless philosophy, but is any other conceivable?"

The journalist answered his own question with a "perhaps so." He said the Russians are a people possibly sharing the same hopes and fears as Americans, and "therefore it should be possible to communicate with them and reach an understanding that would eliminate the necessity of butchering them."

Johnson suggested that an attempt to get the Russians to "share with the American people the age-old dream of substituting the reign of law for the reign of force" might be helpful in relieving international tensions and possibly preventing destruction that might come in worldwide nuclear war.

In concluding his address to his audience of young journalists, Johnson said that he knew there was a time when the U.S. as a nation was willing to take the risk of leadership and that the "assumption of the risk led to all the true greatness that this nation has achieved; for in assuming it we, as a nation, fulfilled our highest destiny."

"So I believe that the greatest American (Thomas Jefferson), if he could return to advise us today, would repeat the advice that he gave us then. 'Let us,' he said, 'raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair; the event is in the hands of God.'"

Kennedy Schedule Released

By Garry Blanchard

The official timetable of President John F. Kennedy's flying trip here next Thursday to receive an honorary degree will be announced by the White House at 10 a.m. today, UNC News Bureau Director Pete Ivey said yesterday.

Ivey made the announcement after a late-afternoon meeting with UNC President William C. Friday and several Secret Service agents who Ivey said have been on campus since Monday.

No Changes

No changes from the president's tentative schedule, as already announced, are expected, Ivey indicated.

The tentative schedule calls for Gov. Terry Sanford and a host of University and political dignitaries to meet the President's plane at the Raleigh-Durham Airport when it lands about 10:15 a.m.

Dean Heard Named By JFK To Election Finance Committee

Alexander Heard, dean of the University Graduate School, has been named by President Kennedy to head a nine-member bi-partisan commission.

The newly formed commission will study the financing of presidential elections and propose ways of meeting campaign expenses.

Kennedy's interest in this field is evidenced in the fact that this was the first commission he appointed.

Heard, a Democrat, is a leading authority on the problems of campaign advertising. His 1960 book, "The Costs of Democracy," contains a great amount of information on this subject.

Harvard Grad

A native of Savannah, Ga., he is a 1938 graduate of UNC. At Columbia University he received his master's and doctorate and held a postgrad fellowship at Harvard in 1957-58.

In addition to "The Costs of Democracy," he has published "A Two Party South" in 1952, "Southern Primaries and Elections" (with Donald S. Strong, 1950) and "Southern Politics and the Nation" (with Professor V. O. Key, Jr., 1949).

The dean is president of the Southern Political Science Association, a member of the International Political Science Association, the American Science Association and the American Association of University Professors.

Speaker Sam Rayburn Dying Of Cancer—Hope Given Up

By Preston McGraw

DALLAS, Tex. (UPI) — House Speaker Sam Rayburn, 79, is dying of cancer. Hospital tests Thursday showed there was no hope. Rayburn was not told.

A surgeon took a sample of tissue from "Mr. Sam's" groin at Baylor University Medical Center Thursday and found in it a "metastatic malignancy."

This meant that the cancer developed somewhere else—probably in Rayburn's pancreas—and that the cells have broken loose and spread the malignancy to other parts of his body.

A spokesman for the hospital said the cancer probably has spread to most of the lower half of his body.

"No further surgery is anticipated," a bulletin announcing his condition said. A spokesman for the hospital said the only surgery performed was what was necessary to get the tissue sample.

Asked how long Rayburn will live, Dr. Robert F. Short Jr., in charge of his case, said: "There is no way of telling."

Rayburn was under sedation from the operation necessary to get the tissue sample when Dr. Short announced that he had cancer.

Johnson Refuses Comment

Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson, a protege of Rayburn, declined to comment at once when he heard that Rayburn has cancer. Johnson is at his ranch near Johnson City.

Dr. Short said he telephoned Dr. Janet Travell, President Kennedy's physician, in Washington an hour before he publicly announced that Rayburn had cancer.

When severe back pains forced the speaker to leave Washington Aug. 31, a month before Congress adjourned, he knew only that he had "lumbago." Rayburn said that had been the diagnosis of physicians in the capital.

Rayburn went to his home in Bonham, Tex., where he hoped rest would end the pains. They persisted and his Bonham physician urged him to go to Dallas for observation at Baylor University Medical Center.

Less than a month ago, Rayburn said persons predicting he would never return to Washington were "damned fools."

SAM RAYBURN

Elected In 1912

Rayburn was first elected to Congress in 1912. He had been re-elected every two years since. He served in the House longer than any other man in history and was speaker twice as long as any other man.

Eight presidents came and went while he served in the House. He made his position so powerful that it was exceeded only by the powers of the president. "Mr. Sam," acknowledging his own power, liked to say that he served "with" presidents, not "under" them. He was adviser to Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman and now, President Kennedy.

A spokesman for Baylor University Medical Center said that whether Rayburn ever learns he has cancer depends upon whether he demands to be told what is wrong with him.

If he demands to be told what is wrong with him, the spokesman said, it is the hospital's policy to tell him. If he doesn't ask, the information won't be volunteered.

Date Tickets Now Available At Half Price

Date tickets will be available to the Tennessee and Virginia football games at half price ($2.25), Bob Bilbro, president of the Carolina Athletic Council, reported Thursday.

At the CAA meeting Tuesday night, regret was expressed concerning the criticism raised recently about the feeding of athletic teams. Since the Monogram Club has been turned into a Faculty Club and dining room, the football team has been eating in a roped-off area of Lenoir Hall.

It is hoped that the stress in Lenoir will be considerably relieved by the re-opening of the Pine Room, now undergoing remodeling and by fraternity rush after which more students will be dining in the chapter houses, Bilbro said.

The Council went on to commend the general student conduct at the State-Carolina game, but requested that students note that no coolers or portable ice boxes are allowed in Kenan Stadium and that the ruling will be enforced by ushers and security officers.

Bonds, Sanford, Harriss

Governor Sanford gave UNC a vote of confidence yesterday by appointing student body President Bill Harriss chairman of the Students Committee for a Better North Carolina.

The committee will represent eight North Carolina schools which have appropriations at stake on Nov. 7 when the people of North Carolina vote on the $61.7 million bond election.

President Harriss and his committee will be responsible for mobilizing support for every item of the ten listed on the bond election ballot, with particular emphasis on item three: the issuance of approximately $3.1 million in bonds for needed improvements for the state's educational institutions.

Gov. Sanford picked a capable chairman in Bill Harriss. There can be little doubt that he will serve ably.

But Sanford did not pick just a man—he picked an entire student body. The major portion of the work to be done in polling an affirmative vote for higher education in November must be done by Carolina students. This is as it should be. The seat of the Greater University is here in Chapel Hill, and it is the largest state-supported institution in the higher educational system.

It cannot be overemphasized that Carolina students must exert an effort in putting educational needs before the people.

We are sure that Bill Harriss will prove to be the best choice for chairman. We hope that the students will support him and his committee.

Sam Rayburn

"There is no way of telling" how long Sam Rayburn will live, said his physician yesterday after announcing the Speaker's cancer.

But there is a way of telling.

One need only glance at Mr. Sam's person and his life to know that he will live longer than any doctor can know.

Sam Rayburn has stamped his life indelibly across the pages of history and life of America.

His stamp is one of great wisdom tempered with the responsibility of his great power.

It is a stamp wrought through the heat of America's most crucial years—a stamp marked with intimate knowledge of America in these years.

* * *

Sam Rayburn was Speaker of the House twice as long as any other man has been. Eight presidents served with him. Most learned from him.

They learned that the nation changes slowly. Some tried to change too fast; some tried to slow the change. They came and went. Sam Rayburn stayed.

Mr. Sam said, "As we grow, the government must grow. I don't shrink from the proposition, because where the government has grown, it has been adding something that was in the interest of the public."

Rayburn has indeed seen government grow. And he has seen it falter and be stopped when it grew too fast, just as he has seen it falter and stop when it grew too slow.

When children were introduced to Mr. Sam, he often asked "Do you have a farm?" When they answered no he said "That's too bad; I was going to give you some horses if you had."

He knew the country, like these children, needed a reason for change and a means to support the change once it came.

* * *

He is a big man, wrinkled and bald. He is quick to smile, and one can see that he enjoys smiling. But he can frown, and his frown is stamped with power. America is like this too, She enjoys smiling, but her frown is terrible. Mr. Sam reflects America, and America reflects Mr. Sam.

America reflects Mr. Sam because he has made so much of it. For years his power has been a close second to that of the president. He has weilded this power slowly and surely and for her good.

Like the Constitution, he has changed, but never too fast. But for his humanity Sam Rayburn will live as long as the Constitution.

* * *

Sam Rayburn will die from cancer. America may die from cancer.

But America will not die if she heeds the wisdom of Sam Rayburn. If she changes too fast she may die from within; if she changes too slow she may die from without.

Mr. Sam does not think she will die.

Last month he said, "I have absolute faith in the American people. I believe that more than 95 per cent of the American people have more good in them than bad. And, when properly appealed to, they will respond — now as they have in the past.

"I have never doubted the patriotism or the willingness of the American people to sacrifice and to do the right thing.

"So I look forward to living in this country at peace, I hope, and in friendliness for all good peoples of the world. We want other people to have their real life, and we want ours."

To have our life we must be as wise and as strong as Mr. Sam. We cannot move too fast or too slow, we must reflect his patience and courage.

All this was easier yesterday. Then we had Mr. Sam to guide us; now we must go alone.

He trusted us absolutely. We cannot fail him.

More Controversy On NSA Question

Somers Puts Challenge To Clotfelter Again

Mr. Clotfelter,

Realizing the futility of challenging your granite-like facts, I meekly offer these "shaky" ones.

After William F. Buckley Jr. startled the Liberals at the NSA convention by stating that he thought it impossible to equate the leaders of the American Revolution with the semi-savages of the Congo, four foreign students circulated a censure resolution against Mr. Buckley. The following is the pertinent half of the censure resolution:

* * *

WE CONSIDER CERTAIN remarks by William F. Buckley Jr. made at a student meeting at Madison Inn last night as most unfortunate and inopportune.

In the course of his speech and subsequent questions and answers, he referred to the Congolese leaders and people as "semi-savages," and refused to admit the righteousness of the Algerian demand for freedom.

This unabashed manifestation of the worst colonialist and racist mentality in a responsible American citizen left us outmounded and shocked. We condemn the remarks and attitude of Mr. Buckley with all the vehemence and indignation that we can command.

We believe such irresponsible remarks coming from a responsible citizen, nullify every sincere effort of this country to make friends with the countries of Asia and Africa.

Even though we believe that he is entitled to his opinions, we give vent to our feelings of profound shock and indignation in the hope that the American students assembled at the 14th Annual Student Congress, will give proper answers to these expressions of arrogance and prejudice, and thereby proclaim their solidarity with the freedom-loving people everywhere.

* * *

IN REPLY to this resolution, Mr. Buckley made this statement:

1) I believe people can be savages irrespective of race, color or creed. So much for the charge that I am a racist.

2) I do not believe that the leaders of the independence movement in Algeria have demonstrated that they are demanding freedom. What they are demanding is freedom from France. That is not the same thing as freedom. East Germany has freedom from West Germany. It does not, however, have freedom.

3) I suggest to the foreign students that they were no more shocked at my calling the Congolese insurrectionists "semi-savages," than I was shocked upon learning that some of said Congolese had taken to eating members of the opposition. On the other hand.

4) So-called non-savages, gathered about their own ideological totems, have their own way of eating the opposition, and sometimes I'm not sure which form is preferable.

5) I trust our foreign students will express their shock, of which they have, I hope, a few reserves after their lavish expenditure upon me, at the atrocities committed by Gizenga and Abbas, and other Free-domites.

* * *

THE FOUR STUDENTS who rebuked me come from Ceylon, Pakistan, Ethiopia, and Northern Rhodesia, respectively:

a) A state whose premier was recently murdered, and whose widow-successor has abolished the free press and restored public floggings for th opposition;

b) A state whose leader came to power by a coup d'etat and does not even pretend to preside over a free society;

c) A state whose leader has just declared a nationwide campaign of civil disobedience, to be effected by arson and gunfire. Perhaps the looseness with which these students handle the word "freedom" is the result of their own inexperience with it.

Or perhaps they are merely sharpening up on how to deal with dissenters, so as, upon returning to their native lands, to feel instantly at home.

These were the words spoken by Mr. Buckley. I submit that these words are quite different from the ones alleged by you, Mr. Clotfelter. In view of the Daily Tar Heel's tradition of accurate and fair reporting, I hesitate to present the "shaky" facts.

How Would Blind Feel When Reading?

I thought your numerous articles about the blind in Tuesday's Tar Heel were in extremely bad taste. I ask you, if you were blind, how would it make you feel to read things like that?

Your story about farmer Jack Caldwell of Burlington, Kentucky, despite its humorous intent, was very moving. You may be interested to know, however, that farming is only one of the many occupations open to the blind. According to the National Foundation for the Blind, there are approximately 7,014 occupations followed by the blind in the United States.

Despite your bad taste I found Tuesday's set of humorous personal sketches very entertaining. Keep up the good work.

Orientation Group Offers Thanks

Dear New Women Students:

You have been in classes nearly three weeks and I am sure that by now you really feel a part of Carolina. I will always remember the many friendly faces which I saw the night of our first meeting. No one could have been more excited than I at your arrival nor happier than I that you are now settled in your new home.

On behalf of the Orientation Committee and the counselors I want to express our appreciation for your interest, cooperation and for bearing with us during your first few days here. Without your desire to learn we could not have shared our experiences with you.

Many of you will be receiving evaluation sheets from my office and it will be appreciated if you will complete them so that the needs of future students may be better met.

If I can be of any help to you during the year, please call on me.

NSA 'Speaks To, Not For, Campus'?

During the past several months the National Student Association has been the target of severe, largely justified criticism of all levels of its administration.

Internal plagues like the questionable NSA financial operations, the unavailability of enlightening material on NSA and its workings, the refusal of NSA's president even to a college debater any specific major to debate the subject of whether colleges are needed within the association, and the refusal of a proposal presented to NSA by the Big 10 Presidents to provide for discussion of possible improvements have recently been exposed by concerned individual and student organizations who feel that these issues have too long gone unresolved.

But strangely enough, the real issue against the NSA lies not in its four-story office building in Philadelphia, but in the NSA Congress which meets each August somewhere in the Midwest.

* * *

DO MOST AMERICAN students favor a unilateral disarmament program for the U. S.? Do they condemn former President Truman and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover for suggesting that the civil rights movement was communist inspired? Are they all united against the loyalty oath in the National Defense Education Act? Do they support Japanese students who rioted against President Eisenhower because of "social and economic pressures" in Japan?

According to the NSA, whose constitution proudly begins "We the students of the United States . . ." they do. For their resolutions adopted at yearly congresses are touted as being the expression of the student viewpoint. NSA claims to represent more than "a million students." Realistically, the number of students who can even identify NSA is probably numbered in the thousands.

The method and adequacy of representation is frequently challenged. Here on UNC campus, our student legislature chooses our representatives to the yearly session.

They usually choose the delegates from student government officials who, as the student legislature who elected them, were not chosen by the student body for their political views, but rather for their competency in local governmental administration.

They can no more adequately express the political and economic concensus of this campus than could Chancellor Aycock or President Friday. fine and outstanding gentlemen, though they are.

* * *

THE OBVIOUS solution to this dilemma is a campus-wide election to determine UNC's official delegates.

Student government officers have "said it is impractical to hold campus-wide elections between the regular student body elections and final exam period." But what is to forbid these representatives from being chosen during and as a part of the regular annual elections.

Certainly they merit as much attention as the "Head Cheerleader." This is a practical and desirable solution to a most intolerable situation.

Under the present conditions, the NSA is representative of the "American studentry in the sense that it is interested in what the American student should be interested in."

As one of the NSA directors put it, "We aren't speaking for the campus, we're speaking to the campus."

This amounts to a case of isolated elite dictating politics and purporting them to be representative of the American student to the extent of telling him what he should believe in instead of using the traditional democratic method of asking him.

What is being done about this caustic blister on the skin of American students? Several colleges and universities have withdrawn from NSA; many more have threatened withdrawal if reforms are not instigated. The time has come to make a decision. We should be weary of abetting an organization which has abused, used, and misrepresented us.

Ex-UNC Student Amid California Political Turmoil

By HENRY MAYER
Special to The Daily Tar Heel

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA—October 1—Preliminary jousting for the governorship of California began here this week, and from the ensuing fireworks one is led to believe that we're in for a battle royal the likes of which Camelot never witnessed.

Amid loud, triumphant fanfares and the flourishing of the American flag, Milhous the Lion-Hearted declared his intention to make California safe for democracy—among other things. No sooner did his cliche-laden gauntlet reach the earth, than another GOP Knight, Goodwin the Ebullient, picked it up and threw it right back into Milhous' Max Factored face.

It seems that Sir Goodie was once Governor of California, a prestigious position, and was "dissuaded" by Milhous from seeking re-election in 1958. Milhous, the story goes, then offered the nomination to an ally, Sir William the Learned. Goodie was then forced to run for the Senate. Politics being a precarious sort of existence, both William and Goodie were defeated by the dastardly Democrats, and Pat the Personable moved into the Sacramento State House.

* * *

ACCORDING TO MEDIEVAL ethics, it is now Sir Goodie's turn to "get even" with the Lion-Hearted one. And so, he has also announced his intention to make California safe —from the predatory Milhous. To further this goal, he has let the word go forth that a Milhous aide offered him the position of Chief Justice of the California Supreme Court if he would not seek the nomination.

Milhous, who has done quite a bit to live down similar charges of chicanery in other epic campaigns, was understandably piqued at Sir Goodie and menacingly vowed that "in this race, let me say, people are going to have to substantiate the charges made against me."

"That's fine with me," responded Goodie and scheduled a mid-week press conference at which time he promised that he would name names and otherwise do Milhous in. As a parting sally he noted that his opponent was "no longer the 'Fighting Quaker' but the quaking fighter." The Lion-Hearted, who actually prefers to be known as the Pilgrim for Peace, growled back "This is libel" . . . and there the matter rests.

* * *

MEANWHILE, BACK AT the State House, Pat the Personable expressed pious horror at the alleged charges and talked gleefully about disarmament proceedings if the tables turned out to be true. He was silenced by an embarrassed Administration chap named Robert McClarity who implied that Sir Pat had also promised political favors, namely to run and then resegent on the ticket.

Touring the countryside during all this commotion was Sir Barry the Bellicose, a pretender to the throne who expressed interest in the proceedings. There were also reports in the neighborhood that Sir Nelson the Noble had offered the resources of his ample treasury to Sir Goodie in an attempt to forge a Sun-Milhous alliance.

ACROSS THE BAY, San Francisco's Independent, George Christopher "in command" registered the choicest comment of the week. Widely mentioned as a Lt. Governor candidate under the aegis of Milhous, Christopher noted sagely that "shortly I will have to make a judgment as to whether I want to seek higher office or return to my dairy farm and soul to my cattle."

If you want a suggestion, George, go back to the farm and keep the old cows healthy. The other contenders are going to need a fertile and continuous supply of mud! The election is still fourteen months away.

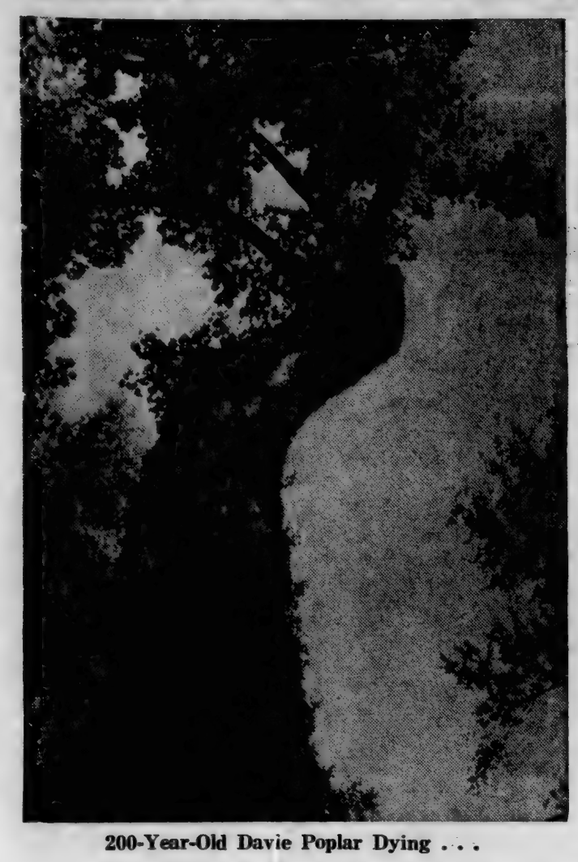
Decaying Davie Poplar Has Sheltered Classes And Confederates In 200 Years



200-Year-Old Davie Poplar Dying . . .

. . . Summer trim may add 25 more years

By Doug Perian

One can scarcely spend a day at Carolina without hearing some reference to the celebrated tree known as the Davie Poplar.

But what is so important about a decaying old poplar tree? How big and how old is it? And what is this "legend" surrounding the deciduous monument?

Davie Poplar has been growing about 200 years in the center of the Carolina campus. The tree measures almost 20 feet around the trunk and it is estimated increases one inch in circumference a year.

Legend has it that way back in 1793 William R. Davie of Halifax was traveling through Orange County and stopped to eat his lunch under the branches of a sapling. Impressed by the beauty of the area, Davie decided to locate the University on the site surrounding the young tree that now bears his name.

The history of the tree itself is a history of the University. Prof. Frederick H. Koch, who brought lasting fame to the Carolina Playmakers, taught his playwriting classes under its branches.

Dr. Ed Woodhouse discussed political history and world affairs in the shade of the poplar. General Sherman's horses grazed under the tree during the occupation of UNC and the South.

Until Kenan Stadium was built in the 1930's, Davie Poplar was the site of the annual commencement exercises. And every year homecoming alumni meet around the tree to talk of "the good old days."

Because of falling limbs, the University has considered cutting down Davie Poplar for almost a century. On several occasions the tree has been struck by lightning and ravaged by storms. Weather and time were killing the tree from within and last year it was evident that Davie Poplar was slowly and finally dying.

So a botanical summit conference was called to take drastic measures to save the landmark. This past summer Davie Poplar received what one newspaper writer described as "a genuine crew-cut." The upper branches were trimmed and 10 to 20 tons of wood, bark and leaves were removed.

Former Student Found Dead

Robert Smith Mauldin, 33, former graduate student from Hueytown, Ala., was found dead in his apartment at 713 Pritchard Ave. at 10 a.m. Wednesday.

He was found by Dr. K. Knudtzon of the School of Dentistry, where Mauldin worked as a TV technician and photographer.

Dr. W. W. Demeritt, superintendent of clinics, said that Mauldin had been ill Tuesday night and had not reported to work Wednesday. Dr. Knudtzon reported he saw Mauldin through the window when he went by to check on his condition. Dr. Knudtzon then went to get Dr. Demeritt and the police.

Dr. Demeritt said, "He was on the couch. He looked like he was watching TV." Demeritt said that Mauldin ran the closed circuit TV and was the photographer for the School of Dentistry Clinic.

Mauldin received his A.B. from Florida State in 1956. He came here in 1956 and had been doing graduate work in philosophy.

The coroner's jury yesterday said that he died of natural causes, but the coroner could not be reached for comment.

Kennedy Schedule

Kennedy is expected to make the 17-mile trip from the airport to the campus in the White House limousine—escorted by a student autocade—arriving in Chapel Hill shortly before 11 o'clock. The limousine is being transported here especially for the ride to and from the airport, Ivey said.

Accompanying the President will be an estimated 35 Washington newsmen and several aides. Mrs. Kennedy will not be along, Ivey said.

Crowd Expected

A crowd of about 30,000 persons and 120 newsmen are expected to be on hand in Kenan Stadium when the President and Gov. Sanford receive their honorary LL.D. degrees, after a formal faculty procession.

In the event of inclement weather, the ceremony will be conducted in Woollen Gym.

Speculation

Some observers have speculated that the President's remarks at the ceremony will center on U. S. policy in Berlin. However, there has been no official confirmation of this.

Kennedy and his entourage are expected to depart the campus about noon, return to the airport and fly on to Fort Bragg, N. C. to observe troop exercises.

The Daily Tar Heel is planning to provide photographic coverage of Kennedy's arrival there, as well as his arrival at the Raleigh-Durham Airport and his stay on campus.

Gunfire Incident Flares

(United Press International)

BERLIN — Communist police fired gunshots twice more into West Berlin Thursday and smashed a West German police car windshield with a barrage of stones. There were no casualties and West Berlin police did not return the fire.

But the Communist action—the second consecutive day of across-the-border shooting — heightened Berlin tensions. U.S. Army patrols were roaming the border under orders alerting them to "meet any situation that might arise."

The Communists protested officially as a threat to peace an incident Wednesday night in which East and West Berlin police exchanged about 40 shots.

The protest came after West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt conferred on tighter border patrols with retired Gen. Lucius D. Clay on Wednesday night's incident.

The State Department in Washington blamed the shooting on the Communists and said it seriously jeopardized peace and public order.

West Berlin officials noted that i each of Thursday's incidents West Berliners appeared to be the targets. In the past only refugees fleeing to the West have been the targets.

American Troops Ready

A U.S. Army spokesman said American troops patrolling the East-West Berlin border were "ready for any contingency." But he would not say whether they had been ordered to fire back if fired upon. The spokesman said West Berlin police have orders to protect West Berlin lives.

In Thursday's first incident the Communists fired four machine pistol shots at a West Berlin electric worker who strayed a yard into East Berlin while laying a cable. He was not hit.

The second incident flared when Communist police began throwing stones at a West Berlin loudspeaker truck near the border, smashing its windshield.

A police car rolled up and a Western policeman ordered the Reds to halt.

A Communist policeman threatened to shoot unless Western police withdrew. He then fired one machine pistol shot but missed.

The Communist protest was made by East Geman Interior Minister Karl Maron in letters to Brig. Gen. Jean Lacomme, Berlin's French commandant, and to Brandt. He said the West would bear full responsibility for the "serious results of such provocations."

Fire On Refugees

In Wednesday night's incident three Communist policemen opened fire while they chased two men who were trying to flee to West Berlin. The bullets spalttered into West Berlin and West Berlin police returned the fire, wounding one Vopo Communist people's police.

One of the would-be refugees was captured and dragged away with the wounded policeman. The other leaped to his death from the roof of a four-story apartment when he missed a safety net held by West Berlin firemen.

Maron's protest spoke of only one refugee and said he was a man who had committed a criminal act.

Odum Declines Debate Offer

YDC president LaFontaine Odum has declined the offer made by YRC president Earl Baker in last Friday's DTH to debate on the one-party system in North Carolina.

Odum said Wednesday that he does not have the time to personally enter a debate. He added "The chairman of our debate committee has contacted Earl Baker and they are trying to organize a debate between club members on the one-party issue or any other." Baker said yesterday that he had not been officially contacted.

Odum said before the Democrats knew of Baker's "president to president" challenge they had voted to invite the Republicans to debate "On any national or state issue."

"Baker," said Odum, "requested the floor at our meeting last Thursday night after we voted on the debate and told us then of the letter he had given the DTH for the next day."

Both clubs now consider that they issued the first challenge.

Cincinnati Evens World Series With Yankees As Joey Jay Wins With Four-Hitter By 6-2

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Reds' Rookies Play Big Part In Game

By Oscar Fraley
(Uniied Press International)

NEW YORK—Joey Jay's four-hit pitching led Cincinnati's castoffs to a 6-2 victory Thursday as they draped the scorned mantle of fielding "butchers" on the New York Yankees to square the World Series at one game each.

Jay, himself a retread from Milwaukee, took advantage of ailing Mickey Mantle's absence to handcuff Roger Maris and pitch himself out of several jams while the mighty Yankees simplified his task with three errors and a costly "nap" by catcher Elston Howard.

Behind him, the Reds played flawless ball and rapped loser Ralph Terry and reliever Luis Arroyo for nine hits—including a two-run homer in the fourth by Gordy Coleman. Jay faltered momentarily when Yogi Berra tied it up minutes later with a tying shot into the stands.

But then the Yankees — whose errors had set up Coleman s two-run drive—starting coming apart at the seams as the Reds played like the champions they have been telling the doubters they were.

Howard's Lapse Costly

Howard went to sleep at the plate with a passed ball in his hand while fleet Elio Chacon raced to the plate with the tie-breaking runs; the Reds added an insurance run in the sixth and then put it away with two more tallies in the eighth on two more Yankee errors.

It was a bitter defeat for Terry, the tall young right-hander who had waited long months for World Series vindication since serving up that losing home run to Pittsburgh's Bill Mazeroski just a year ago.

But the kid from Big Cabin, Okla., couldn't match the fire and finesse of towering Jay, or cope with the miscues which were supposed to be the private p operty of the Reds.

And, as the Yankees wert down to unexpected defeat, it was another gloomy day for Maris despite the chill sunshine which bathed 63,083 roaring spectators. For the man whose 61 homers this season were the most ever struck by a major leaguer, after being shut out in four trips Wednesday, had nothing to show for three official trips Thursday.

Boots Robinson's Grounder

The Reds jumped into a 2-0 lead in the top of the fourth inning when Cletis Boyer, the Yankee third baseman who was the fielding star of the opening game, found the truism of the old axiom concerning yesterday's heroes. The slick fielder booted Frank Robinson's grounder—and Coleman followed him by rifling his homer into the right field bleachers.

That lead wasn't destined to last more than a few minutes. Maris drew a lead-off walk in the bottom of the fourth and the crowd roared to life when the squat Berra poled his tying two - run homer into the lower rightfield seats.

For Berra, playing in a record 70th series game, it was the 12th homer of his long career in the classic and extended his series runs batted in record to 38. The Reds bounced right back for what was to be their biggest run with two out in the fifth for a 3-2 lead. thanks to the base-running of Chacon and Howard's lapse.

With two away, Chacon singled and went to third on Ed Kasko's single to center. With Vada Pinson at bat, Terry's passed ball drifted 10 feet in back of Howard and the Yankee catcher, with his eye on Kasko going down to second, never saw Chacon racing toward the plate.

Terry Reacts Slowly

Terry was slow in covering and the flying Venezuelan slid safely in under Howard's belated dive for the plate.

The Yankees made a bid in the bottom of the fifth when they put two on with one out—but Jay bore down to strike out Kubek and Maris, retiring the side.

Boyer walked and, after Terry popped up, the pesky Richardson came to bat. Little Bobby slashed a ground ball to short but Boyer, off with the pitch, beat the force at second and both runers were safe on the fielder's choice. That's when Jay hitched up his pants and stranded both runners.

The Reds ran their lead to 4-2 in the sixth, again with two out. Wally Post, another retread who once was let go by Cincinnati and was reclaimed again from the lowly Phillies, set it up with a double off the left field wall. Gene Freese was passed intentionally but the strategy backfired when Johnny Edwards, a .182-hitting substitute catcher, singled to right to send Post home.

Arroyo Called In

Terry departed disconsolately in the bottom of the seventh for a pinch-hitter after allowing six hits and four runs in seven innings and the Yankees called on Arroyo, the chunky Puerto Rican who has been the busiest relief man in Yankee history. But his luck—and his support—were no better than Terry's.

For in the top of the eighth, Arroyo began with a walk to Frank Robinson. Then Coleman topped a ball down the third base line and Arroyo threw wildly into right field. Robinson raced around to score but Coleman was out at third base as Yankee right fielder Johnny Blanchard whipped a strike to Boyer at third. Berra then lost Post's routine fly to left field, the ball squirting through his hands and legs and rolling all the way to the wall. Freese was passed intentionally but Edwards, the lightly-regarded rookie, blooped a broken-bat double over the infield which scored Post.

That was all Jay needed as he wrapped it up and sent the delirious Reds back home all even for resumption of the series Saturday in Crosley Field.

Yogi Berra, above, was both a hero and a goat for the Yankees in yesterday's contest. Berra crashed a 2-run homer to tie the game, but made a 3-base error which accounted for two Cincinnati tallies.

Howard, Berra Take Blame For Errors

By Milton Richman

NEW YORK (UPI) — Elston Howard and Yogi Berra both blamed themselves for key mistakes Thursday, joining the rest of the depressed New York Yankees in admitting they just kicked the ball game away.

Manager Ralph Houk, perhaps, took the 6-2 loss better than most of his players, showing little emotion and absolutely no anger while commenting, "It wasn't our day."

Howard stressed the fact that the fault was "entirely mine" on what could have been the key play of the game in the fifth inning.

The score was tied at 2-all at the time, there were two out and Elio Chacon was on third ad Eddie Kasko on first. Ralph Terry then came in with a pitch to Vada Pinson, the ball getting past Howard and rolling about 10 feet behind him.

Terry started off the mound but never got to home plate in time. Howard retrieved the ball, looked at Kasko heading for second, and then was too late when he tried to tag Chacon sliding into the plate.

"I blame myself, not Terry or anyone else," said the Yankee catcher. "I should have caught the ball in the fgirst place. "The ball hit my g love and popped out. I was looking at second. I didn't see Chacon until it was too late. My job is to look both ways. I didn't, and it cost us."

Berra was just as straight-forward as Howard in owning up to a three-base error he committed on Wally Post's eighth-inning liner.

"I didn't lose it i the sun," said Yogi, promptly disdaining any libi. "I just nonchalanted sic the ball, that's all. It hit the end of my glove and bounced through my legs."

Terry, the young right-hander who gave up Bill Mazeroski's homer in the seventh game last year that won the series for Pittsburgh, felt the Reds were entitled to their first two runs off him but not their last two. "The ball Gordie Colema hit for his two-run homer in the fourth came off a real good pitch," he said. "I give them those first two runs; but they sort of stole the next two off me."

Terry felt the most importat pitch he made all day was a 0-and-2 fast ball to rookie catcher John Edwards in the sixth.

Edwards singled past second baseman Bobby Richardson, scoring Post from second.

Tiger Fullbacks Are Big Problem Facing Carolina

By Ed Dupree

Fullbacks Ron Scrudato and Bill McGuirt head an experienced Clemson backfield which could prove to be a tought test for UNC's aggressive line in tomorrow's grid-iron encounter.

The Tar Heel line, led by Jim Lecompte and Jick Tillery, kept N. C. State's Roman Gabriel bottled up for three quarters and held the Wolfpack backfield to seven yards rushing in last week's 27-22 victory—but stopping the likes of Gary Barnes, Harry Pavilack, Scrudato and McGuirt may be a difficult task.

Joe Anderson, a 6-3, 210-pound junior, quarterbacks the Tiger eleven, but has the not-so-easy task of filling the empty shoes left by All-ACC Lowndes Shingler. Anderson is a good runner and passer as he exhibited in 1960 playing behind Shingler. As a sophomore, he completed 17 of 35 passes and had 369 yards total offense.

Soph Jim Parker, 6-1, 194, is Anderson's number one understudy at the signal-calling slot. Parker was the main cog for last year's frosh team and provides capable relief for Anderson.

Scrudato, 6-0, 200, and McGuirt, 6-1, 205, provide the visitors with a solid 1-2 fullback punch. Scrudato has a three-yard rushing average for two seasons and also excels on defense. McGuirt carried the ball for 320 yards in 99 carries and led the ACC in scoring as a sophomore last year with 54 points.

Gary Barnes, All-ACC at end last year, returns to handle the chores at right halfback. The 6-4, 190-pound senior snagged 14 passes for 256 yards and his speed could solve Clemson's backfield problems. Harry Pacilack and Bill Miller are other able performers at the position.

Wendall Black, a 6-0, 196-pound senior is currently the number one left half, but Mack Matthews and Elmo Lam, both juniors, should see a good deal o action in the backfield. Matthews led the Clemson team in rushing average with 4.5 last season and was also top man in punt and kickoff returns.

The Tiger line, anchored by big Ronnie Osborne, 6-4, 278 pounds, is just as tough on defense as the backs are on offense. Maryland had to go to the air to drop Clemson 24-21 last week and Jim Hickey's Tar Heels could use the same strategy. The Terps completed 19 of 26 passes for 219 yards in last week's victory.

Don Chuy, 6-1, 237, teams up with Osborne at the tackle positions. Calvin West, 6-1, 194, and Tommy Gue, 5-10, 186, handle the work at guards and Ron Andreo, 6-0, 196, is the top man at center.

End, a strong point on Coach Frank Howard's team, is headed by Coleman Glaze, 6-0, 195, a letterman at fullback last year and Johnny Case, a 6-4, 207-pound sophomore—the only soph on Clemson's starting unit.

Carolina-Clemson Action Opens With Freshman Tlit

The UNC and Clemson freshman football teams get the jump on their "big brothers" this afternoon when they tangle at Clemson.

Coach George Barclay's Tar Babies dropped their opener to the N. C. State frosh, 7-6, and will be out to even its mark at 1-1 against the Tiger Cubs.

The Clemson yearlings came from behind to drop Wake Forest last week, 35-26, and Barclay is expecting a tough game from the South Carolinians.

Ron Tuthill will be UNC's starting quarterback, with Gary Black expected to see a lot of duty. Ken Willard and Richard Zarro will share the work at fullback. Willard was outstanding in the opener against State and Zarro returns from the injured list to play his first game. Tommy Ward starts at right halfback and Ray Jones replaces the injured Dave Braine at the left half post.

In the line the Tar Babies will have Frank Gallagher and Christian Hanburger at the ends, John Hill and Bob Starczewski at tackle, Clint Eudy and Paul Fedor at guard, and Jay Malobicky at the center position.

Little Second Sacker Among Happiest Reds

Chacon Thought Howard Might Catch Him

Cincinnati Centerfielder Vada Pinson, above, has been a standout for the Reds in both of the World Series games thus far for his defensive speed and offensive daring.

By John Griffin

NEW YORK (UPI)—Little Elio Chacon, who scooted home with the run that put the Cincinnati Reds ahead to stay in Thursday's World Series game, confessed with a shy smile, "They all tried to stop me, but it was too late."

The tiny Venezuelan, who started the game as the substitute second baseman, was easily among the happiest of the Red players in their dressing room under vast Yankee Stadium.

All square in the series at one game each, the Reds now are headed home for Crosley Field for the next three games of the classic and even dour-faced Manager Fred Hutchinson had to admit, "I got to figure that is going to help us."

Chacon, who had singled and gone to third on Eddie Kasko's thought I had a chance to score," said Chacon. "The third base coach Reggie Otero called to me, 'Stop.' But it was too late for me to stop."

Chacon said he thought Howard "had a chance" to get him at the plate if he had thrown to pitcher Terry. But Howard hesitated, then just missed nailing Chacon with a headlong dive.

Joey Jay, whose four-hit hurling made the Reds' victory possible, was explaining how he retired single in the fifth inning, raced home with the run that put the Reds ahead, 3-2, when catcher Elston Hower muffed Ralph Terry's low pitch.

Favorites Win In Mural Play

By John Montague

League leaderships were at stake in Wednesday's fraternity blue games, and Sigma Nu, ATO, DKE and KA came out of the scramble with flying colors.

The big one saw Sigma Nu upset defending campus champion Zeta Psi by a score of 21-12. In doing so, Sigma Nu also gained the top position in League V with a 2-0 record. Morris Bernstein, Henry Strause and Roland Noblin tallied TD's for the winners, with a safety and a PAT by Noblin accounting for the other three points. Doug Fox scored both of the Zeta Psi touchdowns.

In a battle of unbeatens, ATO handed DU its first loss, 14-7. Jack Broadhurst and Sammy Simpson were TD scorers for ATO, while Jim Wicker and Foy Devine made the extra points. Dave Howe went over for DU, W. Y. Jobe adding the PAT. ATO now is on top in League II with a 3-0 mark.

DKE pushed ahead in League I, beating SAE on Gaston Caperton's extra point, 13-12. Bill Brown and Reggie Fountain notched the TD's for the winners. Mike Dodd accounted for all SAE scoring with two touchdowns.

KA downed SPE, 13-6, and assumed control of League VI with a 3-0 record. S. Hammer and H. Homesley scored the six-pointers for KA and C. Howell made the point after. Bill Blevins' TD was the only SPE score.

In other games, ZBT topped Phi Kappa Sig, 17-6, and Sigma Chi blanked Lambda Chi, 7-0. Touchdowns by Bill Hofseimer and Mark Schnitzer coupled with Hofheimer's PAT and two safeties did the trick for ZBT. Dave Crawford was the lone scorer for Phi Kappa Sig. A

Two Boys Found Dead In Cobb

Coroner Orders Autopsy

By Lloyd Little and Garry Blanchard

Two men students, roommates, were found dead in their beds in Cobb Dormitory about 11:30 a.m. yesterday. A short time later a coroner's jury was organized. After viewing the bodies in the room and hearing testimony from several students, the jury ruled death was due to unknown causes and ordered autopsies performed.

A janitor, Robert Holt, discovered the bodies of William Henry Harrison Johnson Jr., 24, a graduate student from Statesville, N. C., and James Michael Barham, 21, a junior from Burlington, N. C.

Holt said he went to the room at 11:30 at the request of George Prillaman, Lenoir Hall cafeteria manager, who said he called to find out why neither had reported for work.

Prillaman said he and a campus policeman drove immediately to the dormitory, after talking with Holt, then notified University and police authorities.

Holt and two other janitors said both students were clad in pajamas and were lying on their backs in bed. The janitors said a pillow completely covered the face of one of the students, and a blanket almost completely covered the face of the other.

Two of the janitors said they saw what appeared to be traces of foam on the faces of both, and both were lying in unnaturally straight positions.

Holt said he had cleaned their room about an hour earlier and had been surprised to find them still in bed. He said neither usually sleeps late. One's eyes were partially open, Holt said, but he gave it little thought.

Both Johnson and Barham were self-help students who worked in Lenoir Hall. Barham was also Cobb's 2nd floor dormitory manager. They lived in Room 201.

Several Chapel Hill policemen and detectives, additional campus policemen, members of the Orange County Sheriff's office and G. A. Cannady, assistant county coroner, arrived a short time later.

The only investigative information released on the case came about 3 p.m. from Cannady, who said the students had apparently been dead for several hours.

Cannady indicated that results of the autopsy, and the jury's subsequent findings, may not be known until late today at the earliest.

Based on the report of a student who asked not to be identified, Johnson and Barham were last seen alive shortly before midnight Thursday.

The student said he saw Barham collapse in the lavatory near his room about 11:30 p.m. Thursday.

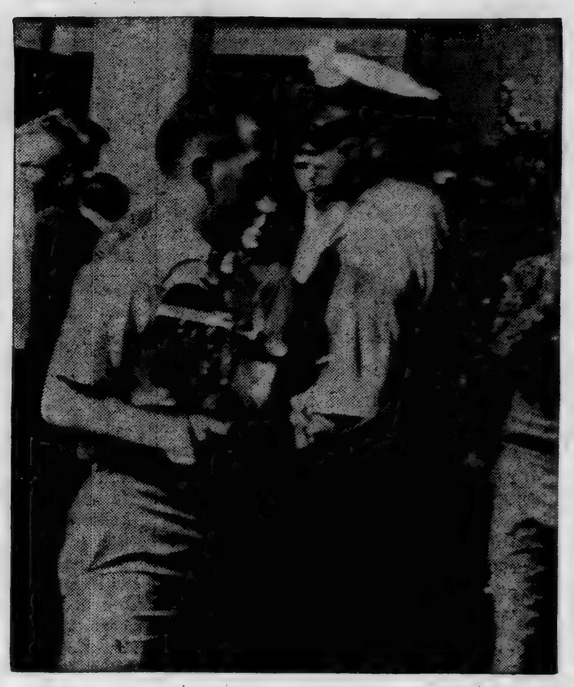
The student said he immediately went to Barham's roommate, Johnson, and told him what had happened. He said Johnson did not seem concerned and barely helped carry Barham back to the room.

After laying Barham on his bed, the student said he asked that a doctor be called, but Johnson replied he didn't think it necessary. The student said Johnson told him a doctor would be called later if Barham did not respond.

The student said he and the student who had helped carry Barham then stepped outside, and Johnson closed the door.

A medical authority, commenting on the possibility of food poisoning, said persons suffering from food poisoning usually find it difficult to sleep. If they do succeed in dropping off to sleep, the authority said, they usually will be awakened by the painful symptoms.

Shortly after 3 p.m. yesterday, a new lock was installed on the door of the students' room and campus policemen were ordered to standby in the hallway.



NO PICTURES ALLOWED—Newsmen and photographers yesterday found the going rough concerning the twin death in Cobb dorm. Photographers were ordered to leave the second floor where the victims roomed and later campus police and dormitory representatives blocked attempts to photograph the crowds surrounding the ambulance. Torch Marathon May Push Passage Of NC Bond Issue

Bill Harriss, newly appointed chairman of the Students Committee for a Better North Carolina, said yesterday that there are tentative plans to aid passage of the bond issue with a Torch for Education Marathon.

The committee plans to begin at the corners of the state with their torches and proceed to the capital, stopping to speak with the mayors and councilmen about the bond issue and hoping to mobilize 50,000 voters in favor of the education bond.

Harriss emphasized that the committee was not established expressly for the bond issue. He said, "The efforts of the Students Committee for a Better North Carolina will be primamily to explain the bond issue, not to plead for it."

Not Just Bond Issue

Harriss added, "The Committee was established not just for the bond issue, but for students and their efforts to make a better North Carolina."

The committee passed in their first meeting a resolution to invite the denominational colleges in the state to attend all committee meetings after the first on November 3.

A sub-committee was established to provide for better relations with the foreign students in the high schools and the colleges in the state. Later the SCBNC plans to establish county student clubs in order to exchange ideas and discuss problems of current interest to North Carolinians.

To Cooperate

Governor Terry Sanford said that he appointed the Committee to work in cooperation with the Citizens Committee for a Better North Carolina. He said that the Students Committee would work on passing the Bond Issue but that this would only be the first of their problems.

In a statement released by Governor Sanford he said, "Those who characterize our younger generation as silent, or apathetic, or uninterested should look to this state where students are demonstrating their concern about the kind of society in which they now live and will one day inherit."

Eight State Schools

The SCBNC is composed of the president and two representatives from the student bodies of eight state-supported schools. The advisor to the Committee is Dr. Leo Jenkins, president of East Carolina College.

The representatives from UNC besides Harriss are Larry McDevitt, Tom White and Al Pollard.

Harriss said that the idea of the Committee grew out of a discussion with Al Pollard, now the Chairman of the Committee for Radio and TV tapes. Harriss asked that all questions about the SCBNC be directed to him.

K. T. Mason

Dr. Caldwell was also active in many organizations. He was a thirty-second degree K. T. Mason and served in many high positions. He was governor of the N.C. Society of Mayflower Descendants between 1942 and 1945, president of the Archaeological Society of N.C. from 1933-1936, and a past vice-president of the American Archaeology Institute.

Clemson Under Beanies

That group of boys wandering around campus yesterday didn't really have orange heads. They were wearing bainies.

They were Frosh members of the Clemson band who arrived here at 2 p.m. for the game today. The beanies are "rat hats" and freshmen are compelled to wear them until they beat South Carolina on Nov. 11. If they don't win, they must wear them until Christmas.

In an interview, they said that the campus was beautiful and that the coeds didn't detract from its appearance. They also felt that North Carolinians couldn't spell, and cited as an example of this fault the UNC Cardboard Club's poster "Kill Klemson."

They boasted that they were going to "beat the hell out of Carolina" today.

Bond Issue Won't Increase Taxes, Says Sanford Aide

Joel Fleischman, legal advisor to Governor Sanford, told the UNC State Affairs Committee Thursday evening that the new bond issue would not raise N.C. taxes.

He explained that the issue would be paid for entirely by the surplus in the State budget. Mr. Fleischman described the bond issue as a means of leveling out the distribution of payments so that the state could pay for needed repairs in small sums each year.

Voting on the issue will take place Nov. 7, four weeks from now. Mr. Fleischman said, "It is imperative that students back the bond issue entirely, as the advancement of the state and the futures of UNC graduates depend on every issue being passed."

On The Students

He stressed that the bulk of responsibility will lie on the students at UNC since Bill Harriss has been appoined chairman of the Student Committee for a Better North Carolina.

In the past, issues have failed to be passed by margins as low as 3000 votes. Mr. Fleischman said that it would be quite possible that the students' participation in the campaign would mean the difference between success and failure.

Chief Objective

Fleischman cited the chief objective of the student body as publication of the reasons for the issue. Mr. Fleischman asked every student to write home at least three letters stressing the importance of the issue. One of these should be to the newspaper editor of the student's town.

The others should be to parents and to other important and outstanding members of the town.

"It is important that every radio, TV station, and newspaper get a letter from a student," he said.

Several other projects were listed. Among them are the possibilities of handing out information at football games, getting the cardboard sections to do plugs and sending delegations of students to see editors and radio stations.

SG Passes Bill On Intramurals

In a roll call vote Thursday night, Student Legislature appropriated $343 to the IDC for an experimental program which will hire four dormitory intramural managers.

The money provided by the IDC will be matched by the Intramural Department for a total of $686 divided between the four intramural directors.

Sponsor Bruce Welch said that the bill was proposed to relieve the lack of interest shown by the dormitory students in intramurals.

He said, "The managers will be paid $10.71 bi-weekly. They will be hired and fired by the IDC and the chairman of the Intramural Board."

To Study Program

A resolution asking for a study of the Faculty-Advisor program by the Academic Affairs Committee was passed. Rufus Edmiston was the bill sponsor.

The results of the Academic Affairs Committee's findings will be sent to the Dean of Student Affairs, Chancellor W. B. Aycock and the Dean of the Faculty.

A bill to clarify the women's legislative districts was passed which included the women of Victory Village in the Women's Town District.

Three Bills

There were three bills passed to submit revisions and amendments to the constitution to the student body. There was also a bill providing for the election of a geographically apportioned judicial system, which was tabled for reconsideration.

The bill to establish Parlance as a campus magazine and appropriate $1800 for the issues was tabled. The Finance Committee said that the editors had not explained any of the policies of the magazine to them.

Other bills passed were: a resolution to support the bond issue, appropriation of $225 to WUNC for records, a bill to revise the by-laws of the Publications Board and a bill to remove the absolute compliance to "Roberts Rules of Order" from the constitution.

Rush Invitations

Social fraternity rushees have been urged by the Interfraternity Council to pick up rush invitations today.

Informed Public

Speculation and rumor always fly on the heels of any incident about which the facts are not fully known. The deaths of two students in Cobb discovered yesterday is such an incident.

Until a coroner's report is completed and all the facts assembled, the tide of unfounded rumor will swell.

The dangers of such rumor are manifold. The University can be hurt, as well as persons who are directly or indirectly involved.

The Daily Tar Heel has attempted to discover, so far as possible, any and all facts surrounding the deaths. These facts appear on page one of this issue. At press time, this is all the reliable and validated information that could be gathered.

It should be pointed out that the handling of the incident by authorities on the scene was anything but efficient. The law enforcement officials who investigated in Cobb shortly after the bodies were found seemed more disorganized than the bystanders. It was difficult to ascertain exactly who was in charge. Chapel Hill police and detectives, campus policemen, the assistant county coroner, the county sheriff and his deputy were all on the scene and issuing conflicting directives to reporters and students. This handling made it difficult to get a complete and reliable account of the happening.

The aim seemed to be more to confuse the press than to assist in seeing that correct information was reported.

While there is reason to desire that news of this type be handled carefully, there is more reason to see that any news that is reported is valid and as complete as possible. The only defense against damaging rumor is accurate, full compilation of the facts. Such compilation is difficult under circumstances such as were allowed to develop in Cobb yesterday.

In a story of this nature, an incomplete report can result in the reader attempting to fill in the unknown portions with unfounded rumor.

The disorganized manner in which officials in Cobb dealt with the incident is a poor reflection on the quality of law enforcement in Chapel Hill.

Law Enforcement

Governor Sanford had some very good advice for school executives in a talk he gave recently. He told them that it is their responsibility to keep the public informed about the public schools — both the good and the bad news about them.

Actually, the Governor could have told the school officials just to be sure that the good news about schools gets to the public. Bad news travels fast, and people will hear the bad school news almost as soon as it happens. Good news travels slowly, if it travels at all, and someone always has to ferret it out and see that it is gotten to the public.

Too many school leaders don't do anything about seeing to it that the good news gets to the people. Newspapers are delighted to get school news, the good, routine news of the classrooms and the children and the teachers, but so very few school people make it their business to let the newspapers know about such good news.

In too many instances, school officials give the impression—whether they mean to or not—that they'd just rather not be bothered.

Yet, the day-to-day good news of the schools is really the story of quality education in North Carolina. The news that little Susie so and so has done the best poster in the whole school is worth telling and is worth printing. Yet, unless Susie's principle tells that news, very few people will ever hear about it.

For years, we have heard the same story every legislative hearing about how our low teacher pay has made it so hard, if not impossible, to get really good teachers in our schools and to hold them once we get them. Now, the teachers have a sizeable increase in pay, but has there been any flood of statements from school leaders about what good teachers we are getting now, and how much easier it is to hold them? Have the school leaders made it their business to tell the good news about what really good teachers we do have, and how many really good teachers we've had all along?

The business of telling the good news about the schools is something which must be carried on each day. A community which is told all the news about its school will have pride in that school. A community which is proud of its school supports that school in the things it needs and must have.

The people are very conscious now of the fact that they are paying a new tax, the tax on food, for quality education. The best way to convince them that they are getting full value for their money is to tell them the school story each day.

Only the school people can tell the story, and the sad truth is that the school people just aren't doing it.

A Further Report On The Cannibals

The recent formation of a National Asociation for the advancement of Colored Cannibals has brought a flurry of statements from public figures during the past week.

John Z. Flynn stated that the organization is obviously a part of the "greater Jewish-Catholic-Communist-Negro conspiracy to dominate the world. In these days of crisis," he continued, "we cannot allow the higly-placed Communists in our government to derail us with arguments on so-called minority rights. We must have prompt and stringent measures against all advocates of this ideta and their backers, whose socialist tendencies make them readily identifiable."

TRUE TO THEIR WORD, authorities in some Mississippi towns held big Saturday night lynchings. Two ministers, one union man, and a harmless old necrophile fell victim to these proceedings. All except the latter were Negro. Unsatisfied with these mild reactions to the NAACC, Herr Lincoln Rockwell of Alexandria, Virginia propsed a plan: "I am confident that I speak for a good number of True Americans in pointing out the savagery of the Niggra Race.

Our task and duty is to purge the nation of these and other elements which corrupt True Americanism. The easiest solution is to quarantine such groups in special camps pending the final solution of this question. Providing the transportation to carry out this program will be a job without glory or responsibility, but, as a True American Patriot, I stand ready to submit to any sacrifice for the good of the Fatherland."

* * *

REACTION IN THE different departments of government were varied. A member of the Senate said he thought the 'Freedom Eaters' Bus' idea was "absolutely adorable" and that he "did hope that nice Mr. Wolfenden would like to do a report on it."

A prominent member of the House announced his intention of exposing "everybody who's got anything to do with this thing—and I mean everybody." Robert Welcher, editor and the Representative's chief aide elucidated further: "Certain higaly placed individuals in the State department who have served there have expressed considerable respect for the nations and customs of Atrica. This sort of un-American attitude cannot be tolerated."

He also said that many merican clergymen and missionaries probably have close ties with the cannibal organization, as they openly admit aiding Aucas and similar tribes.

"Every missionary society in America is probably abetting the movement. We will expose its real leader in the course of subsequent investigations," Welcher concluded.

spokesman issued a statement saying: "The Constitution clearly provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

While the NAACP is free to advocate and believe whatever it likes so long as it remains either Democratic or Republican, the attempt to serve Baptists on the halfshell or anybody anyway for the purpose of eating will be met with stern justice."

* * *

CONCLUDING A WEEK of controversy, an NSA spokesman declared: "We deplore the NAACC and its doctrine of cannibalism; we hope that the police will take all legal steps protecting citizens from this threat. As in most other cases, we will not endorse the suppression of these views, holding with Thomas Jefferson that we should: 'tolerate error so long as reason is left free to combat it.' If democracy is the right to make mistakes, we must tolerate their views while reminding them of the consequences of violating our rights."

MARTIN L. WILSON

Thanks To S.C.'s Courageous Senator

Due to an overwhelming public response and to his own courageous and relentless efforts, Senator Strom Thurmond has won his fight for a Congressional investigation into the Defense Department's muzzling of the United States military. Thurmond had arrayed against him the Defense Department, every left-wing element in the country, and the Kennedy Administration itself.

But the American People's growing awareness of the total Communist threat was in evidence as an indignant public rallied to Thurmond's side to help him force the issue.

* * *

SINCE BEGINING his campaign for an investigation, Thurmond has been daily maligned and abused by the left-wing liberal press in their efforts to smear him, by innuendo or worse, in any manner possible.

It is significant to note that these same papers have long been advocates of the dangerous appeasement attitudes toward Communism, and have rushed to its defense at every opportunity.

They once referred to the Chinese Reds as simply "agrarian reformers" and dutifully dubbed one Fidel Castro as the "George Washington of Cuba." It was no surprise to see them leap to the aid of the Pentagon censors.

THE INVESTIGATION that Thurmond wants covers vast territory, but it has one central theme: Just why should an American, military or civilian, not be permitted to speak out on the Communist menace? We are dealing with the greatest mass murderers in history, butchers who have declared that they "will bury you." What is the sin in opposing these swine, for the safety of ourselves and for the generations to come? Why should we be the least bit concerned about appeasing atheistic liars who say, "Let's co-exisit—until I bury you."

YET THE DEFENSE Department is evidently taking the position that it just isn't civil and right that we criticize "good ole Nicky."

To make matters even worse, the President, in the true tradition of the modern Harvardian, has given his support to this Defense Department policy. He expects to stand firm in Berlin, but a firm stand at home is regarded as dangerous.

Senator Thurmond has said that the appeasers have evidence these same elements are still there. Defense Secretary McNamara admitted as much, but says that he will not name the censors involved, and that he will accept all responsibility. He further stated that he has no intention of firing the censors involved. So there they remain.

THE KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION is aligned against the investigation, and its opposition will be hard to crack. For that reason, it is doubtful that Thurmond and the committee will get the answers to all the questions they ask. But the softies in the Pentagon have been put on notice that the American people and their representatives will no longer tolerate a soft lackadaisal approach toward Communism. For this, we have the courageous Senator from South Carolina to thank—and great thanks it is.

Berlin Wall: Story Of Tragedy

BERLIN—The concrete and barbed wire wall thrown across Berlin by the Communists jolted West Berlin industry, but essentially it remains a story of human tragedy.

It is a close-up look at a divided world, a twice-told tale that cannot lose its chilling impact.

The impact becomes the greater because this is October festival time in Germany, and in West Berlin, where gaiety and tension can blend to become indistinguishable, the lights of a gay carnival reflects against the night sky only a few hundred yards from the wall.

* * *

THE ONLY CROSSING POINT between East and West left open to foreigners now is on the Friedrichstrasse.

Here, separated by a distance of less than 100 yards, stand American GIs on the one hand and East German vopos (so-called people's police) who guard the Communist barricades on the other.

The division suddenly becomes very real.

"Check Point Charlie," the Americans call it.

The young GI checks the American passport and writes down the name.

* * *

"IT'S BEST THAT you always check in here, sir, before going over," he says. "That way we'll know if you don't come back."

It was a reminder that at least three Americans have crossed over in recent days and still are somewhere back of the wall.

The car creeps forward toward the vopos who stand with tommyguns slung over their backs.

Once again the passport examination. The vopos are polite but Westerners take no chance on such surface appearances.

* * *

Automobile windows are kept rolled up to make sure that an ambitious vopo does not suddenly reach inside to seize an ignition key, or rifle a glove compartment in search of a pretext for arrest.

The passports are returned and UPI correspondent Ted Shields climbs from the driver's seat to open the luggage compartment to show that he is smuggling nothing in.

On the return trip he will open it again to prove that he is smuggling no one out.

* * *

AHEAD LIES the concrete maze. A woman East German doctor achieved the impossible the other day, threading it at high speed with her 12-year-old son in the car before the vopos had a chance to shoot.

Here, where East Germans still plot their escapes and occasionally die in the trying, West Berliners have their greatest argument that there can be no barter in human lives.

Clashes Due In Congress

By Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Although Congress goes home from the 1961 session with an impressive record of legislative accomplishment, some of the toughest decisions of all have been put off until next year.

Several of the postponed questions lie in one of the most fundamental, and difficult areas of legislative activity—taxation. They include President Kennedy's proposals for a general tax overhaul, as well as his requests for medical care for the aged financed by increased Social Security taxes, and a permanent overhaul of the unemployment compensation system, also involving a tax increase.

All of these measures have the ingredients for a rip-roaring "liberal-conservative" clash in the 1962 election year session.

* * *

OTHER TOUGH matters coming up next year are a revision of the foreign trade laws and development of a national transportation policy. Both subjects involve a host of conflicting interests and will be extremely difficult to resolve.

Sharp fights also can be expected in 1962 over extension of the Sugar Act, due to expire June 30,, enactment of a bill creating a Wilderness System, which only got through the Senate this year, enactment of new migrant labor laws, which met the same fate, and the perennial issue of increasing postal rates—provided a postal bill ever gets to the floor.

* * *

FEDERAL AID to education could prove to be a source of controversy again next year, although at the moment the subject looks dead until Mr. Kennedy gets a new Congress in 1963.

Among the major achievements of 1961 were a depressed areas bill, a precedent-breaking minimum wage law, a temporary unemployment compensation program, a liberalization of Social Security benefits, and a massive housing program. All of these represented victories for Mr. Kennedy.

* * *

IN ADDITION, new financing was found for the nation's superhighway program and a farm bill was enacted that moved—in gutted form—toward the President's "supply management" concept.

Toward the end of the session the President asked and received a record peacetime defense appropriation, was assured of legislative sanction for his Peace Corps, and got most of the money he requested for 1962 foreign aid, although the bill fell well short of what he had requested in long-term funding.

* * *

A NUMBER of other programs reached the White House, including expanded airport grants, more money for research on saline water conversion, and additional assistance for sewage treatment plant construction as well as for community health services.

In a number of instances, democratic programs which were seeded and nurtured in six years of Democratic congressional control since 1955 were ready to bear fruit with the accession of a Democratic President, and Mr. Kennedy reaped the harvest of these efforts.

SAIL ON, SAIL ON!

I suppose October 12 is just another day to you. You get up in the ordinary way and do all the ordinary things you ordinarily do. You have your breakfast, you walk your ocelot, you go to classes, you write home for money, you burn the dean in effigy, you watch Howdy-Doody, and you go to bed. And do you give one little thought to the fact that October 12 is Columbus Day? No, you do not.

Nobody thinks about Columbus these days. Let us, therefore, pause for a moment and retell his ever-glorious, endlessly stirring saga.

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa on August 25, 1451. His father, Ralph T. Columbus, was in the three-minute auto wash game. His mother, Eleanor (Swifty) Columbus, was a sprinter. Christopher was an only child, except for his four brothers and eight sisters. With his father busy all day at the auto wash and his mother constantly away at track meets, young Columbus was left pretty much to his own devices. However, the lad did not sulk or brood. He was an avid reader and spent all his waking hours immersed in a book. Unfortunately, there was only one book in Genoa at the time—Care of the Horse by Aristotle—and after several years of reading Care of the Horse, Columbus grew restless. So when rumor reached him that there was another book in Barcelona, off he ran as fast as his fat little legs would carry him.

The rumor, alas, proved false. The only book in Barcelona was Cuidar un Caballo by Aristotle, which proved to be nothing more than a Spanish translation of Care of the Horse.

Bitterly disappointed, Columbus began to dream of going to India where, according to legend, there were thousands of books. But the only way to go to India was on horseback, and after so many years of reading Care of the Horse, Columbus never wanted to clap eyes on a horse again. Then a new thought struck him: perhaps it was possible to get to India by sea!

Fired with his revolutionary new idea, Columbus raced to the court of Ferdinand and Isabella on his little fat legs (Columbus, though six feet tall, was plagued with little fat legs all his life) and pleaded his case with such fervor that the rulers were persuaded.

On October 12, 1492, Columbus set foot on the New World. The following year he returned to Spain with a cargo of wonders never before seen in Europe—spices and metals and plants and flowers and—most wondrous of all—tobacco! Oh, what a sensation tobacco caused in Europe! The filter had long since been invented (by Aristotle, curiously enough) but nobody knew what to do with it. Now Columbus, the Great Discoverer, made still another great discovery: he took a filter, put tobacco in front of it, and invented the world's first filter cigarette!

Through the centuries filters have been steadily improved and so has tobacco, until today we have achieved the ultimate in the filter cigarette—Marlboro, of course! Oh, what a piece of work is Marlboro! Great tobacco, great filter, great smoke! And so, good friends, when next you enjoy a fine Marlboro Cigarette, give a thought to the plucky Genoese, Christopher Columbus, whose vision and perseverance made the whole lovely thing possible.

Tar Heels In Try For Fourth Straight Win

By Harry W. Lloyd
DTH Sports Editor

Can the Tar Heel football team win their fourth game in a row? That is the question some 35,000 fans will be asking themselves here this afternoon when the Carolina gridders play host to fired-up Clemson, the losers of two tight ball games already this season.

The important Atlantic Coast Conference battle will begin at 2 p.m. in Kenan Stadium where last week the Tar Heels whipped N. C. State by 27-22. That win was the first of the season for Jim Hickey's Heels, but they won the final two games of the 1960 season over Duke and Virginia, and now have a 3-game string.

Frank Howard's orange Tigers are in the unusual position of having lost two straight. Florida tripped them up on a field goal in their first encounter, and Maryland nipped them by 3 points last week.

Directing the Clemson attack today will be Joe Anderson, a junior, with converted end Gary Barnes and Wendell Black at halfback, and Ron Scrudato at fullback. In the line will be Coleman Glaze and Bob Poole at ends, Ronnie Osborne and Dave Hynes at tackles, Calvin West and Lon Armstrong at guards, and Jack Veronee at center.

Many have expected the Tar Heels to convert their successful ground game of last week into an air attack today. The Tigers failed miserably in both of their first games at attempts to stop passing.

Quarterback Ray Farriss, with topnotch receivers in ends Conrad Sloop, John Runco, Steve Yates, and George Knox, halfbacks Gib Carson and Lenny Beck, and swing man Bob Lacey may go to the air today.

Gib Carson, who scored three times last week, will be back in the starting lineup today. Hard-running Bob Elliott, with 85 yards last week, will be at fullback.

The Carolina line is unchanged, with tackles Jim Shumate and Tony Hennessey, guards Duff Greene and Jim LeCompte, and center Joe Craver.

Booters Play At Annapolis With Middies

UNC's varsity soccer team travels to Annapolis, Maryland, today to tangle with the Naval Academy booters.

The Tar Heels opened their season Tuesday with a 2-0 victory over Roanoke College and will be hoping to keep their record clean against the Midshipmen. Coach Marvin Allen says that the Navy team will be a tough opponent for his Carolina booters. They have always had strong soccer teams and opened the season on a successful note last week. This is Carolina's first match with Navy since 1950.

G	Tom Griffith
RB	Bob Jones
LB	Dick Bordogna
RH	Bill Sidbury
CH	Bill Snyder
LH	George Beim
OR	Kingman Brown
IR	John Kendrick
CF	Pete Blake
IL	Bill Shettle
OL	Herman Prakke

Mantle May Play In Third Series Game

By Oscar Fraley
(United Press International)

CINCINNATI, Ohio — Mickey Mantle blasted six practice "home runs" Friday and boosted New York Yankee hopes that he will be able to start in the third game of the deadlocked World Series here Saturday.

The Yankees have named fireballing young Bill Stafford to pitch Saturday, while the bargain basement Reds, bursting with confidence, picked knuckle-baller Bob Purkey as their hurler.

But Mantle, who missed the first two games because of an unhealed abscess on his hip, stole the show in workouts at little Crosley Field Saturday with an awesome display of slugging power. He took 10 swings against batting practice pitcher Red Murray and hit five balls into the right field stands and one over the center field fence.

"It didn't hurt a bit," he said with a wide grin when he stepped out of the batting cage.

After this workout swinging left-handed, Mantle rested a half-hour and then returned to take eight swings right-handed. This time he hit only one "homer"—that carried 25 feet over the 40-foot high fence in left field and drew gasps from about 200 fans who watched the practice session.

Clemson Runners Compete With UNC Here At 11:30

By Harry Tocce

UNC opens its cross-country track season here at 11:30 a.m. against a strong Clemson squad.

Led by Jerry Stuver and Rhett Everett, Carolina's conference champions will be out to defeat the Tigers' ace, Jim Morehead.

It was Morehead who led Clemson when they out-ran the Tar Heels in a dual meet last year. Coach Dale Ranson and his team haven't forgotten.

Morehead's sophomore brother, John, is also expected to be a threat. Coach Ranson said that he is a newcomer who has a fine reputation.

Stuver was the pace-setter in last Wednesday's time trials, covering three miles in approximately 15:25 minutes. Charles Little was second followed by Everett, Larry Henry and Bob Bennett. Finishing times were not kept during the trials, but checkers were spotted along the course to record the pace of each runner.

The squad is looking forward to Saturday very much. "All of our boys are in good shape," said Ranson.

The meet will begin at the first tee of Finley golf course and will end on the dirt road directly back of the University Motel. Its distance will be 4.1 miles.

Everett finished first in last year's conference meet. Stuver was second, Mike Folk fourth and Carmine Lunetta sixth. They will all run Saturday. Coach Ranson has expressed confidence in his runners and looks forward to the meet.

Clemson Pastes 27-0 Defeat On Tar Heels

By Harry W. Lloyd

A hard-hitting Clemson football team defied its underdog role here yesterday and battled its way to a stunning 27-0 defeat of North Carolina.

Frank Howard's Tigers, beaten in both of their previous starts, came back like mad dogs and quickly knocked the spark out of the Tar Heels. For the game, Clemson dominated practically all departments.

At first the game appeared to be just a kicking contest, with Carolina's Ray Farris and Clemson's Eddie Werntz swapping a series of high sailing boots. But the Tigers struck gold on a 23-yard pass play late in the first quarter, went ahead by two touchdowns with a long aerial in the second, and then wrapped up the game with two short scoring runs in the final period.

The vicious Clemson ground game ripped apart the Carolina line, but it was the passing that broke the Tar Heels' back. Second-team quarterback Jim Parker, a sophomore who actually plays more than starter Joe Anderson, threw 8 times and connected 4 times for 69 yards. It was his pass to end Tommy King that accounted for the first score.

60-Yard Punts

Clemson took the game-opening kickoff and started play on their 24. In two running plays, they gained but 4 yards and a third down pass went through the receiver's hands. Werntz then got off a long kick that Carolina safetyman John Flournoy misjudged and allowed to sail over his head. The punt went for 63 yards and put the Tar Heels back on their 10-yard-line.

The Tar Heels started off right, but couldn't provide the pass protection that Farris needed. On the first series, halfback Gib Carson went 10 yards in two plays for a first down, but two losses on the following series forced Farris to punt.

His kick went well over the head of Clemson's Wendall Black, who chased it down after it had gone for 67 yards and returned it 17. The Tigers gained a first down on a 28-yard pass from Parker to Elmo Lam, but then lost the ball on downs at the Carolina 31.

Lacey Drops

Farris' third down pass was dropped by Bob Lacey, and Carolina had to kick again. Clemson took over on their own 40 following the 40-yard kick.

Then the Clemson ground game, which had heretofore been held in check, began to break loose. On the first play, Lam picked up a first down with a dive over right tackle. Bill McGuirt, Parker, and Harry Pavilack of the second team

Jury Says Death By Cyanide For Two Students In Dorm

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

CYANIDE POISONING—Assistant Orange County Coroner G. A. Cannady explains to newsmen that the coroner's jury last night ruled "cyanide poisoning" as the cause of death for two UNC students found dead yesterday in Cobb dormitory.—Photo by Crowell.

Case Turned Over To Sheriff, Police

By GARRY BLANCHARD and WAYNE KING

A six-man jury ruled last night that two men students found dead in their dormitory room shortly before noon Friday died from cyanide poisoning.

The ruling was based on the results of autopsies performed Friday afternoon on the bodies of William Henry Harrison Johnson, Jr., 24, and James Michael Barham, 21.

The ruling said the kind of cyanide used, the amount, form and means of administering is not known. No cyanide was found in the room.

The case has been turned over to the Orange County Sheriff's office and local police.

Chemical analysis of certain vital organs and of two milkshake cups and food—cookies, peanut butter, crackers and fruit—found in the room is expected to provide additional information sometime this week.

NO CONNECTION

Meanwhile authorities have denied the possibility of any link between the deaths of the two students and that of University photographer Robetr Smith Mauldin who was found dead in his off-campus room Thursday.

Chapel Hill police said any connection between the two cases is "out of the question."

A coroner's jury ruled Mauldin died of natural causes, "possibly a heart attack," according to George Cannady, assistnt county coroner.

Cannady said Mauldin, a 33-year-old former graduate student here, "had been sick for some time and under a doctor's care" and that he felt "there is no connection whatsoever between the students' and Mauldin's deaths.

FOUND DEAD

Johnson and Barham were found dead by a janitor sent to awaken them when they failed to report for work at Lenoir Hall Friday morning.

The janitor, Robert Holt, said he had cleaned their room an hour earlier and had been surprised to find them both "asleep," but gave it little thought.

Holt said both were wearing pajamas and lying on their backs in bed. Barham's eyes were partially open, he said.

Holt and two other janitors said a pillow completely covered Johnson's face and a blanket nearly covered Barham's.

REPORTS CONFIRMED

Cannady confirmed that the two were last seen alive around midnight Thursday when Barham reported collapsed in the lavatory near his room and had to be carried to the room.

Johnson and Barham were found in the wrong beds, he explained, because Johnson is said to have told the students carrying Barham to "put him in this bed"—meaning Johnson's bed, nearest the door.

Cannady further confirmed reports which said:

—No evidence of foul play has been detected.

—Everything in the room was in order.

—Traces of foam were found on both students' faces.

Cannady, however, said the foam probably resulted from a normal process known as "purging," which follows death. "It's nothing out of the ordinary," he said.

The jury arrived at its verdict nearly an hour after it reconvened at 6 p.m.

Cannady said the ruling disposed the case, so far as he and the jury were concerned.

He listed the six jurors as Max C. Weaver, David L. Curl, Thomas D. Council, F. J. Williams Sr., all of Chapel Hill; and H. L. Hackney and Nick Watts, both of Carrboro.

Barham, dormitory floor manager, was described by friends as outgoing and friendly.

Johnson was said to be "very quiet."

Both were average students with good records, according to Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson.

Barham was a junior and had indicated interest in pre-medical training. He was active in the UNC Band and had been elected to Pi Alpha Mu Sinfonia, UNC honorary music fraternity. Friends said he never drank.

Johnson was a graduate student in Industrial Relations.

The two were roommates for the first time this semester.

Barham was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Houston Barham of Burlington. Johnson was the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. H. Johnson of Statesville.

Funeral services for Barham will be conducted at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington.

The Johnson funeral services will be conducted at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in Johnson's Funeral Home Chapel, Statesville, and burial will be in Oakwood Cemetery, Statesville.

During The Game... Blue Law Remarks

By Bill Dowell

Chapel Hill during the game: People talking about the blue law: "Yes it limits clothing, hardware, records, guitar strings, desk lamps, luggage and baby pants. As far as I am concerned they haven't done enough."

"A law is a law if its there you gotta obey it. Thats all I can see. Besides it doesn't effect us anyway."

"No, Kemp isn't here, but I bet if he were he could tell you in three words."

Just plain seen and heard while walking around: "Litterbug, litterbug, I wanna a litter bug."

"Hi, ya white."

"UNC scores double touchdown in last thirty seconds!"

"I have fifty or sixty Civil War mugs."

"We? who are you?"

"27 to nothing."

"Hi!"

"Ah, North Carolina!"

"Miami is good."

"Alpha Pheta fraternity is really tough."

"May."

"All the way through."

Church bells the clicking of high heel shoes.

"Raghht heah."

"Its so hard to get any kind." Carillon and jazz.

"I don't know."

"I bet there ain't nothin' jumping in that frat house."

"That's a pretty good play Scott."

"Yeah it faked me out good!"

"Looks pretty good — it's his wife."

"They don't know, do they."

"Hey you gentleman on you knee."

"Sommmmetime Jesus gonna walk . . ."

"Here Jim fix it for me would you."

"Bill have a little."

"Oh. Well."

"I'm trying to get to you."

"Your blessed."

"Somebody seems to have refilled it a little bit."

"No you can stir it with your finger I hope."

"I read a little story on that."

Yack Contest

All undergraduate, unmarried women students who have not appeared before in the beauty section of the Yack are eligible to enter the 1962 Yack beauty queen contest.

The contest will be held Monday, Oct. 23, in Memorial Auditorium.

Dormitories, fraternities, sororities and campus organizations can sponsor up to six candidates. Each entry must be accompanied by a $7 entrance fee.

Applications for the contest should be mailed to the Yack office in GM no later than Oct. 15.

Chapel Hill . . .

Chapel Hill isn't the same during a football game. There's the loyal few at Harry's and Kemp's but they're quieter.

Mrs. Mack said "They came for the game but forgot to go."

Over in Polk Place a divorced mother watched her three children try to climb Davie Poplar.

"I bring them here once or twice a week. They enjoy riding their bicycles around and it's quieter during the game."

On the fire escape of the journalism building a girl sunned herself while doing some typing.

Some of the students who didn't go to the game are in the dorms feeling sorry for themselves. Others are taking advantage of the calm. "For once you can be relatively alone."

It's wild, it's loud and it's Chapel Hill on a Saturday night.

"If we win they drink to celebrate; if we lose they drink to drown their sorrows—either way we sell beer."

Broadcast Tonight To End Four-Year Drive For Carrier Current In Dorms

When UNC beams its first AM broadcast at 6 o'clock on 645kc tonight, the four year drive to have "carrier current" will be ended.

"We hope to have transmitters installed in a good many of the dorms by October 8," says Jim Barnhill, head of carrier current engineering.

Carrier current, unlike regular radio broadcasting, is carried by telephone lines directly to the dorms.

Those dorms receiving the service can pick up the regular FM programming from 6 to 11 p.m. With carrier current students do not need special FM receivers. Programs of student interest will be heard from 11 to midnight.

"We will have three campus newscasts during the evening and hope to include features on various campus organizations and activities," said Don Schain, program director.

Local News

"Carrier current will finally give the students a chance to hear about their own university from their own station," remarked Reno Bailey, station manager.

Bailey says the station now will be a service not only to the community, but to the campus as well.

"We owe a great deal of thanks to the Student Government for their appropriations of $650.00 and $250.00 for carrier current activities," added Bailey.

Previously the station had broadcast only to listeners who owned FM sets.

Aces Prefer College Audience; Stress Universality Of Music

By Chuck Mooney
And Linda Cravotta

Three Italians and an Irishman from Pennsylvania expressed their preference for college audiences following their performance here Friday night.

The Four Aces commented that they have the most fun playing to college students. "The audience makes the show," said Lou Silvestri. "Playing to an unresponsive audience is like playing to a brick wall.

"Audiences such as the one tonight make this entertainment business worthwhile." He added that he would quit show business "if it were not for such audiences."

The Four Aces have played for college audiences for several years. Their worst mishap to date was to show up in the right city but the wrong state. An engagement at the University of Indiana at Bloomington, Indiana was delayed for an hour while The Four Aces chartered a plane from Bloomington, Illinois.

People Swing

"People are alike all over the world," said Dave Mahoney, as he described the audiences in Latin America and Europe where they have toured.

The language barrier, according to the group, was non-existant because music is universal. Although the audience did not understand English, they recognized the song titles immediately.

"There is a great need for more good will ambassadors from America in foreign countries," said Dave Mahoney. "Latin Americans, for example, do not understand North Americans, symbolized by the obnoxious tourists that they meet. We have tried to help the Latin Americans to better know the United States."

Their plans for the future include another trip to Europe and South America soon plus the recording of some new long-play albums. "The market for single records today is largely confined to rock-and-roll," stated Mahoney, "so we will emphasize collections of songs on albums in the future."

The three Italians, Sod Vaccaro, Fred Dio Dati and Lou Silvestri, grew up together in Pennsylvania; the Irishman, Dave Mahoney, joined the group later.

Originally in 1946 the Four Aces began a combo and sang occasionally. As their singing became popular, they gradually changed from an instrumental group to a vocal group.

Never On Sunday

Today marks the second Sunday of silent cash register bells for merchants whose wares are on the Blue List. Orange County and Chapel Hill voted to comply with the new state Blue Law, which went into effect last Sunday with little opposition from local merchants.

Some merchants, in fact felt that the law was not stringent enough, that more items should be listed. The statute now prohibits the sale of such items as clothing, hardware and furniture on Sunday.

The most vociferous opponent of the law is Kemp Battle Nye, owner and proprietor of two record stores on Franklin Street and in Eastgate Shopping Center. Kemp, who has withdrawn from the Chapel Hill Merchant's Association, feels the law is an infringement on indivdual liberty. His opposition is well-founded.

The constitutionality of such a law is open to question: United States citizens are constitutionally guaranteed freedom of religion which, to us, also means from religion if any individual so chooses.

The issue of religion is a personal matter and should be totally exempt from legislation. The right of religious dissent is inherent.

If any merchant chooses to do business on Sunday either because he disclaims religion or because his interpretation of it differs from that of the majority, then this is solely a matter of personal conscience.

This nation was built on a foundation principle which included separation of church and state. When legislation such as the Blue Law is allowed to creep into books of law, then that foundation is shaken.

Religion, like morals, cannot be legislated. As the Rev. R. E. Gibson of Guilford County put it; "people cannot be converted into the kingdom of God through legislation." If personal love of religion has begun to decay, then the enforced ceremony of the Blue Law will not renew it.

Kemp and the few other merchants here and in other cities who oppose the law are in the minority. It is difficult to speak against a law which supposedly bolsters the sanctity of the Sabbath, particularly North Carolina, where religion is one of the most important single forces in shaping attitudes.

We do not attempt to pass judgment on the rightness or wrongness of selling on Sunday.

We do, however, vehemently oppose any attempt, such as the Blue Law, to make religion a matter of legislation, rather than of personal choice.

The Blue Laws deny the rights of followers of 'minority' religions, such as Seventh Day Adventists, to observe the Sabbath on any other than Sunday. To force all people to observe Sunday as the Sabbath is an obvious denial of religious freedom.

Money In Politics

The uproar over the incredibly crass fund-raising at a campaign luncheon for Mayor Wagner will have a constructive result if it prompts a search at all levels of government for better ways to guarantee that gifts to candidates will not cloud the integrity of the governmental process after Election Day.

The Mayor, in his frantic scramble to still the clamor, has rejected all the pledge checks signed at the luncheon, whether or not the donors had any business dealings with municipal agencies. He has also forbidden his treasurer to accept any contributions from "anyone doing business or seeking favors from the city."

This is a prescription that goes beyond the normal conventions of either major party. The souvenir journal of the Republican State Committee, for example, bulges with paid advertisements from consulting engineers, insurance brokers, banks and others heavily involved in contractual relations with the state. The Democrats have always been equally swift to accept money from public contractors—with, of course, the inevitable declaration that the only thing bought with the contribution was assurance that the party intended to supply good government in the interest of all the people.

President Kennedy has started an inquiry into methods of reducing the dependence of Presidential candidates on private contributors, especially those with large bankrolls and special interests to protect. Similar efforts to solve this problem ought to be undertaken in city and state. Otherwise, government's separation from special influences will become increasingly difficult to safeguard as television and other costly divices for reaching the voters steadily push up the price of election.

A Psychoanalytic Interpretation Of The Civil War

MIKE ROBINSON

A BRIEF, BUT PENETRATING ANALYSIS OF THE CATHARSIS BETWEEN THE STATES or THE CIVIL WORSCHACH:

In the year 1861 a great aberration occurred between two emotionally disturbed peoples of the United States. The crux of the crisis which climaxed in the release of latent cannibalism disguised as civil strife, may be found with the South.

Fundamentally schizophrenic, the South, unable to face reality, had fled from it by creating a make-believe world of lush magnolias, masters and slaves (symbolizing the ego-id relationship), and perpetually virgin women.

While having the need to subdue their slaves, the southerners also revealed an Oedipal need for them (re: the number of "mammies" so prevalent at that time).

Paradoxically, the southerners were also obsessed with a sort of Electra-Founding-Fathers image.

They admired the violent rejection of the domineering Mother-England figure by their forefathers, and wished to live up to that ideal.

In later stages the South's case was further complicated when southerners developed paranoid tendencies, believing themselves to be persecuted by the North. This only added to their guilt feelings which stemmed from the methods used in their economic coping: cotton picking.

* * *

THE NORTHERNERS, on the other hand, had been suppressed by their puritannical environment to the extent that they had had to sublimate their libidos into great industriousness—producing in place of children all manner of machinery and super-ego, egomaniacal social structures.

Significantly, they even went so far as to mass produce guns—phallically enough. In the final stages of its sublimation, the North developed a Messiah complex, exemplified, ironically, by a woman named Stowe.

This advanced case of sibling rivalry became so acute that the whole country became schizoid, showing symptoms of internal conflict and imbalance which eventually led to a split personality.

To meet this crisis, the North and South at last mutually decided to undergo group therapy.

Catharsis took place when the masochistic southerners threw themselves against the bayonets of the sadistic northerners. And those who desired to return to the womb participated in sea and submarine warfare.

* * *

DURING THE CONFLICT the slaves became manic depressives, going through highly elated states (after the Emancipation Proclamation) followed by greatly depressed states (night of Lincoln's assassination).

Finally, after fulfilling its deathwish an amazing number of times, the South decided to call an end to group therapy treatment. But the nation's problems were not to be resolved at Appomatox. For the North developed a Napoleonic complex while the South withdrew into an inferiority complex complicated by fears of castration and inadequacy, plus delusions of past grandeur.

The basic elements of the problem exist to this day, having progressed through various forms of repression and suppression known at various times as "carpetbagging," Jim Crowism, and House Un-American Activities Committeeism. The only solution appears to be re-unification of the country through transfer of hostilities to some third party—a solution we seem to be reaching quite well with the Soviet Socialist Republic. Perhaps this time the country will be fortunate enough to experience total catharsis.

Florida Church Gives Green Trading Stamps

Billy Graham has nothing on this gimmick—A Florida church is now giving green trading stamps to people who attend services.

With trading stamps for a starter, other advancements in religion can be put over the top salvationwise; it's been too spiritual of late. Soon there will be a Sears, Roebuck catalogue on every pulpit and clergymen will minister to their flocks saying, "Now let us rise and order on page 48."

Rat Trap May Catch Mr. A. Nonny Mouse

Mr. A. Nonny Mouse will probably get caught in his own rat trap.

Mouse is the fictitious name for the author of a recent Letter to the Editor.

In this letter, Mouse said, "A well-reasoned argument ought to be judged on its own merits, and the presence or absence of a name can neither strengthen a weak position nor weaken a strong one."

That is just another way of saying Mr. Mouse is indeed a mouse, not a man.

For later in the letter we see his real reason for not wanting his name printed: "Three of my acquaintances have been hounded out of careers by the HUAC, and I don't care to be the fourth . . . I'm not acquainted with the UNC fellow who recently 'got his' as reported in the DTH. But I am sure he can attest that it doesn't take much 'flaming' of your liberalism to attract their attention."

In short, Mr. Mouse is opposed to the House Un-American Activities Committee, but hasn't the guts to do anything about it. He does not realize that keeping silent is the surest way to encourage HUAC and other oppressive groups — including the Communist Party U.S.A.

If everyone opposed to the House Un-American Activities Committee were as spineless as Mr. Mouse, the Committee might be far more powerful today.

* * *

THE MOUSEY argument that a "well-reasoned" view should stand on its own right without a name is equally ridiculous.

In the first place, Mr. Mouse's argument is anything but well-reasoned.

Aside from this, however, people lend much more weight to views from a source which they can trust or examine. We don't imagine Mr. Mouse or anyone else would pay much attention to an unsigned letter or story he received in the mail.

Finally, anonymity is a tactic used by both the Communists and the John Birch Society in this country. Mr. Mouse would certainly object if people all over campus received anonymous phone calls naming him a Communist or a Fascist. But Mr. Mouse will have no leg to stand on if he has never told people what he thinks—never signed his name to his views.

Anonymity is for Rats and Moles. From the looks of his letter Mr. Mouse is neither—but no one knows. He didn't sign his name.

Kennedy Visit Recalls FDR Trip To UNC 23 Years Ago

When robust, greying, 56- year-old Franklin D. Roosevelt was aided down a ramp and out of Woollen gymnasium here 23 years ago, it marked the last visit to Carolina by a President of the United States —that is until October 12, 1961.

On Columbus Day the slight, sandy-haired, figure of 44-year-old John F. Kennedy will mount a rostrum at Kenan Stadium here to deliver what is expected to be a major foreign policy address.

A major foreign policy speech emphasizing the persecution of the Jews in Europe was predicted by many of the 18,000 North Carolinians who awaited President Roosevelt's arrival here on that soggy Monday afternoon of December 5, 1938.

As FDR approached Sanford traveling from Warm Springs and Columbia, S. C. that wet December day, the rails that supported his Presidential streamliner seemed to click a triple tattoo—Munich, Czechoslovakia, Manchuria.

Fear Fear

When he stepped laboriously off his train in Sanford to be greeted by Governor Clyde Hoey and the the words Roosevelt had uttered cheers of 10,000, many recalled five years before, "that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

When the chief New Frontiersman alights in Raleigh to be greeted by Gov. Sanford and a throng of North Carolinians, many will expect him to reaffirm the words he reiterated two weeks before, "that we shall never negotiate out of fear and never feat to negotiate."

On the dreary day that FDR's ten-car motorcade moved cautiously along the 35 mile slippery stretch from Sanford to Chapel Hill, Walter Funk, Nazi Economics Minister was issuing a decree "Aryanizing" Germany property; the Japanese were making last minute preparations to invade China's Kwangsi Province, while in Durham, Duke was opening preparations for its battle with Southern California in the Rose Bowl.

Roosevelt scanned the countryside as his long, sleek limousine carried him and Gov. Hoey, UNC's President Frank Graham and Voit Gilmore, chairman of the Carolina Political Union, which was sponsoring the President's visit.

The President could see people wave from the farmhouses and on the embankments along the trafficless road. Cars that had escaped the vigilance of the army of highway patrolmen were forced to the roadside. A trailer truck had buried its wheels in the mud there.

Flags Around

Flag-bedecked streets were milling with people on the way to the gymnasium as FDR's car approached Chapel Hill. Attired in black hat, the collar of his black cape turned up, FDR waved and with a smile accentuating the jaunty angle of his cigarette holder, answered the cheers and waves confronting him.

The motorcade passed the Caro-Inn and entered eastgate to cross the deserted campus. President Graham was pointing out various buildings to FDR when a solitary figure was spotted.

It was 4 p.m. when the motorcade met the congestion at new Woollen Gym, which had been jammed for an hour by an anxious 10,000. Barkers in the Streets were selling Roosevelt "colors." Secret service guards hopped on the running board of the limousine. Eighty police—15 more than had been used to handle the Duke-Pitt game—cleared the way for the President to enter the gym. An officer held an umbrella for Roosevelt. A little girl jumped on the limousine running board and announced she could see the President, and the governor too.

The response was deafening when FDR entered. The band struck up "Hail to the Chief." Students roared a sis-boom-bah "Roosevelt, Roosevelt, Roosevelt." At the foot of a specially constructed ramp leading to the rostrum, the President was helped into a robe by T. J. Wilson, UNC registrar, and Chancellor R. B. House, who was to preside.

"The man impressed me so that I stood in awe. I never said a word," recalled House. "There was something about the man that transcended pleasantries, though he himself was charming."

Much Ado About

The largest array of equipment ever assembled for disseminating news in North Carolina confronted the President. Klieg lights surrounded him. He faced over a dozen microphones, a short wave international hookup, six newsreel cameras and a battery of news photographers. Twelve telegraph wires and numerous telephone wires had been installed at the press table where 48 special correspondents banged away at typewriters.

FDR's first speech since the Congressional elections of November 8, was not the major foreign policy address many of the 18,000 here anticipated. His clipped, eloquent tones, heard by 8,000 scattered in various buildings of the campus and by countless latecomers over car radios, did not mention the Jews in Europe.

He pinned his faith on "liberalism" which he said had survived the elections and was "going places." He pinned his hopes on the youth of America whom he described as conforming with the philosophy of the late Justice Cardozo who said that because the world changes, so must the laws that govern it. The justice had been a Jew.

FDR answered charges by the press and radio that he was an ogre, a consorter with Communists, a breaker of ancient traditions, the inventor of the economic royalist and wicked utilities, a war monger driving the nation to bankruptcy while breakfasting every morning on a dish of "grilled millionaire." The crowd laughed.

"Actually, I am an exceedingly mild mannered person," FDR told North Carolinians, "—a practitioner of peace . . . , a believer in the capitalistic system, and for my breakfast a devotee of scrambled eggs." The crowd roared with laughter.

Among the spectators was the whole North Carolina delegation, including retiring representatives W. B. Umstead, Harold Cooley and Walter Lambert; also Carl T. Durham, who was on the threshold of an uninterrupted 22 year career in the U. S. House. Another spectator was Roy Armstrong, now Executive Secretary of Morehead Foundation.

There were many in that hot sticky gymnasium who had not come so much to hear what Roosevelt said, but to witness what Mr. House terms "the enormous pluck of the man." FDR had just finished a 400 mile journey, and for 30 minutes he spoke as perspiration trickled from his face. When he gestured, which was seldom, his other hand tightened on the podium hand rail so that he could support his entire weight with one arm.

Perhaps to 21 - year - old John Kennedy, 700 miles away at Harvard, the speech held more significance that he could ever have realized, for FDR had uttered words applicable to a JFK address here next week.

Playmakers Actor McMullen One-Time Tar Heel Halfback

Athlete-turned-actor Larry McMullen has discovered there isn't much difference between playing football and acting.

And the former Tar Heel halfback should know. McMullen is playing Carnelius Hackl in the Carolina Playmakers' "The Matchmaker" Oct. 11-15. The role was played by Tony Perkins in the motion picture version of the Thornton Wilder farce-comedy.

"Opening night is just like a football game," McMullen says, "and rehearsals are just like practice."

An All-State and Shrine Bowl football player while in high school at Lumberton, McMullen has acted with the Playmakers in "The Visit," "Kiss the Book" and "The Sandbox."

He played Haeman in a UNC television production of "Antigone," and this summer he acted in Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" at Manteo, playing Chief Manteo and understudying Father Martin in America's longest-running outdoor drama.

McMullen says, "everyone has a need and desire to express himself in some creative form. Acting is a challenge and it's a wonderful feeling to catch yourself doing things onstage you didn't know you could do."

A graduate student in RTVMP 6' 2", 197 lbs. McMullen was a halfback under the late Jim Tatum. In 1957 he served as assistant freshman football coach. Before deciding to come to Carolina, he had been offered sixteen athletic scholarships to colleges and universities throughout the East.

Athletics Helped

"I have to be quite an acroba in this part," he says. "I may have to dig out my football padding yet!"

McMullen will tour in "The Matchmaker" to cities throughout North Carolina and as far south as Augustra, Ga., following its run here. The farce-comedy will play in Goldsboro, Oct. 16; Buies Creek, Oct. 17; Wilmington, Oct. 18; Wilson, Oct. 19; Statesville, Oct. 20; and Augusta, Oct. 21.

Tickets for the Chapel Hill run of "The Matchmaker" are available at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall (next to the Scuttlebutt), and at Ledbetter-Pickard, both in Chapel Hill. All tickets for the Friday and Saturday performances are sold, but plenty of seats are still available for the Wednesday, Thursday, and Sunday performances.

LOOKING FOR ADVENTURE gets Cornelious Hackl more than he bargains for in Thornton Wilder's farce-comedy "The Matchmaker," running Oct. 11-15 at the Playmakers Theatre. Cornelious is played by Larry McMullen of Yanceyville, a former University football halfback and All-State football player. The 1961 tour production of the The Carolina Playmakers will tour cities throughout North Carolina and as far south as Augusta, Ga., following its Chapel Hill run.

Folk Songs At Rat Get Large Crowd

BY DRENA

At least 125 people packed themselves into the Rathskeller Thursday night to sit and sip and sing folk songs. And according to Benjamin C. Hedgepeth, (B. C.) the manager of the Rat, many people were turned away.

Most of the people just came to sing and listen. But ten brought their guitars, two brought banjos and two were there with bongos.

The group sang everything from English ballads to hill billy. There was even some rock 'n roll tossed in.

Occasionally someone sang solo. Guerry Matthews sang the House of the Rising Sun assisted by Dan Brock on the guitar. Brock also accompanied Lyla Gayle VanFalkenberg who sang Paper and Pins and the Galveston Flood. Dick Mandell played the banjo and sang Little Maggie and Jesse James.

Guerry Matthews, Miss VanFalkenberg and Brock were in the North Carolina Folk Festival held at Memorial Hall last spring.

Hall Winner

Mike Hall who organized the folksing recently won the Goya Festival in New York. Hall also sang in the N. C. Folk Festival. Last night, however, Hall sang only a few songs because he had just finished a concert for the Chapel Hill Bar Association.

Folksings at the Rat have been going on for ten years said B. C. He guessed they would go on for ten more. "We're not thinking especially of the profit aspect. We enjoy them ourselves." he added.

Hall and his group are planning more folksings and some concerts which will be announced by the DTH. The first concert, said Hall, will probably be in the Rendezvous Room at GM.

As the box in this advertisement will remind you, the feature case in the Old Book Corner will be filled with books in foreign tongues this week. We wouldn't want to boast, but a man who could read all the books in this group wouldn't have been fazed by the Tower of Babel.

Yankees W in By 3-2 On Maris' Late Homer

By OSCAR FRALEY

CINCINNATI (UPI)—Golden boy Roger Maris delivered one of those patented blasts which made him the greatest one-season home run hitter in baseball history Saturday for a 3-2 New York Yankee victory in the third game of the World Series.

Maris hammered a ninth-inning homer into the right field bleachers to break a 2-2 tie and give the Yankees a two-to-one edge in the classic.

The smash by the man who hit a record 61 homers this season was the second by the Yankees, coming on the heels of pinch hitter Johnny Blanchard's tying smash in the eighth. It hung the defeat on knuckleballer Bob Purkey, who, until the Yankee bats began to thunder, had blanked both Maris and Mantle on his return to the Yankee lineup.

Those cannon shots into the seats—the specialty of a Yankee club which this season set an all-time major league record of 240 home runs—turned this warm, clear day into a gloomy one for 32,589 partisan Cincinnati fans and gave the victory to relief pitcher Luis Arroyo, the busiest fireman in Yankee history.

Stafford Relieved

The Reds had gotten rid of Yankee starting pitcher Bill Stafford in the seventh inning when, for the second time, they jumped into a slender one-run lead. And Bud Daley, who succeeded him, was asked to retire only one batter before he was lifted for Blanchard's appearance.

Those two pitches, the one to Blanchard and the one on which Maris delivered the coup de grace, spelled the difference. Mantle limped back into the lineup in an attempt to bolster the Yankees' stuttering power and Purkey checked him four times.

Maris was doing no better—up until that payoff moment in the ninth. Roger took a called strike and then watched two balls hum past, standing there swinging that big bat slowly and menacingly.

That's when Purkey let fly the one that cost him the ball game. Maris swung and the ball arched up against the bright blue sky and plopped into the mass of shirt-sleeved fans.

The Reds cracked through in the third after Elio Chacon led off with a surprise bunt along the first base line and raced to second on Stafford's hurried overthrow. He held while Eddie Kasko fouled to Moose Skowron and took third when Vada Pinson grounded out to second.

Biggest Threat

Frank Robinson, the Reds' biggest threat at the plate, then came through with his first hit of the series, rifling a double which bounced against the left field wall and scored Chacon to give the Reds a 1-0 lead.

The Yankees squared it for the first time in the seventh on two singles and a passed ball. Once again the Reds eased into a one-run lead in the seventh. With one out, Edwards doubled into the right field corner. After Purkey struck out, Manager Freddie Hutchinson of the Reds called on Jerry Lynch to pinch hit for Chacon and this move was met with an intentional walk. Don Blasingame went in to run for Lynch.

The strategy, second-guessed immediately at this stage of the game, paid off when Kasko delivered a single to left which scored Edwards from second for a 2-1 Cincy lead.

Again the Reds' lead was short-lived. For, with two out in the top of the eighth, Blanchard was summoned off the Yankee bench and the Minnesota husky lofted a home run into the right field bleachers on Purkey's first pitch to tie it up at 2-2.

Then Maris stepped in to lead off the top of the ninth for the Yankees and the man who ran a race with the immortal Babe Ruth finally found his groove.

Sunday the Reds will send out handsome Jim O'Toole. For the Yankees it will be Whitey Ford.

Hickey Offers No Excuses After 27-0 Loss To Tigers

By Ed Dupree

Jim Hickey had no alibies. It had been a long afternoon for the Tar Heel coach and his footballers and Hickey's face showed signs of the frustrating loss to Frank Howard's Clemson crew.

"We were beaten by a real good ball club," the Carolina mentor said. "We just couldn't do anything. We're a better football team than that, but I don't want to take anything away from Frank's team. He's got a real tough team."

Hickey felt that his team's biggest trouble was that they weren't rushing the Clemson quarterbacks. He added that he "didn't think they would pass that easily on us."

Coach Hickey gave no excuses—only reasons for the 27-0 defeat. "We didn't take advantage of our scoring chance in the third quarter. After Pavilack's interception it was a tough road to hoe. A touchdown then would have made it 14-7 and we would have been right in the game."

When asked about the pre-game strategy, the tired UNC coach replied: "We thought we could run on them. Our plan was to split the passing and running plays 50-50, but we didn't pass as much as we wanted to."

Was the Clemson defense tougher than N. C. State's or was the Carolina offense a little sluggish against the Tigers? Hickey attributed the loss to both factors. "I don't like to compare teams, but I'd have to say that the Clemson line was stronger than State's," then he added, "our offense was definitely off. We didn't play as good a football game as we did last week."

His Tar Heels had been beaten solidly, but Hickey had one consolation. "I'd rather know I've been beaten, than lose 7-6 on an interference call. Those kind of games kill me."

Last year's Maryland game was that kind of a loss and Hickey's objective now is to ready his forces for next week's encounter with those same Terps, who rolled to their third straight victory yesterday with a 22-21 victory over Syracuse.

Shocked! That's the only word that could describe Tar Heel rooters Saturday as the victory-hungry Clemson Tigers rolled to a 27-0 triumph.

Sunvisors and transistor radios were as plentiful as programs at Kenan Stadium as a "Dad's Day" crowd strained to get word on the outcome of the third world series game, and at the same time, tried to keep up with the action on the field. They had come out on this beautiful day to see what promised to be a close, hard-fought football game. Instead, they witnessed a massacre.

The first roar went up from the assembled crowd, nearly 40 minutes before game time when one of the varsity managers, while playing catch on the sidelines, barreled into the cheerleaders, who were having their pictures taken. This episode, coupled with the introduction of the players' fathers, who made a procession from the Carolina goal to their seats on the North side of the stadium, were the only opportunities Carolina rooters had to cheer all afternoon.

Clemson uses a miniature cannon to signify the Tigers' scores and outstanding plays, and today it was never quiet as time after time, the enormous "boom" was heard echoing through the stadium. The strains of "Hold that Tiger" failed to get through to Hickey's men and slowly but surely, the Carolina backers began to give up hope.

At the beginning of the second half, the radio bugs announced that the New York Yankees had beaten the Cincinnati Reds 3-2 on Roger Maris' home run in the 9th inning. This seemed to bring some life to the faithful, who hoped that one of the Tar Heels might explode a "home run," but it was not to be, and when, at the 11:01 mark of the fourth period, the Tigers went ahead 21-0, many of the fans headed for the exits.

Duke Tops Wake

DURHAM, N. C. (UPI)—Third string halfback Billy Futrell caught two second period touchdown passes Saturday to spark Duke to a 23-3 victory over Wake Forest.

FRIDAY-SUNDAY

— Clemson Whips Carolina By 27-0 —

backfield picked up another first on the Carolina 39. A 10-yard Parker-Pavilack pass gained to the 24.

On second down, Parker arched a pass into his end zone toward Pavilack. Marslender hit him just as the ball did, but he held on tightly for the score. Lon Armstrong booted his 20th consecutive extra point with 42 seconds to go in the first quarter.

After this score, the game then reverted back to a battle of punters, with Werntz and Farris doing all of the kicking. Any of the fans who were dissatisfied over the Carolina loss couldn't go away saying they missed some good kicking.

40-Yd. Kick

Farris kicked one 40 yards, and Werntz booted it back for 52. Farris bettered him by three. Werntz then called his bluff and kicked a 44-yarder out on the 2 yard line in a display of near-perfect accuracy. On second down, Farris got off a 53-yarder. The Tiger kicker sent one down to the UNC 15 for 25 yards, and Farris sent it back for 38.

But then the Tigers decided that they had had enough of this little game of whose-got-the-strongest-toe. Quarterback Anderson passed for 7 and ran for the first down, and then cut loose with a pass to Gary Barnes, the converted end who now operates at halfback. Barnes, waiting on the five yard line, went up between two Carolina players, Flournoy and Marslender, came down with the ball, and skipped into the end zone for the second score. The play covered 33 yards.

Armstrong kept his string going, and the Tigers led by 14-0 with 1:46 remaining in the first half.

Everett Paces Harriers' Win By Cracking Old Course Mark

BY ED DUPREE

Rett Everett, defending ACC cross-country champion, led UNC's harriers to an 18-48 (low score wins) victory over Clemson Saturday. Everett led throughout the race and covered the 4.1 mile course in 10:46 minutes for a new UNC course record.

The only Clemson runner who finished in the top eight was Jim Morehead who finished third behind Everett and Carmine Lunetta. Lunetta covered the distance in 22:03. Morehead was a close third with a time of 22:22.

Everett broke team mate Gerry Stuver's old course record of 21:18.4, which Stuver had set as a sophomore. Everett and Stuver finished one-two in the conference meet last year.

Five UNC runners folowed Morehead across the finish line as the Tar Heel runners took seven of the top eight positions. Morehead's younger brother, John, a sophomore took ninth place.

Stuver's 22:39 was good for fourth. Bob Bennett, Charlie Little, Bill Brunson and Mike Folk took the next four spots as the Carolina runners avenged last year's loss to Clemson.

Ruffin Pulls Tag Upset In Tripping Manly 13-12

By John Montague

Ruffin pulled the biggest upset of the dorm tag football season Thursday, edging the defending champion Manly Riverrats, 13-12, on an extra point by Doug Pearson. Wommack White and Ronnie Henson were the Ruffin touchdown makers. Scoring for the losers were Bob Parker and C. Williams.

The Alexander Playboys continued along the unbeaten trail, defeating the Cobb Colts, 22-15. Bobby Cox, Bobby Cornwell and Jim Beaver notched TD's for the Playboys, as Irvin Williamson and Pete McKinnell tallied for point afters. A safety accounted for the other two points. Cobb scorers were Tommy Kerr and Dave Morris with TD's and Bob Merriam on a PAT. The Colts also picked up a safety.

Old West and the Avery Addicts rollicked to easy victories, Old West bowling over the Cobb Carousers, 40-7, and the Addicts downing the Graham Shieks by 40-19.

Win Bilisoly led the long list of Old West TD makers which included Rex Savery, Bill Shoemaker, Bill Cheek and John Morgan. Morgan added two PAT's, Frank Freeman and Shoemaker getting one apiece. Lone Colt scorer was Bob Coker, with Cecil Locklear getting the extra point.

Bob Newman's three touchdowns paced the Avery attack. Mickey Houck, Don Jeffries and Phil Adams also collected TD's, and Bill Aycock, Willis Johnson, Newman and Houck all got PAT's. Hugh Darnell got two of the Shieks' touchdowns, Ralph Leonard the other. John Hulka made the point after.

Winston edged BVP, 14-13, with Charlie Wright and Dick Blackmon both getting 7-pointers. Karl Walker and Ron Clarke tallied TD's for the losers, Buck McQuay getting the PAT.

In an overtime contest, AFROTC bested the Everett Flashes, 13-12. John Faunce scored the only Air Force TD during the regulation time, Larry Phelps getting the equalizer for the Flashes. Both teams got 6-pointers in the extra period, but AFROTC finally won out by moving the ball the farthest.

The Cobb Hotheads forfeited to Aycock and the Avery Ovaries forfeited to Grimes.

In the grad circuit, the Peacocks rolled right along, stopping the Law Blue, 25-0. Ed Burke, Dave Knecht, Jim Phoel and Jerry Koontz were TD-scorers, Charlie Phillips making the PAT.

Peace Corps Now Circulating List Of Prospective Jobs

BY BILL DOWELL

The Peace Corps is now circulating a list to let prospectnve applicants know what kind of work will be available to them in the future.

Farm technicians, teachers, and engineers head the list of persons who may be sent abroad.

Following is a rundown on projects being planned for Peace Corps members. Students interested in these or other service projects should contact Anne Queen at the Y building or Jim Wagner, temporary head of the Campus Peace Corps Committee.

Near East

There is a project being planned which will send 48 men to work at improving farming methods in the Near East. This will include 5 technicians for soil and water laboratories, 4 mechanics for farm equipment, 28 to demonstrate uses of farm equipment, 8 to teach animal husbandry, and 3 to serve as lab assistants in research.

Another project will include 30-40 surveyors, 5-10 civil engineers, 15-25 geologists, hydrologists, soil analysts, 3 teachers for trade schools, 8-12 secondary school English teachers, 11-16 registered nurses, 22-32 practical nurses.

Asia

Thirty men and women will work in East Pakistan as audiovisual specialists, teachers, mechanics, engineers, nurses, carpenters, bricklawers, sociologists, etc.

Twenty-four men will go to India to teach or demonstrate courses in farm management.

Seventy men will go to Malaya as librarians, statisticians, architects, civil engineers, physics, geography and biology teachers, instructors for apprentices in radio and television servicing, road surveyors, and other technical jobs.

Africa

Twenty-eight men, twenty, of whom will be road surveyors, four geologists, four civil engneers, will go to Tanganyika. Among them will be Peter Von Kristierson, a UNC graduate.

Forty-five men and women will go to Nigeria to teach one or more of the following subjects in secondary schools: English, mathematics, physics, chemistry biology or history.

Thirty men and women will go to Nigeria to serve as college instructors in the following subjects: English, painting, sculpture, French, journalism, dramatics, chemistry, mathematics, and business administration.

Other posts are available in South America, the West Indies and with the United Nations.

Corps officials advise that people interested in working as teachers should not be frightened by requirements, as standards are lower in undeveloped countries than in the U.S. For instance, a volunter might qualify to teach physics if he has majored in it in college.

Nell Rankin Here

NELL RANKIN, METROPOLITAN OPERA STAR, is appearing tonight in Memorial Hall, in the opening of the 1961-62 GM Series. Her concert starts at 8 p.m. The balcony of Memorial Hall is reserved for students, who need only present I.D. cards for admission. Husbands and wives of students will be charged $1 admission. Miss Rankin has sung in many of the world's concert halls and is known as one of today's leading mezzo-sopranos.

Parking

Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont yesterday announced that the following places will be closed to parking Thursday:

Highway 54 from the Institute of Government to the library; the road from the Institute of Government to Avery dorm; Rams Head parking lot and the parking lot beside the gym.

The following locations will be open to student parking: Emerson field, intramural field and the Bell Tower parking lot.

Plans Project Of Apartments Near Eastgate

Plans for an apartment project behind Eastgate Shopping Center featuring a fallout shelter to accommodate 500 persons were revealed last week.

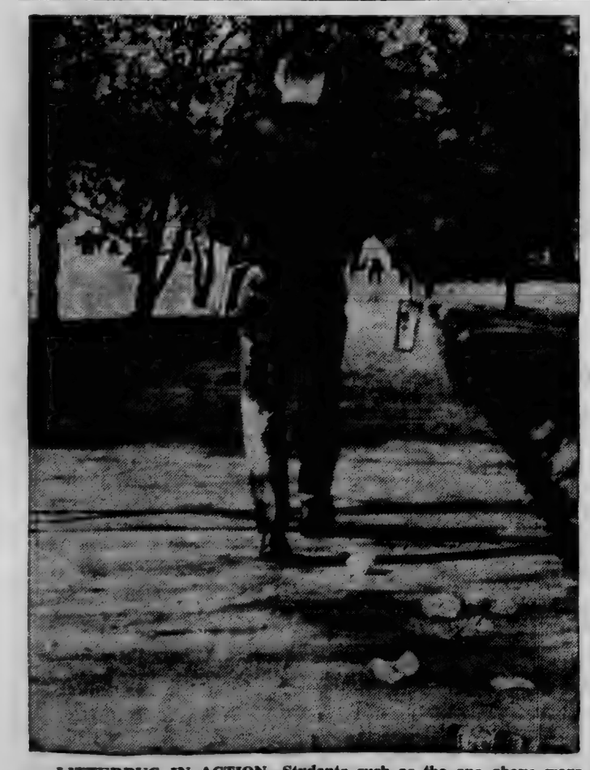
Ed Blankenstein, developer of the plan, said that the project would be open to Carolina students. According to his plans there would be from 100 to 125 two- and three-room apartments, air-conditioned, renting for $100 to $120 a month.

In the center of the project would be the 12,000 square foot fallout shelter for the exclusive use of the apartment residents.

Blankenstein, owner of the Masterbilt Homes in Chapel Hill, presented plans for this project to the Chapel Hill Planning Board last Tuesday night to get a reaction to them.

Infirmary

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included Martha Huckabee, Lillian Ennis, Melinda Westmoreland, Carol Krug, Betty Lumpkin, Catherine Plummer, William Garrard, Alvin Poindexter, Allan Ostergren, Samuel Hunt, Marcus McGraw, Phillip Jorgenson, George Durham, James Carroll, George James, Andrew Winkelman, Robert Coker, Robert Pearson, Roland Newhouse, Tim Cole, Clayton Smith, David Prescott, Alan Goldsmith, Bill Cozart, Glenn Wheeless and Bill Kohn.



LITTERBUG IN ACTION—Students such as the one above were recently urged to help keep the campus clean by Rudy Edwards, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs. "I believe the students are fully capable of self-government and of conducting themselves in a responsible way," Edwards said. "I would like to appeal to the students' reasonability. There has been increasing difficulty in keeping the campus clean simply because students have not been using the trash cans."

Before the meeting, Rusk consulted with Llewellyn E. Thompson, U.S. ambassador to Moscow, and Walter C. Dowling, the ambassador to West Germany, who had been called to the capital for conferences.

Carolina Lore

Land For Carolina Given By Residents

By Chuck Mooney

Why was Chapel Hill picked as the site of UNC back in 1789?

It wasn't by accident, despite the "drink of whiskey under the Davie Poplar" legend.

Why were the original buildings—Old East, Old West, and South—arranged as they are?

One of the founders was a member of the Masonic Order.

James Hogg, a canny Scots realtor, realized that the proposed state university would be a great asset to any area. So he persuaded the people who owned land on Chapel Hill Ridge to donate it to the state on the condition that the university be built there, according to Archibald Henderson in his "Campus of the First State University."

There were ten donors, all immigrants and most of them veterans of the Revolutionary War. Their gifts totaled 1,386 acres of land. All were farmers or businessmen. One, William McCauley, was a state Senator from 1784 to 1788.

The Davie Myth

Legend has it that a group of Trustees headed by William R. Davie just happened along one day and picked Chapel Hill. They supposedly were searching for a site and stopped under "The Davie Poplar" for lunch, a couple of drinks, and a nap.

Davie was allegedly so impressed with Chapel Hill that he eloquently convinced the others that it was the ideal place for UNC. This is not the whole story, Henderson points out.

He says that Davie and the Trustees came to Chapel Hill specifically to see if it would be a suitable site.

Masonic Design

It is believed that Davie, who was Grand Master of Masons in North Carolina from 1792 to 1799, was instrumental in arranging the first three buildings at Carolina according to Masonic customs.

It was customary in the Orient in King Solomon's day—as it still is today—to face the East in prayer, bury the dead with their heads toward the East and build temples and tombs facing the East. This "orientalization" came to America with the Masons.

Mystery Unsolved

No Cyanide In Student Cups Police Investigation Stymied

Student Is Not Tied To Death

Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake absolved Ralph Sargeant, 20-year old UNC junior, of any connection in the deaths of the two students found in their dormitory room Friday.

The N. Plainfield, New Jersey native was arrested Sunday when it was learned that he had eight deadly mercuric cyanide pills in his possession.

He was charged with dispensing poisonous drugs to a fellow student last May.

Sargeant said he got the pills in 1959 when he worked in a Plainfield dental laboratory.

A corner's jury ruled late Saturday that cyanide poison caused the deaths of James Michael Barham, 20, of Burlington and William Henry Harrison Johnson, 24, of Statesville.

Chief Blake said, "Sargeant says he did not know either of the dead students. He has been very cooperative in questioning by police."

The student was released on $400 bond. Trial was set for today but the chief said that Sargeant may have it continued till a later date.

Pathologists' Tests Not Yet Completed

University pathologists reported last night that they could find no trace of cyanide in two milkshake cups found in the room of two students who died of cyanide poisoning last Friday.

Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake said the report of the tests run on the cups "leaves us without any clues right now."

However, he said tests underway on food found in the room had not been completed by the pathologist, but were expected to be finished today.

A corner's jury ruled Saturday night that roommates Michael Barham and William Johnson Jr. died of cyanide poisoning. Acting Orange County Corner G. A. Cannady turned the case over to the Chapel Hill police after the jury made its ruling.

Work Since Friday

Blake and six or more policemen have been working on the case since Friday and the chief said last night that the investigation is "progressing" and he hoped to have a "break" in the case in the next few days.

The death room—201 Cobb—was cleaned by a janitor early Friday morning, before the deaths were discovered, and Blake said the milkshake cups and the food items were the only clues found in the room after police learned of the deaths.

The deadly poison—believed to be potassium cyanide—was found in "high concentration" in the bodies of both students. Cyanide is a fast acting poison which produces death almost instantly.

Police said it was likely that further cyanide would be discovered in possession of students. Cyanide is a relatively common chemical in scientific laboratories, and is issued to responsible persons in a number of schools and departments of the universit.

Movements Traced

While investigators worked trying to determine how the students received the poison, other officers interviewed 30-40 students in an effort to trace the movements of the youths Thursday.

Barham's whereabouts for most of Thursday were established Blake said, but Johnson's activities from about 9:30 to 11 p.m. were unknown.

The two did not eat supper together and Barham was seen in a downtown pool room between 9 and 9:30 p.m. and in his dormitory room shortly after that. Shortly after 11 p.m. Barham was found in the bathroom violently ill and was helped to his room.

Johnson Unconcerned

Investigators said students told them Johnson did not appear concerned about Barham's illness. When asked if a physician should be called he said he would call a doctor if Barham did not respond.

Janitor Robert Holt discovered their bodies shortly after 11 a.m. Friday. The bodies, on separate beds, were covered with sheets. Both were clad in nightclothes.

Chief Blake said that the State Burea uof Investigation had not been called in on the case except to verify the cyanide tests.

Classrooms Opened For Night Studying

To alleviate library congestion and to provide better study conditions, a number of classrooms are being left open at night for student use, according to Tony Harrington, chairman of the Student Government Campus Affairs Board.

"Studying space in these rooms must be exploited to the fullest, so no special room assignments will be made to any group," said Harrington.

He also reminded students that it is essential that the rooms be kept in good condition so they will be in shape for use the next morning.

More rooms will be opened if necessary and such suggestions can be made to the Student Affairs Board at the Student Government Office, or to the Campus Affairs Board.

The rooms open for night study are 01 in the Alumni Building, 207B and 208 Caldwell, 07 and 208 Gardner, 105 and 106 Hanes, 105 Peabody, and 220 and 232 Phillips, 109 and 216 Saunders, and the study halls on the ground floors of Graham and Stacy Dormitories.

Yack Pictures

Sophomore Yack pictures will be taken this week through Friday at 1-6 p.m. daily in the GM basement. Juniors who have not been photographed may pay a late fee of $1. Nurses' pictures will also be taken this week. Senior nurses are requested to wear their uniforms. Other nurses are asked to wear black sweaters. Sophomore men should wear coats and ties; women, black sweaters.

Senior nurses who are unable to come this week may have their pictures taken at 10 a.m. Saturday with no late fee.

Playmaker Vi Galvin Gave Up Opera For Acting—Now She's Still Singing

Vi Galvin gave up opera for acting—and she's been singing ever since.

The sparkling soprano is playing the zany, singing millineress, Mrs. Molloy, in The Carolina Playmakers' 1961 tour production of "The Matchmaker" here Oct. 11-15. Shirley MacLaine played the role in the film version of the Thornton Wilder farce-comedy.

A native of Albany, N. Y., Miss Galvin sang with the Norsk Operselskap group in Oslo, Norway, in 1958. Earlier, she played the Countess in "The Marriage of Figaro" while a music major at Carolina.

Appeared As Ruth

"My first performance was as Ruth in Gilbert and Sullivan's 'The Pirates of Penzance' while still in high school at Albany," she says. "I was really set on opera then."

Following World War II (during which she served as a control tower operator in the Air Force), theatre began to interest her more.

"I finally decided to go into community theatre work, so I came back to UNC last year to get my master's degree in drama."

At UNC, Vi has played major roles in "The Great Diamond Robbery," "Flatbush Sonata," "The Sandbox" and a television production of "Komachi," an adaptation of a Japanese Noh play.

The Lost Colony

She also performed weekly at beach clubs and hotels, singing everything from opera to folksongs and performing comic skits. She sang in a Lost Colony production of a musical review with June Valli.

"But Mrs. Molloy in 'The Matchmaker' is my best role to date," she says. "She's a sought-after widow who believes the best things in life are marital fights—and singing."

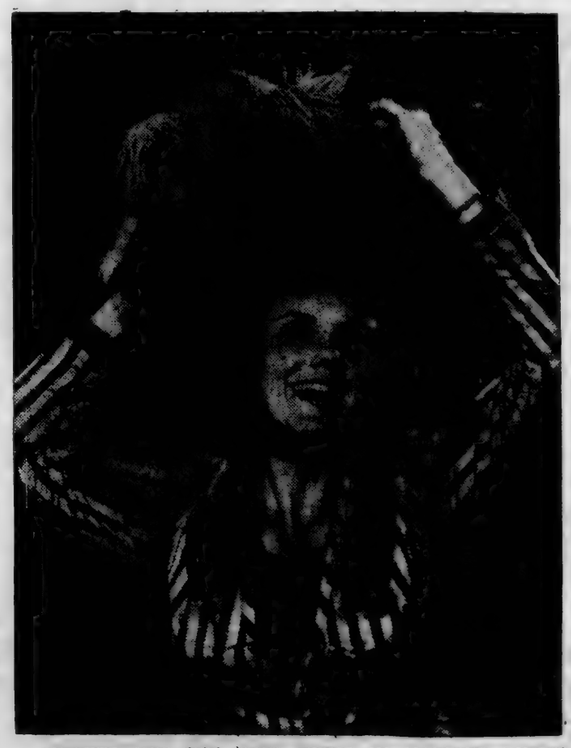
No operatic arias are in store for the audience. Mrs. Molloy limits herself to an impromptu "Tenting Tonight" and "Nelly Ann and the Drinking Man."

Act To Sing

"So," Vi concludes, "the moral of my story is, if you want to sing, start acting!"

A special Sunday matinee performance of "The Matchmaker" will be held at the Playmakers Theatre at 2:30 p.m. because of the heavy demand for tickets. Friday and Saturday performances are sold out, but tickets are still available for Wednesday, Thursday and both Sunday performances. Curtain time for the evening performances is 8:30 p.m.

Tickets are on sale at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 bernethy Hall (next to the Scuttlebutt), and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50 each.



"FIGHTS ARE THE BEST THING IN MARRIED LIFE!" laughs the much-pursued widow and milliner, Mrs. Molloy (Vi Galvin of Albany, N. Y.) in The Carolina Playmakers' 1961 tour production of "The Matchmaker." The Thornton Wilder farce-comedy will open tomorrow night at 8:30.

Hearing Today In Fluoridation Injunction Try

A hearing on the University's move to strike 65 of 75 items in a citizen's complaint against fluoridating Chapel Hill water will be heard today at 2:30 p.m. in Chatham County Superior Court, Pittsboro.

Manning Simmons brought suit against the University a year ago last August, seeking a permanent injunction against UNC plans to fluoridate local water.

Last week the University withdrew a motion to dismiss the suit after a conference between H. Horton Rountree, University attorney, and President William Friday.

Mr. Simmons contends that fluoridation of a public water supply is unconstitutional because "it amounts to force medication."

There had been a difference of opinion when the suit was first brought over whether serving it on President Friday alone was sufficient when Chancellor William Aycock and UNC Business Manager J. A. Branch were also named as defendants.

From A Reader

Conservative Comment

The following letter was submitted by Martin L. Wilson in response to a recent ediitorial appearing in this column ("A Beer and a Cry," DTH, Oct. 4). We print it here with the intention of commenting on it in tomorrow's issue.

We continue to be appalled by the "proof" offered by the Daily Tar Heel and other liberals that the House Un-American Activities Committee ought to be abolished. The sources of this "proof" offer reason to wonder just how desperate the liberal apologists are to strangle this committee, and to just what means they will stoop in order to smear it.

If these questions bother us and call for an answer, we may readily find one in an October 4 editorial in the Daily Tar Heel. In attempting to prove his case against the HUAC, the editor resorted to several quotations from a book called "The Un-Americans" by Frank Donner.

As the editor ws willing to quote those passages from this book, it is plausible to assume that the book had a not-too-adverse effect upon his already-tortured thinking toward the HUAC.

This book has received wide and enthusiastic acclaim by the liberal factions; the DTH editor himself referred to it as a "documented work." To get an insight into the type of media that influences the liberal mind, it is necessary to take a good look into the personal background of the book's author, Mr. Donner.

The liberal screamers and the book's publisher have referred to Donner only as a "brilliant constitutional lawyer." We get a different appraisal from Representative Gordon Scherer of Ohio, Republican member of the HUAC.

In a speech on the floor of the House of Representatives, Rep. Scherer put forth the complete sorry story of Donner and his service to the communist cause. Speaking of the praises heaped upon Donner and his book by playwright Gore Vidal in a New York Herald Tribune column, Scherer made the following statements:

"He (Vidal) conceals the fact that Donner was an underground communist while employed by the Government of the United States as a top official in the National Labor Relations Board.

"Vidal, in plugging Donner's book, does not tell the readers of the Tribune that Donner was a member of a communist cell within the NLRB; that its members met regularly to determine NLRB policy on the light of Communist party directives.

"Vidal further conceals the fact that Bertram Edises assisted Donner in the preparation of the book.

"Bertram Edises' whole record of service to communist causes are set forth on page 36 of the committee's report, entitled 'Communist Legal Subversion.' As shown therein, Erises was identified as a member of the Political Affairs Committee of the Communist party.

"Edises, who is a lawyer, was assigned by the Communist party to work in the Civil Rights Congress in the East Bay (San Francisco) area. At one time he was elected as an alternate member of the (California) State Committee of the Communist Political Association. Yet, Gore Vidal is one of those Aho sanctimoniously, in his attacks on the HUAC, charges others with concealment and distortion."

These charges could apply equally well toward the DTH and the other left-wing evangelists who rant and rave for the HUAC's abolition.

The report of which Rep. Scherer speaks gives testimony by former communists, who identified Donner as one of the NLRB lawyers who joined the conspiratorial communist cell group in the NLRB. Further testimony revealed the extent to which Donner participated in communist activities, and the communist plaudits he received for same activities.

It is no wonder that Donner and Edises want the HUAC abolished, and felt led to write a book on the subject which is a beacon light to the country's liberals.

Appropriately enough, Donner took the Fifth Amendment when questioned about these activities. He now makes a living excoriating all individuals and organizations who have been of assistance to Congressional committees.

This book and its author, then, are the types of "authorities" the liberals will consult for their smearing. Very probably, most of these liberals are not Communists or even communist sympathizers. But, knowingly or not, they are allowing themselves to be used to great advantage by the communist conspiracy.

The liberals would do well to take stock of just who and what they are aiding and abetting. Thus far, it is all too clear that they have done immense damage to their country. How long will they continue this insanity?

FOR RHODES SCHOLAR

Graceful Oxford Life Flows With Tea And Sherry

By a Recent Rhodes Scholar

One fall afternoon five years ago, as the campus oaks faded in the mall beneath his window, a certain college newspaper editor heard his telephone ring. He recognized the voice of a certain dean.

"....," the dean said, "I've been looking through the applications for Rhodes Scholarships and I don't see your name. The deadline is this week-end. Why haven't you applied?"

After several seconds of silence, the young man confessed he'd never given it the slightest thought.

To shorten his story here, the young man was persuaded by that thoughtful dean to apply; and in time, to his surprise, he found himself a Rhodes Scholar, about to sail off the next fall for two or three years study at Oxford University, in England.

* * *

HAVING FALLEN upon a Rhodes Scholarship by just such a long shot chance, I easily imagine hundreds of other young men, walking college and university campuses here and all over the country, who ought to try for Oxford—try, even if they fail.

But few will.

They will forfeit a life-bending experience for the want of good advice, or from ignorance, or from modesty born of an impression of the Rhodes Scholarships that ranges from nebulosity to fantasy.

To be sure, one should not skirt a very solid fact: While not every one of Mr. Rhodes' men matches the standard some of his predecessors set, Rhodes Scholars, i ntheir 57 short years, have contributed significantly to the life and letters of the English-speaking world. A few of them, indeed, approach the virtuosity I have imagined above. They create the myth.

Somehow the neurosurgery of our world would be unthinkable without Dr. Wilder Penfield. Its parliamentary life would be poorer with Senator Fulbright of Arkansas, who never left that state before he sailed for England.

The present Supreme Court of the U. S. would lack an articulate and judicious man, did it lack John Marshall Harlan; and to think of the small quantity of truly first-rate television reportage without Howard K. Smith of C.B.S., or American literary criticism in the 20th Century without Cleanth Brooks and Allen Tate is to become ensnarled in a contradiction in terms.

* * *

ROBERT PENN WARREN and Christopher Morley, as creative talents, would not rank high in any list of American men of letters, and that's not all. Not content with the real article, the writers of fiction have found a certain wry inspiration in Mr. Rhodes' legacy.

Flesh or fiction, these are among the spectacular heirs of Cecil Rhodes. And while it is not to be suggested that they became what they were because they were Rhodes Scholars, one would err in the opposite direction, perhaps, by calling it mere coincidence.

I found at Oxford a real academic community (one must stress the word) which yields with creaking reluctance to the fads and fashions, whether they spring from John Dewey or Karl Marx, built about a centuries-old college system where relatively small numbers of students live and are taught individually by dons who accept them (if only for the sake of form or argument) as intellectual peers and expect them to behave as peers.

At Oxford, one recalls a chance to be completely free, free from the distractions of a schedule, walled away briefly from the modern world and the city—though the noises of the city are just over the walls—as if those tremors we find so distracting, from double-entry ledgers to Nikita Khrushchev, had never appeared.

One recalls the chance to read at length and in depth, to find complexities and shadings of subjects which no survey course—and indeed no graduate school, however good—can offer.

* * *

ONE RECALLS a graceful life, flowing with coffee, tea and sherry, the milk and honey of Oxford life, where one may wear patches on his tweeds for 29 days of the month but must don white tie and tails and drink champagne for at least one.

One recalls long vacations, affording the American a chance not only to tour the British isles but to settle at places there and on the continent, to breathe the air long enough and deeply enough to sniff flavors not revealed to the hurrying tourist. (Visiting Oxford in the 1830's the Frenchman Alexis De Tocqueville was shocked to find that her students enjoyed—he italicized it in his daybook—six months of vacation a year! M. De Tocqueville would still be shocked.)

* * *

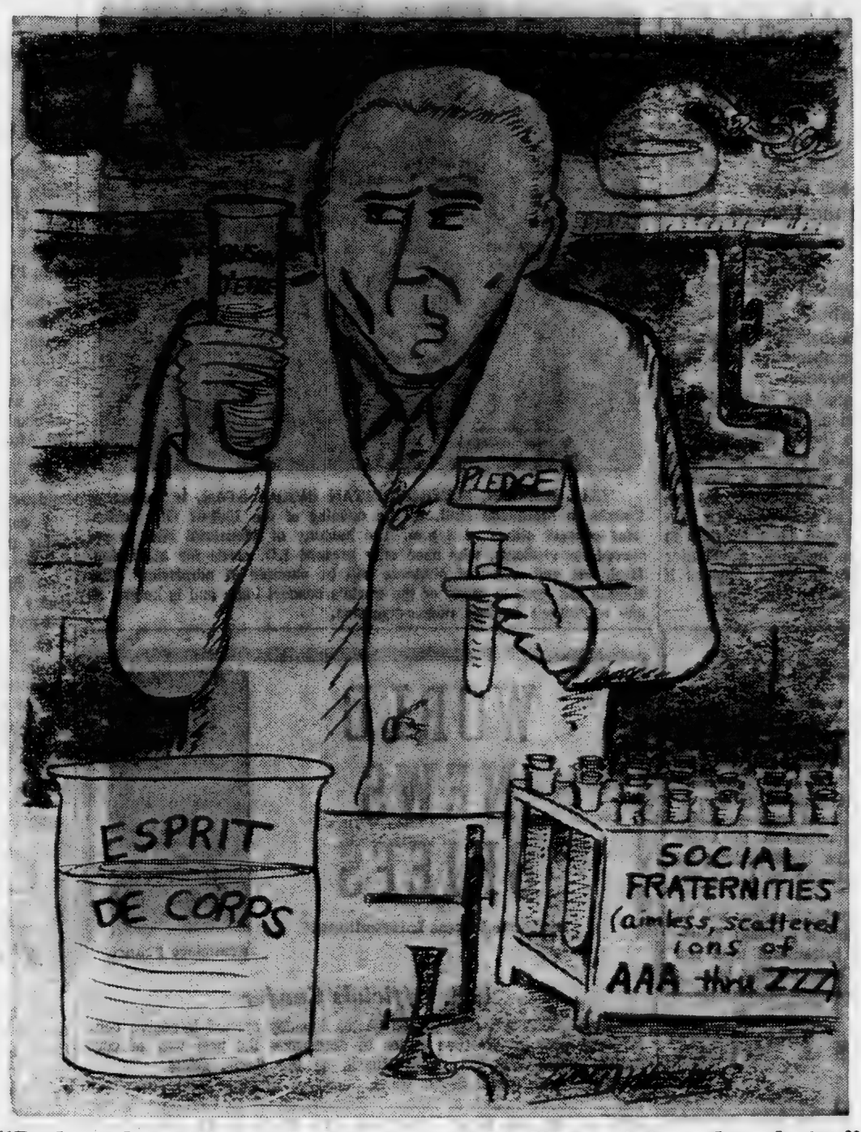
CECIL RHODES, the diamond magnate and British imperialist—wicked word—who made all this possible, provided in his will scholarships for young men from all over the English-speaking world and Germany (there are today 38 each year from the U. S.) who are literate, if not all literary; inclined to outdoor exercise, if not necessarily Pete Dawkinses or Whizzer Whites; and who possess what is called good character by those not embarrassed by the term.

From somewhere in Elysium, Mr. Rhodes has watched hundreds of scholars, ranging from stiff-necked German barons just from Gottingen or Munich to loose-limbed farm boys from the University of Arkansas, take up his benefaction and enjoy it.

The Rhodes is a special scholarship, offering a special quest, though it is not for any special "type" and the individuality of each scholar is usually striking.

It is not for the specialist, the student who knows already that he wants to devote his life to Kant's moral theory or James I's philosophy of divine right. It is hard on nationalism and devastating to puritanism.

And it is not for those who dislike company: the best company in the world.



"Perhaps by adding a dash or two of this I'll precipitate the solution"

West's Achilles Heel In Berlin

BERLIN—On April 29, 1952, two Soviet fighters fired three times with both cannon and machine guns at an Air France transport flying from Frankfurt to Berlin.

Two passengers were seriously injured.

The Russian's in rejecting a Western protest said the commercial airliner strayed from the 20-mile wide air corridor, one of three to Berlin above East Germany.

Even though that incident happened nine years ago, it illustrates the West's Achilles heel in Berlin.

* * *

IT SHOWS the vulnerability of the vital air traffic to attack. The Russians now are questioning the Western right of unrestricted access to Berlin by air.

What will happen when the Soviets carry out their threat to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany and give East German Communists control over Allied air and ground traffic?

On thing has been made clear. Gen. Lucius D. Clay, President Kennedy's personal representative here, said "absolutely not" when asked if the East Germans would be allowed to control Western air traffic in the corridors. But if the Allies refuse control, what will the Russians and East Germans do? They could try to interfere with the traffic, perhaps even try to force planes down.

* * *

SUCH A SITUATION, Western officials here agree, would bring the world very close to war.

The West knows that for Berlin to survive surrounded by Communist territory the air routes must remain open. An airlift saver the cit yin the 1948-1949 blockade and it could do it again.

If the Communists block road and rail routes to the city it would be up to the Allies to try and break through. But in the air the East would have to take the offensive.

* * *

EASTERN THREATS have not reduced passenger traffic. But many Germans have to fly whether they like it or not. On the ground they would have to pass through Communist checkpoints.

Incidents in the air corridors, however, would be sure to make travelers think twice about flying. Western fighter escorts could be provided but they would frighten many travelers away, too.

W. German Attitude Sometimes Fatalistic

BERLIN—Among the West German people one finds an occasional curious and disturbing reaction to today's world crisis.

It is a reaction of lassitude amounting almost to disinterest, or a fatilism which is just as bad, not only toward world problems but toward the problem as it effects their own country as well.

This is not to say that such an attitude represents majority German viewpoint or even a large percentage. But on a trip ranging from Bonn in the Rhineland, through the busy port and industrial city of Hamburg and finally to Berlin it occurs frequently enough to be worthy of note.

The German who takes the fatalistic attitude does so on two counts.

* * *

FIRST, IF THERE is a war, he will be the first to be hit.

Second, if there is a compromise it will be at his expense and the whole of Germany will be opened up to Russian conquest.

In any event, there is nothing he can do about either.

The lassitude also comes in two counts.

In the younger people it finds its expression in doubts about Germany's future despite its present great prosperity.

"Perhaps," said one young man in Bonn, "We made too much money too fast. I think we have lost our spiritual values."

* * *

THESE WERE values which he found hard to define but the move expression was a symbol of his disquiet.

The feeling also comes from the fact that, after losing two world wars, the German no longer feels master of his own destiny.

In any event, whether through lassitude among the people or as result of government preoccupation over recent months with the national election campaign, there is, outside of Berlin, no such sense of urgency as might be expected by one fresh from the United States.

BOOK REVIEW

Verse Book Written For, By Book Lover

Helen Bevington has certainly chosen her title well in her latest book, "When Found Make a Verse Of." As the title suggests this is a book written by a book lover who not only loves books but likes to make poems about books.

"When Found" is essentially a notebook in which Helen Bevington has collected the marginal notes of her reading and has assembled her thoughts and reminiscences of a career of being first a Reader and second a poet.

She says that her education began at eighteen when she bought two notebooks: one for the names and titles of authors and their books, the second in which she wrote, "Chiefly about Life." Since that time she has run through many more, but in each of these little journals she has searched out the powerful words of life, and she says, "When found I have made a note of."

* * *

The book has an amazing warmth which searches out the reader and guides him along the delightful path of the author's collection of chats, proverbs, bits and pieces of an inquisitive mind and a delightful sense of humor. The greatest portion of the book is devoted to other authors, but Helen Bevington has kept from being bookish.

Perhaps her fresh and somehow whimsical approach to literature is the very catalyst needed to convey the absolute joy she seems to get from life both in books and experience. Little verses on characters in the world of books such as:

" 'You have but two topics, Yourself and me,"
Said Johnson to Boswell, wearily.
'I am sick of both.' What both could tell
Was who made him sicker than Samuel."

Add a sparkling charm which is rare. Such humor as indicated in a poem on Herrick's Delia's double chin is a pleasant discovery.

* * *

IN ONE OF HER sketches she scorned the use of Poetess as a description of a "she Poet." However absurd the title Poetress Bevington may seem, it at least indicates the wonderful femininity which lends much of the charm to this book.

Although the book consists mostly of prose collections and meditations and light verse, there are some quite good serious pieces. "Lady at the Window" is perhaps the best of these; however, the collection "The Twelve Months in the Carolinas" is a better example of her diversity and keen observation.

* * *

"WHEN FOUND Make a Verse Of" is a notebook of ideas and their variations similar to the "commonplace" book of the Renaissance Age. In it Helen Bevington has shown her sympathy with the arts.

Mrs. Bevington is an associate professor of English at Duke University. She was educated at the University of Chicago and Columbia University. Her other published collections are "Doctor Johnson's Waterfall," "Nineteen Million Elephants," and "A Change of Sky."

Dutch Cop Hits Russian Ambassador

By HENRY SCHOUP

AMSTERDAM (UPI)—A Dutch policeman punched Soviet Ambassador P. K. Ponomarenko on the nose Monday in a free-swinging fist fight between Dutch police and Soviet officials over custody of Mrs. Alexei Golub whose Russian husband defected to the West.

When it was all over and after long hours of debate Mrs. Golub announced she was ready to return to Moscow and left shortly afterward. The weeping husband decided to remain in Holland.

Ponomarenko had threatened "far reaching consequences" for the Dutch government over the scuffle at Schiphol Airport and received in turn a dressing gown from Dutch Premier Jan E. De Quay who personally protested the Soviet violence.

Soviet Plane Waited

A Soviet Tupolov jet airliner which had waited at the airport all day took off almost immediately for Moscow with Mrs. Golub and the other Russian tourists. A Dutch official could only say: "I find this a terrible tragedy."

Golub had walked the streets of Amsterdam all night Saturday threshing out his decision to seek political asylum in the West.

Early Sunday he knocked on the door of a small hotel and told the proprietess in broken German of his decision.

She called police who took him into custody. Mrs. Golub was reported willing at first to defect too but changed her mind after thinking of her parents in Russia.

While making up her own mind she told officials "I love my husband."

Dutch officials took her into custody Monday at Schiphol Airport to ask her in private if she was returning to Russia of her own free will. But before the questioning could be completed Ponomarenko led a successful assault on the Dutch police station where she was held.

Started A Fistfight

"I told them we wished to speak to her alone but they would have none of it," Dutch police Lieutenant A. Veltman reported to the government.

"They started a fistfight and we threw them out of our office.

The premier called the ambassador to his office at the Hague and told him:

"The government is obliged to protest emphatically and vigorously the actions of Soviet Embassy employes who, with the use of violence, turned against frontier police who were performing their lawful duty."

De Squay told Ponomarenko Holland was still willing for the woman to return if she wished and would give her back her passport if she asked for it. It was seizure of the passport that appeared to annoy the Russians as much as anything.

Ponomarenko rushed back to Schiphol Airport and met them with Mrs. Golub and public prosecutor Dr. M. R. De Zaaijer in a room littered with half empty food plates and cigarette stubs.

The other 17 Russians waited in the lounge and restaurant.

Sent For Husband

De Zaaijer sent then for her husband and he was brought to the airport by two state policemen and an alien police inspector to face his wife. Mrs. Golub protested repeatedly she loved her husband but that she wanted to go home.

"I cannot tell you how shaken I am by this tragedy," De Zaaijer said. "I have given her every opportunity to say that she wished to stay here. I also arranged for her husband to see her."

Mrs. Golub was escorted by police to the waiting Russian plane.

It is forbidden by treaty to cross West German territory by night and the pilot took off for Moscow via Norway.

IFC Working Against Greek Dirty Rushing

The Interfraternity Council warned yesterday against attempts at 'dirty rush' by any of the UNC Greek societies. The council cautioned prospective rushees as well.

IFC Rush Committee Chairman Tim Burnette has dispatched agents to various parts of the campus to make sure that no fraternity is taking unfair steps to gain pledges. He has warned all fraternities and rushees of the consequences of participating in such rush tactics.

"Talking with a member of a fraternity, an alumnus, or a parent about joining any certain house is a violation of 'strict silence'," said Burnette.

Yankees Are Champions Again

Win Series In Fifth Game By 13-5 Score

United Press International

CINCINNATI (UPI)—New York Yankee power pulverized the hapless Cincinnati Reds, 13-5, Monday to win the World Series and give the Bronx Bombers their 19th triumph in 26 classic appearances.

Johnny Blanchard and Hector Lopez—subbing for ailing stars Mickey Mantle and Yogi Berra—clubbed home runs to spearhead a shattering 15-hit Yankee attack which included four doubles and a triple against a record total of eight Red pitchers.

Southpaw Bud Daley, who came on to put out a third inning fire for Ralph Terry, was the winning pitcher. But it definitely wasn't a hurlers' day as the Yankees hung the defeat in much-jarred Joey Jay, knocked out in a five-run first inning.

Frank Robinson and Wally Post ripped off homers for the Reds in their aborted 11-hit rampage this interminable afternoon before 32,589 sun-baked spectators. But helping to nullify this barrage were three Red errors and a wild pitch.

The Yankees swept all three played here in Crosley Field — marking the first time since the Yankees beat the Dodgers in five games in 1949 that a team failed to win a game in its home park—to take the series, four games to one.

Break Game Open

The Yankees broke this game open in the first inning and then proceeded to pound it into splintered fragments.

Using up eight Reds pitchers, the Yanks wiped out their own memory of 1956, when they had used seven in a game against the Dodgers.

And there was individual triumph for little Bobby Richardson, the pesky second baseman, who singled to lead off the first inning.

That was his ninth hit in a five-game series, tying a record held by four others and unmatched in the last 24 years.

The Yankees treated Jay—who had given them only four hits in winning the second game — as if he was a sore-armed batting practice pitcher.

Richardson started it off with that record-tying single to center, his ninth hit to match the mark for a five-game series set by Home Run Baker and Eddie Collins of the Athletics in 1910 and tied by Baker in 1913, Henie Groh of the Giants in 1922 and Joe Moore of the Giants in 1937.

Yankees Erupt

The next two men went down in order but then the roof fell in as the Yankees erupted for a total of six hits—a homer, a triple, two doubles and two singles—in sending all nine men to the plate.

Richardson, after his record-tying single and the two outs, took second on Jay's pickoff attempt which first baseman Gordy Coleman failed to field.

It made little difference, actually. Because Blanchard, subbing for Mantle, proved a clouting carbon copy of Mickey with his two-run blast into the right field bleachers.

The Yankees were just getting started. Elston Howard doubled against the left field scoreboard and Moose Skowron rapped him home with a single off the center field wall which would have been a double except that he fell down rounding first base.

Even that didn't matter.

Because, after Jim Maloney was summoned to the mound and Jay trudged to the showers, Lopez tripled to the right field corner to score Skowron. Light-hitting Cletis Boyer next caught the fence-denting fever and walloped a double off the left field scoreboard which sent Lopez home with the fifth Yankee run. Terry struck out to end the nightmare inning.

The Yanks added another run in the second for a 6-0 edge. Tony Kubek sliced a single to left, and Maris looped a double to the opposite field, scoring Kubek. After Blanchard drew a walk, that was all for Maloney. He was replaced by Ken Johnson, who put out the fire.

If the Yankees expected the Reds to roll over and play dead, they were sadly mistaken.

Robinson Smashes Homer

The Rhinelanders got two on in the second and failed to score—but then they ripped back for three runs in the third on Robinson's homer, routing Terry and getting two more men on base before reliever Bud Daley got them out.

Don Blasingame and Eddie Kasko started it with back to back singles. Vada Pinson flied out to deep right, Blasingame tagging and taking third after the catch. Then Robinson, with only one hit to show for 12 previous appearances at the plate, smashed a homer into the right centerfield bleachers at the 390-foot mark.

Correction

Rett Everett's winning time in Saturday's cross-country meet was 20:46 minutes, instead of 10:46 as appeared in Sunday's story. Everett cut almost 32 seconds off the old course record held by teammate Gerry Stuver and held the lead throughout the race.

The Tar Heels defeated Clemson 18-48 and appear to be headed for another outstanding year under Coach Dale Ranson. The only team to defeat Ranson's runners was Maryland in a dual meet last year, but the Tar Heels came on to win the ACC championship in the annual conference meet.

Hutchinson Labels Yanks Great Team

By FRED DOWN
United Press International

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Manager Fred Hutchinson paid tribute to the victorious New York Yankees as "a great team" Monday and said his Cincinnati Reds "did a good job all year and have nothing to be ashamed of."

"Our guys did a fine job all year and we're looking forward to beating the Yankees next year," said Hutchinson, whose first act after the series was to congratulate Yankee manager Ralph Houk in the New York clubhouse. "I thought we got good pitching and played well during the series, except in this game when we got

Hutchinson said he believed the expanded National League "will be to our advantage next year" and pointed out, "we're a set club and we won't get hurt too much by the players we lose in the stocking of the new clubs."

Hutchinson, disappointed but not downcast, singled out Roger Maris' game-winning homer in the third game as "the turning point of the series and blow that hurt us the most."

"We were doing all right until then," he said, "but after that things began to go wrong."

At the same time Hutchinson said the series was "by no means a shattering disappointment to me" and praised 23-year old rookie catcher Johnny Edwards as the No. 1 surprise of the series.

Praised Kasko

"He caught better in the series than he did during the season and he also hit well," said Hutchinson.

"It's nice to be able to look forward to having him next year."

Police Verify Last Nite Johnson Asked For Poison

By LLOYD LITTLE and GARRY BLANCHARD

Police last night confirmed that William Johnson Jr. made inquiries about a "fast acting poison" the day before he and his roommate were found dead in their dormitory room.

Another development in the five day old mystery was the university pathologist's report that no trace of cyanide has been detected in food found in the room.

Monday police ruled out another lead when no evidence of cyanide was found in two milk-shake cups found in the students' room.

Chapel Hill Ponce Chief W. D. Blake did not mention an expected report on the vital organs taken from the bodies. However, pathologist Dr. W. . Hutmes said last night that he had turned such a report over to acting coroner G. A. Cannady but that the coroner was "probably preparing it."

Blake said that the police were hoping the type of cyanide could be identified. A six-man coroner's jury ruled Saturday that cyanide caused the deaths of James M. Barham and William H. Johnson Jr.

Meanwhile detectives continued checking reports that Johnson had made inquiries about a "fast-acting poison" the day before the roommates were found dead in their room.

Students Questioned

Several students were said to have reported hearing him make the inquiries.

Blake said most of the students questioned during the investigation thus far lived in Cobb dorm, scene of the two deaths.

The chief again said that there was no connection between the deaths and Ralph Sargent, a student arrested Sunday with mercuric cyanide pills in his possession. Sargents trial was cintinued in Chapel Hill recorder's court yesterday.

Sargent reportedly went to Memorial Hospital sometime Sunday night, but the exact cause of the trip was not revealed. A hospital spokesman reported the youth was admitted to the infirmary for an "observation period."

"We are pretty certain that it was not mercuric cyanide," said Blake, "and we don't think anyone's poisoning people." He added that he believed the possibility of finding the source of the poison was small.

Cyanide available

The chief said accidental poisoning has been ruled out, adding it was either murder-suicide, double murder or a suicide pact. "Cyanide is very accessible especially in film laboratories and machine shops," said Blake.

"It looks almost impossible to ar-
"It looks almost impossible to arrive at any definite conclusions. I'm just hoping we'll be able to have enough evidence to prove what happened."

The chief said that Barham was apparently near death Thursday night when he was found violently ill in a bathroom "and went into convulsions." Johnson was reported to have told other students that if Barham needed a doctor he would call one.

Chiang Kai-shek

Chiang Won't Block Mongolia

TAIPEI — Nationalist Chinese officials have told foreign diplomats China will not veto the application of Communist Outer Mongolia for United Nations membership, diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

The Nationalists still oppose the admission of the Soviet-backed Asian state, but have decided after much pressure and persuasion that a veto could cost the Nationalists their own U.N. seat, the source said.

The Outer Mongolia application is linked to that of the African nation of Mauritania. A Nationalist veto of Outer Mongolia would cause a Soviet veto of Mauritania. The result could be African resentment against China and the consequent support of the 12-nation Brazzaville group of African nations for Communist China.

To Bring Operation Abolition Here With Both Sides Debate

"Operation Abolition," the House Un-American Activities Committee's controversial film version of the 1960 San Francisco student "riots," will be shown next Monday night at 8:30 in Memorial Hall.

Mike Harrington, editor of the Socialist Party newspaper NEW AMERICA, will debate a yet unnamed conservative concerning HUAC and the film.

The Carolina Forum and the campus Young Republicans Club are co-sponsoring the debate and film showing.

Forum officers are presently attempting to engage a conservative spokesman to debate Harrington. Mentioned as possibilities are Fulton Lewis III, son of the famous newscaster Fulton Lewis Jr. and former HUAC staff member; M. Stanton Evans, editor of the INDIANAPOLIS NEWS; and Jessie Helms, owner of WRAL-TV.

"Abolition" Narrator

Lewis was narrator for "Operation Abolition," and has travelled around the country with the film, speaking to college, civic club, and "patroitic organization" audiences.. Harrington h asdebated him on numerous occasions. .

"Operation Abolition," which is being distributed by a private film company (with the proceeds going to the House Committee), is a "documentary" purporting to show that the American Communist Party led the student demonstrations in San Francisco during HUAC hearings.

The film's account of events has been upheld by J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the city officials of San Francisco, among others. Liberal groups, including the National Council of Churches, and several newspapers — NEW YORK TIMES, WASHINGTON POST, among others—have condemned the film.

No Responsibility

"Since the film has not been shown on campus previously," said Baker, "much of the controversy surrounding 'Operation Abolition' is going on above the knowledge of many UNC students. To give them the opportunity to decide for themselves on the merits of the film's content and message is the purpose of the YRC for bringing the film to the University community."

Ia. Scientist Urges Schools Get In Space

NEW YORK (UPI)—Dr. James A. Van Allen, discoverer of the radiation belt surrounding the earth, Tuesday called on American universities to get into step with the nation's space race with Russia.

In a speech accepting the American Rocket Society's first research award, the head of the State University of Iowa's physics department called on the federal government, the National Aeronautics and Space Agency and private industry to provide universities with necessary space education facilities, research support, fellowships and competitive atmosphere.

"Graduate schools can make a great contribution to space science and technology, but the universities that are doing this can be counted on the fingers of both hands," he said.

Van Allen said the nation's space program can "muddle along" with a level of over-all competence far short of our space ambitions, but gradually its efforts in the field will become less and less imaginative. Fortunately, he said, the Russians "suffer from the same malady."

"Universities, like no other segment of our culture, have shown the ability to translate the callow enthusiasm of our youth into broad-guage, long-term competency," he said.

"It is up to the universities to put the cutting edge on the blunt tools we are using at this time," he added.

CHAPLIN FREED

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Actor Charlie Chaplin Jr., 36, was free on $276 bail Tuesday pending his scheduled pleading Friday to a drunken driving charge.

Yack Photogs

"The only thing wrong with the Carolina Coeds is there is not enough of them," said Harrison Scott, one of the Yack photographers from Smith Studios in Raleigh.

Scott and the other photographer, Stanly Cheek, have been taking the individual snapshots for the Yack for the last three weeks. Their only complaint is that students wait until Friday to come in, causing a panic.

Cheek, who has been doing the Yack pictures for the last twelve years, feels that he's been here long enough for an "honorary diploma."

Some of the boys have been coming in wearing bermuda shorts or tennis shorts under their coats and ties. "They're very surprised when we tell them that the pictures will be full-length this year—all in fun of course," said Scott. "We have them cross their legs, or uncross them, or dust off their shoes or something like that to worry them.

"One fellow came in wearing very short shorts under a long sport coat. It looked like he wasn't wearing any pants," Scott continued. "After we took his picture, we sent him across the hall to the proofs office and had him ask the secretaries if they had seen his pants."

Yack Pictures

Sophomore Yack pictures will be taken this week through Friday at 1-6 p.m. daily in the GM basement. Juniors who have not been photographed may pay a late fee of $1. Nurses' pictures will also be taken this week. Senior nurses are requested to wear their uniforms. Other nurses are asked to wear black sweaters. Sophomore men should wear coats and ties; women, black sweaters.

Senior nurses who are unable to come this week may have their pictures taken at 10 a.m. Saturday with no late fee.

'Communist Liar'

Yesterday's editorial column was devoted to the printing of at letter from a campus conservative, Martin L. Wilson. Wilson criticized the DTH and liberals for what he termed "aiding and abetting" the Communist cause.

The cause of much of his concern was an editorial in which Wilson finds "several quotations from a book called 'the Un-Americans' by Frank Donner."

Since Donner has been labeled a Communist by Gordon Scherer, a member of HUAC, Wilson fears the DTH and others have been sucked into the Communist conspiracy.

To begin with, Donner was not quoted at any point in the editorial. The persons quoted were Presidents Roosevelt, Truman and Kennedy. We do not feel these men are Communists.

That Donner uses their expressions on HUAC in his book is only incidental. It can be validated in othe rsources. We used Donner's book because all three quotations appeared there.

What Wilson ignores, either through design or oversight, is the fact that we nowhere used the opinions of Frank Donner.

The statements that we quoted from Presidents Truman and Kennedy, appeared in many newspapers in the country when they were made. Donner has no claim to them. He has merely recorded them in his book.

Wilson has not contested the validity of any of the facts presented, nor attacked the gist of the argument.

He has resorted to a completely irrelevant attack on Donner—whose political views in no way shaped the thinking of the men he quoted. We personally do not subscribe to all of Donner's case against HUAC. But Wilson does not attack the book, he attacks the author, hoping, we suppose, to defend HUAC by maligning its opposition.

Donner may be a Communist sympathizer. If he is, then we join Wilson in opposing his politics. But to cast aspersions at the authenticity of his documentation solely on these grounds is invalid. Does Wilson suppose that Donner held a gun in the backs of three Presidents and forced them to make public statements so he could quote them?

We encourage the exchange of opinion on the question of HUAC. It is a complex issue and one that is far from being settled.

But little can be gained from attacks on personalities, affixing guilt by association or other methods that have n oreal validity, using emotion rather than reason as a base.

Wilson's comment sounds too much like a cry of "Communist Liar" to be taken seriously.

Still A Mystery

The results of chemical analysis of the food scraps and milkshake cups found in the room of the two youths found poisoned in Cobb have revealed nothing, dashing the hopes of investigators who are searching desperately for a clue to unravel the mystery which surrounds the double tragedy.

Everyone has his theory as to the actual circumstances which led to the deaths, none of them verifiable.

With possibly the only two persons who could reveal the answer dead, it now looks, so far as we can gather, as if the mystery will remain unsolved.

The investigation is losing its momentum as more and more facts come to light, but fail to provide the key to the deaths.

The incident has been an unfortunate one for everyone involved.

Hope has not been given up that a definite answer will be found, making way for a return to brighter things. But at present, it looks as if that answer will not be forthcoming.

Bearding The Lion

Abraham Ribicoff had some refreshingly frank remarks to make a few days ago to a gathering in Washington of about a thousand college presidents and deans who compose the American Council on Education.

Mr. Ribicoff, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in the Kennedy administration, said "You aren't going to solve the problems of education in conferences like this. If you believe education is important, the best thing you can do is to make your speeches back in your own home town."

Certainly Secretary Ribicoff is not alone in the impression that professional educators sometimes seem more interested in their own tete-a-tetes about education than in improving the educational opportunity of American youth.

Where were you, Mr. Ribicoff asked the educators, when federal aid to the hard-pressed public schools was "done in" by the Congress? Mr. Ribicoff's answer to his own question was that the Council showed interest only in its "part" of the educational picture, higher education, during the Congressional session.

This is a legitimate question. It is the kind of question that educators all over the land are going to have to face up to if they are going to meet their responsibilities to education.

There are, of course, "parts" of the educational program in this country. Still, as Mr. Ribicoff so ably indicated, all who are interested in education are going to have to pull together—and pull hard—if even adequate progress is to be made. This is true for the simple reason that when one part is hurt or neglected, all parts suffer.

Field Day For The Gripers

The spoilers and gripers of Chapel Hill had a field day last Saturday after the unpleasantness with Clemson at Kenan Stadium. The swine Junius Goodman was reportedly seen in the Rathskeller, celebrating with his shifty-eyed friends. Predictions ran rampant that this is to be another three-win season.

Even The Coach was not optimistic, and the Heroes of Chapel Hill were nowhere to be seen. The joyful bellowings that used to emanate so abundantly from their Lenoir Hall pen have quieted, and old men are shaking their heads.

* * *

Of course, the de-emphasizers are again creeping out of the woodwork, and their whining arguments, with all their specious logic, are causing more and more formerly loyal hearts to waver.

Their logic needs no refuting: it seems improper to them that 48 per cent of the football team be recruited from out-of-state, while the student body is restricted by law to no more than fifteen per cent outsiders.

As one would expect, they are integrationists. They point to Iowa State, whose team will probably be No. 1 in the nation, and observe that their squad is composed almost entirely of Negroes. North Carolina is wasting a great deal of native talent because of its "social standards."

* * *

BUT WE MUST object that these arguments are not even related to the hateful topic of de-emphasis, and hence are absurd in the mouths of de-emphasizers. We confront these malcontents with the prospect of the inept football they will be subjected to if a student team is substituted for the present gang.

Imagine our chagrin when they resort to the unspeakably rude reply that no team could have looked more hapless than our own against Clemson!

* * *

THE TRUTH is that the debate on de-emphasis, if there is to be one at UNC, must not be waged according to the success or failure of one team or of one coach, nor on the financial success or failure of the C.A.A. The argument must be restricted to the merits of having a semi-professional squad at Carolina, as opposed to the visionary proposal of a student team. Nobody dislikes the unfortunate Heroes of Chapel Hill; we all want to see them win, if they can.

A Legitimate Gripe— & Plea For Free Press

Why is it that any time anything happens to which newsmen are sent, the lay observers standing around feel it is their sacred duty to hinder the legitimate effort to report the news?

The business in Cobb Friday is an excellent example of the type of thing I mean. When newsmen from the DTH arrived, they were threatened in word and manner, not only by students, but also by University officials . . . not to mention law officers. This is understandable behavior on the part of the law officers, because they were busy and really didn't have time to be bothered by newsmen, and to a lesser extent on the part of the University officials who were trying to make the job of investigation easier for them; but where do the students get the authority to make life harder for working newsmen who are only trying to do their jobs: report the news?

And in a more general situation, why do ordinary citizens act the same way?

WHAT IS SO BAD ABOUT TELLING PEOPLE WHAT HAS HAPPENED?

This is a question that has been bothering me ever since I got into this business two years ago in Raleigh, working as a photographer for the News and Observer.

The only answer I have been able to come up with is that people think it's O.K. for them to know about something, but that they are the only people who have a right to know. It's good for them to see something, but bad for other people to find out about it either by reading about it or seeing pictures of it.

If these people really have the tender sensibilities of others in mind, they are to be commended for their thoughtfulness of their neighbors.

* * *

HOWEVER, THIS assumption is very dubious, for it is these same people who talk to other people about what has happened and foster the spread of harmful rumors that are more likely to upset people than the straight news of the event. This is precisely what the newspeople are trying to prevent.

As we all know, there are all sorts of rumors flying around concerning Friday's tragedy. Rumors are always present after any tragedy, even the most cut and dried. But how many might have been scotched if the news had been permitted to be quickly and accurately reported? How many fewer people would have been hurt and upset?

* * *

WE WILL NEVER be able to answer these questions, partly because no one can ever know how many people are affected by any particular situation and partly because some people take it upon themselves to hinder the reporting of the facts.

A similar question has been raised over the Wilmington air tragedy two weeks ago. It is said that a Civil Air Patrol commander ordered the cadets in his group to confiscate and fog the film from the cameras of the onlookers, among whom were professional news photographers. It is further said that this CAP squadron is now being sued because of this action.

If this CAP commander, or someone who relayed the order to him, had not issued the order, the work of the Air Force investigating crew would most certainly have been made easier. There might have been valuable information on the film which was destroyed. But now we'll never know.

* * *

THE POINT I'm trying to make is this: In this country we have a free press, because we feel that people have a right to know what is going on around them. We feel it is better for people to have all the facts about a situation than to be ignorant and uninformed. The old saying goes "What you don't know won't hurt you." This is no longer true. We must know, in order to survive.

If we hamper the press, it will not be free. If we allow someone else to decide what we should know and what we shouldn't WE will not be free.

* * *

AND THE OFFICIALS and students in Cobb were trying to do just that Friday. We are perfectly willing to surrender a part of our freedom in the classroom, because we realize that among other things we are learning how to inform ourselves. But we should never surrender our right to be allowed to find out for ourselves outside the classroom. Why else are we here?

Freedom of knowledge is a necessity for a free society. A free press is an invaluable aid to freedom-to-know. Help us keep our free press.

Advice.. And A Squirrel

President John F. Kennedy will be he-ah on the Carolina campus to receive an honorary degree and address a convocation at Kenan Stadium on October 12, Founders' Day.

Secret Service are already on the campus preparing for his visit, performing such vital tasks as checking out Chancellor Aycock's credentials, testing the Old Well's water, and pruning Davie Poplar.

Incidentally, we understand that after a preliminary investigation of the campus, the Secret Service has recommended that for the President's complete protection three additional "Silent Sams" should be erected immediately to cover him from the South, the East, and the West.

* * *

WE SINCERELY hope, at any rate, that the Secret Service will clear Carolina and approve the President's proposed visit.

There are several reasons why we particularly want the President to come to Carolina. In the first place, we've already made elaborate preparations for him.

All the faculty members have either bought new robes or cleaned old ones for the ceremony in Kenan Stadium; the students have planned not to prepare for Thursday classes, and the Young Democrats have arranged a really big show with 500 cars and 50 people to greet him at the airport. Secondly, we think it would be interesting to witness a meeting between Governor Terry Sanford and Mr. Kennedy.

Thirdly, we would like to have the opportunity to ask the President a few questions. For instance, what is the correct pronunciation of LAOS? How did he manage to rate a degree for one brief visit when it's taking most of us four years plus? And when is he going to tell Khrushchev to "go to hell"?

* * *

FINALLY, AND most important of all our reasons, we think that a visit to the Carolina campus will be a learning experience for our young President.

The University of North Carolina is indisputebly unique, and we believe that if Mr. Kennedy takes full advantage of the opportunity of learning from us while he is here, he'll return to Washington an even wiser and more enlightened man.

For example, if he could sit in on negotiations between the Interfrafraternity Council and the administration for a co-ed visiting agreement, we think that he might pick up a few pointers that could help him negotiate on Berlin.

A visit to Harry's could yield a recipe for cheese omelet for his French chef. After a chat with a fashion-wise Carolina co-ed, he could inform Jackie that scarab bracelets, pleated skirts, circle pins, and Weejuns have outdated sleeveless sheaths and pillboxes. President Friday can fill him in on how to handle a troika. Surely The Daily Tar Heel staff could provide him with any additional information or advice he might need.

* * *

UNQUESTIONABLY, THE visit of the President of the United States will be a rare and wonderful occasion for him and us. We think that at least we shouldn't let him leave without an Arboretum squirrel for Caroline's animal menagerie.

University Came First

An Open Letter to Harry W. Lloyd:

In your Tuesday morning column you blasted a group of students who were complaining about the training table in Lenoir Hall. In this column you referred to pseudo-intellectuals who didn't gain attention for their mental acrobatics and therefore don't like athletes to gain attention.

Well, Harry, what do you think the purpose of this university is, to field intellectuals or football players? Universities came first, athletics were added later. Athletics are an integral part of the university life but should not overshadow the more important function of the university—training minds.

* * *

THE CLOSING of the training table in the Monogram Club, the remodeling of the Pine Room, and the building of the partition in Lenoir Hall, together with the expectation of the largest enrollment the university has ever had, were poor timing.

True, the football players should have a training table, but it is also true that the faculty area at the Monogram Club is used a lot less than Lenoir Hall.

The situation is bad everywhere for all concerned, and surely something can be worked out. Running the risk of an HUAC investigation (House Unathletic Committee), might I suggest certain hours for athletes to use their area in Lenoir and the rest of the time let others use it?

Some Queries On Cobb Deaths

Dear Editor:

To any intelligent person following the newspaper accounts of the death of the two Cobb Dorm students, there must appear some facts that seem out-of-line with first-hand observations. There are also other facts that come out only with questioning of persons involved both directly and indirectly. For instance:

1) Why, in both the DTH and The Charlotte Observer (the only two papers that I presently have had access to), does the Saturday edition say that both the boys were in ". . . unnaturally straight positions," and then in the Sunday edition of the DTH the position of the boys was evidently not considered important enough to elaborate upon, while in the Observer, it states that ". . . both were in normal sleeping positions."

This seems incongruous. It would seem to me that the "sleeping position" would not be "unnaturally straight." What about the position of the student who was found to have taken cynanide last year? What was his position? Were the sources of information reached and plugged before the Sunday editions of these papers? Or is the Observer reporter taking his material from a University press release? Who wrote the release? At whose direction?

* * *

2) Why, when the call came in to infirmary for doctors, did several doctors answer? Why did every doctor, without exception, return with a shocked and grim visage? Doctors see death every day; why did this affect them so much?

Why did certain of the doctors closet themselves individually for almost an hour, seeing no one, and talking only to high Consolidated University officials? There is an unconfirmed report of blue marks on the neck of one of the students . . . what about that? Barham was a junior pre-Med student. Could that have given him access to cyanide? If so, how?

* * *

3) What about the two milkshake cups? What about the reported telephone conversation of a high University Medical Staff physician with an unknown party, and the physician's assuring the party that he could ". . . not be held responsible for IT . . ." (what was IT?), and that the party would ". . . not be involved in any way." (Involved with what? The investigation?) This conversation took place shortly after the death of the two boys was discovered.

* * *

4) Why is the Secret Service so interested (or was interested) in the double tragedy? President Kennedy will not eat anything here—his lunch will be en route to Ft. Bragg.

Many questions like this beg for answers. Will we get them?

Macmillan, Gromyko At Meeting In London

LONDON (UPI) — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan Tuesday held what they described as "useful" talks on the Berlin crisis. But authoritative diplomatic sources said they made no progress toward East-West negotiations on a Berlin settlement.

Macmillan met with Gromyko for one hour and 40 minutes at Gromyko's request. Gromyko was making a 24-hour stopover in London on his way back to Moscow to report to Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev on his talks with President Kennedy in Washington.

An official statement from the British Foreign Office said the talks between Macmillan and Gromyko covered the "same ground" as the Soviet foreign minister's talks in Washington. No progress was reported in the Washington talks.

Following the meeting, Gromyko told newsmen that he had the "general impression" after his talks here and in Washington that "there is growing understanding between ourselves."

Everything Must Be Done

"Everything must be done by the responsible government, that is the great powers, to avoid a collision and find a peaceful solution of the outstanding problems," Gromyko said.

HAROLD MACMILLAN

The British Foreign Office said "the prime minister expressed the hope that these useful discussions would be continued." Gromyko also described the conversations as "very useful."

But authoritative diplomatic sources said no advance was made and no change in the respective East-West positions on Berlin resulted.

Foreign Minister Lord Hume sat in on the talks. Gromyko was accompanied by Soviet Ambassador to London Aleksander Soldatov and Deputy Foreign Minister V. M. Semeyonov.

Authoritative sources gave the following account of the talks:

Endorsed Kennedy's Stand

—Macmillan told Gromyko that Britain endorsed "entirely" Kennedy's stand on Berlin.

—Macmillan warned Gromyko of the "grave dangers" of any Soviet unilateral action on Berlin, particularly regarding Western rights of access to the divided city behind the Iron Curtain.

There was "no advance and no changes," the sources summed up. At their meeting, Gromyko delivered a personal message to Macmillan from Khrushchev. The message merely extended Khrushchev's personal greetings to Macmillan and contained no policy statement.

German Reds Stop Military Discharges

By John J. Meehan

BERLIN (UPI) — Communist East Germany Tuesday announced a freeze on military discharges to meet the threat of what it claimed were increased "war preparations" in the West.

The announcement coincided with the biggest Communist war games since World War II and a new rocket-rattling warning by Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan.

Mikoyan, in a speech at a steel workers' rally in the East German city of Freital, said the Soviet's orbital space ship Vostok II was an example of the advances made by Soviet sciences. "These rockets are a powerful force," he was quted as saying by the East German news agency ADN. "The Soviet Union wishes to use them only for peaceful purposes."

But ,he added: "If an aggressor should dare to attack the Soviet Union and the Socialist Communist camp they will get horrible reprisals."

Meanwhile, East Germans continued to flee to the West in spite of the wall and "death zones" set up by the Communists.

AFL-CIO Rejects Teamster's Union Admittance Bid

NEW YORK (UPI)—The top leadership of the AFL-CIO overwhelmingly rejected Tuesday a move to re-admit James R. Hoffa and his huge Teamsters' union to the international organization.

AFL-CIO President George Meany told newsmen after a stormy closed session of the union's executive council that all indications were that the Teamsters are now even more dominated by "corrupt and criminal" elements than when they were expelled four years ago.

The vote against the proposal for immediate re-admission of Hoffa's Teamsters was 24 to 3. Two members of the 20-man executive council were absent, including UAW President Walter Reuther, busy with contract negotiations in Detroit.

Must Correct Practices

Meany said the Teamsters would only be re-admitted if they corrected practices violating the ethical standards of the AFL-CIO constitution.

A newsman asked Meany under what conditions Hoffa personally could ever be re-admitted to the AFL-CIO.

"Only if he emulates Saul of Tarsus and goes off in the wilderness for a year to repent," Meany said.

The proposal to re-admit the Teamsters can—and undoubtedly will—be raised again at the

JAMES R. HOFFA

AFL-CIO national convention in Miami in December, Meany said. But the vote Tuesday made it clear Hoffa had no chance of re-admission at this time.

On the other hand, the AFI-CIO will now go ahead with consideration of proposals to try to take away members from the Teamsters whose 1.7-million-man union is the largest single labor organization in the United States.

Submitted By Curran

The proposal to let the Teamsters back in was submitted by Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union.

Tenth-Ranked Terps Are Next Opponents For North Carolina

Condie, Novak, Arizzi, Shiner All Rate High

By Harry W. Lloyd
DTH Sports Editor

Darkhorse Maryland, off to a booming start with three successive wins thus far, is the next hurdle in the path of the Tar Heel footballers. Carolina will play at College Park next Saturday.

Tom Nugent's Terrapins were rated tenth in the United Press International coaches' poll this week after their surprising win over high-ranked Syracuse last week by 22-21. They have earlier wins over SMU, 14-6, and Clemson, 24-21.

The Tar Heels have defeated N. C. State 27-22, but lost last week to Clemson 27-0.

In the Maryland backfield, the Carolinians will find two of the top runners in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Dennis Condie, the 160-pound senior halfback, is the top ground gainer in the league. He has carried 48 times and gained a pace-setting 204 yards for a 4.3 average. Carolina fans will remember him for a 90-yard kickoff return he made in Kenan Stadium last season as the Terps pulled a 22-19 upset.

The other Terp who rates high in the conference ball-carrying list is Ernie Arizzi, a 180-pound sophomore. Arizzi, who has been tabbed as one of the most exciting backs in Maryland history, has a 11.5 average for 10 carries. He burst into prominence in the Syracuse game last week.

Of course, the Maryland player that everyone will be watching is end Gary Collins, the 1960 All-ACC player who is a top choice for All-America this year. Collins is the top pass receiver on the team as well as a fine blocker and tackler.

Throwing passes his way could be either of the two fine Maryland quarterbacks, Dick Novak or Dick Shiner. The latter, a sophomore, ranks fifth in the ACC with 263 yards total offense, while Novak is right behind with 253.

Frosh Prepare For Wake Game

By Ed Dupree

UNC's freshman fooball team ropped their second straight contest Friday, losing to the Clemson frosh 30-27, but he free-scoring battle was not a ttoal loss for the Tar Babies.

Coach George Barclay substituted freely, using 35 players in the game. He used his second and third teams as much as the starting unit and was pleased with the team's performance.

"Our line play was good overall, but it was best in the second half," Barclay said. "We got very good pass protection from all our units."

Against the N. C. State freshmen in the season's opener poor pass protection was one of the Tar Babies' big problems, but it showed a good deal of improvement in the Clemson game.

The Clemson frosh forced Barclay's boys to go to the air and a pair of third-string backs stole the show. Quarterback Jim Gallagher connected with halfback Ronnie Jackson on a 74-yard pass play for one of the Tar Babies' three fourth-quarter touchdowns. Jackson also ran two second-half kickoffs back for touchdowns as he turned a brilliant offensive effort.

Jackson, a 5-8, 155-pounder from Rocky Mount, took a second-half kickoff and carried it 85 yards for the first Carolina touchdown and scored the game's final touchdown with a 90-yard kickoff return in the fourth quarter.

Barclay said that his team couldn't run the football against a big Clemson squad, so they had to go to the air. "In the first half, we couldn't catch the ball, and when he ptassing atack started working in the last half it was too late."

Since he used so many players, Barclay could not single out any outstanding players. "All the boys worked hard and turned in good performances. I used at least three men at every position and all the boys looked good."

Wake Forest, Carolina's opponent Friday, has also lost both of their games—so both teams will be victory-hungry. The Demon Deaclets lost to Clemson, 35-26, and Duke, 27-0.

Barclay looks for a good running and passing game from the Wake Forest frosh and named quarterback Ralph Brandewiede, fullback Brian Piccolo, halfback Wayne Welborn, and end Rickey Hooker as some of the big men in the Wake offense.

The two winless, but far from impotent, freshman teams will tangle in Kenan Stadium Friday at 2 o'clock in the home opener for the UNC yearlings.

Soccermen Play Generals Here At 3 O'Clock Today

Herman Prakke

Coach Marvin Allen's soccermen see action here at Fetzer Field this afternoon at 3 against the Generals of Washington & Lee.

The Carolina booters, who slipped by little Roanoke in their first game, found the going a little tougher at Annapolis last week in their engagement with the Naval Academy. The Middies, after being tied 1-1 at halftime, pushed across four goals in the final 44 minutes to whip the Tar Heels 5-1. Senior forward Bill Shettle scored the only goal for UNC.

In the starting lineup for Carolina will be flashy center forward Pete Blake, still looking for his first goal, wings Herman Prakke and Kingman Brown, and inside men Frank Lankford and Shettle. At halfback will be George Beim, John Kenrick, and Bill Snyder, with Dick Bordogna and Charles Battle at fullback. Tom Griffith alternates with Larry Steele at goalie.

OUTLAWS PARTY

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — Gov. Frank B. Morrison has signed into law a bill outlawing the Communist party in Nebraska. The law provides up to 20 years in prison for party members.

In Training Under Korea GI Measure

Some 2,100 North Carolina veterans are expected to be in training this fall under the Korea GI Bill, more than six years following the close of the Korea Conflict, the Veterans Administration predicted today.

This is less than half of the 4,900 enrolled last fall. At the peak of the GI education and training program, October 1949, more than 73,000 World War II veterans were in training under the GI Bill in North Carolina.

An additional 125 disabled Korea veterans, a drop of some 25 from last fall's enrollment, are expected to be taking vocational rehabilitation training under a special act for the seriously disabled. The peak of this program was in October 1956, when 630 disabled World War II veterans were in training.

Newer Program

A smaller and newer educational assistance program for orphans of deceased servicemen and veterans, whose deaths were the result of their military service, is gaining momentum. The VA predicted that about 480 orphans would be enrolled this fall under this program, compared to 307 last fall.

More than half of the veterans in training this fall will be in the nation's colleges and universities, and another 20% will be in school below the college level. The rest will be taking on-the-job or institutional on-farm training.

More than 240,000 World War II and Korea veterans of North Carolina have received education or training under the GI Bill, and close to 14,000 seriously disabled veterans have received vocational rehabilitation, J. D. DeRamus, Manager, Veterans Administration Regional Office, Winston-Salem, N. C., said.

Ends In 1964

For most Korea veterans, the vocational rehabilitation program will end on January 31, 1964; and for those training under the GI Bill, the program ends January 31, 1965.

The orphans' educational assistance program will continue for many years, and is expected to reach its peak in the middle 1960s, Mr. DeRamus predicted.

Originally enacted for the assistance of orphans whose parent's death was the result of service in the Spanish-American War, World War I, World War II or the Korea Conflict, the law was later broadened to include orphans of deceased servicemen or veterans with peacetime service since September 16, 1940.

Those orphans may be eligible, however, only if the parent's death was the result of actual performance of military duty during peacetime, Mr. DeRamus pointed out.

Mets, Colts Spend Over $3½ Million For Players

CINCINNATI (UPI) — The New York Mets and Houston Colts shelled out a total of $3,650,000 for 45 "fringe" players Tuesday, and even though it seemed both teams were short-changed, George Weiss and Paul Richards agreed "we did a lot better than we bargained for."

Concentrating primarily on infielders, Houston won the toss for the first pick and selected Eddie Bressoud, a 29-year-old shortstip who hit .219 in 59 fames for the Giants this year.

The Colts' next two choices also were infielders, Bob Aspromonte of the Dodgers and Bob Lillis of the Cardinals.

Weiss, meanwhile, selecting for the Mets, picked San Francisco catcher Hobie Landrith as his first choice and followed with Cincinnati second baseman Elio Chacon and Dodger pitcher Roger Craig.

All of these first-round selections cost $75,000 apiece, with each of the two new NL clubs picking 16 from this category at a total cost of $1,200,000 for each team.

Some of the other $75,000 choices made by the Colts were pitchers Dick Drott of the Cubs, Bobby Shantz of the Pirates, Sam Jones of the Giants and Ken Johnson of the Reds; outfielders Al Heist of the Cubs, Don Taussig of the Cardinals, and Roman Mejias of the Pirates; first baseman Norm Larker of the Dodgers and Dick Gernert of the Reds, and catcher Merritt Ranew of the Braves.

When it came to the piece de resistance—the so-called "premium picks" at $125,000 apiece, the Mets went for 22-year-old Bob Miller of St. Louis.

The Mets' three other premium choices were Cincinnati pitcher Jay Hook, infielder Don Zimmer of the Cubs and infielder-outfielder Lee Walls, none of whom were exactly standouts this year.

Houston's premium choices were Giant infielder Joe Amalfitano, Dodger reliever Dick Farrell, catcher Hal Smith of the Pirates and Milwaukee outfielder Al Spangler.

Between the first round and premium selections, each club had the option of selecting eight players at $50,000 a crack. The market in this left-over group was so thin that Houston chose only three—outfielder Ed Olivares of the Cardinals, Dodger pitcher Jim Golden and Pirate pitcher Jim Umbricht—while the Mets picked only two—pitcher Sherm Roadblock Jones of the Reds and Jim Hickman, a rookie Cardinal outfielder.

Boys And Girls Get Together For Co-Rec Carnival Thursday

Today is the deadline for entries in the Fifteenth Annual Co-Rec Sports Carnival, to be held on Thursday night, October 19, in Woollen Gym.

Undoubtedly one of the most popular events on campus, the Carnival last year saw a total of over 800 students participating. Three years ago it was necessary to solicit teams, but for the last two years there has been no shortage o fteams. In fact, last year a total of 52 teams competed.

The Co-Rec Carnival features team competition in six events plus the relays. A team is composed of one men's organization and one women's organization, and all events are on a co-rec basis with the exception of box hockey in which only the men will participate.

The events on tap for this year are: badminton, table tennis, volleyball doubles, archery, box hockey, carnival games and the relays. This year's carnival games will be: Worm Relay, Hammer the Devil, Blow and Burst, Funnel Volley, Bean Bag Toss, Wash Day, Paper Plate Flip, and Bean Straw. These games can not be described in words: one must participate to know what they're really like.

This year's relays will be: Block Exchange, Potato Spear, Paper Plate Slide and finally the Balloon Burst which will be the championship relay. Winners of the other relays will compete in the latter.

All events will be conducted on the basis of a point system for each activity. The team with the highest point total is naturally declared the Co-Rec Champion. Last year's winning team was DKE-Tri Delt, which edged Beta-Tri Delt by one point. The team winners receive a plaque and individual winners receive trophies.

An organization may enter as many teams as it desires, keeping in mind that an individual may enter only one event plus the relay. A minimum of six different individuals are needed for each team, and a captain must be appointed for each team. After all teams are entered, the Intramural Office will make the team pairings, drawing them by lot. The pairings will be announced in the Daily Tar Heel.

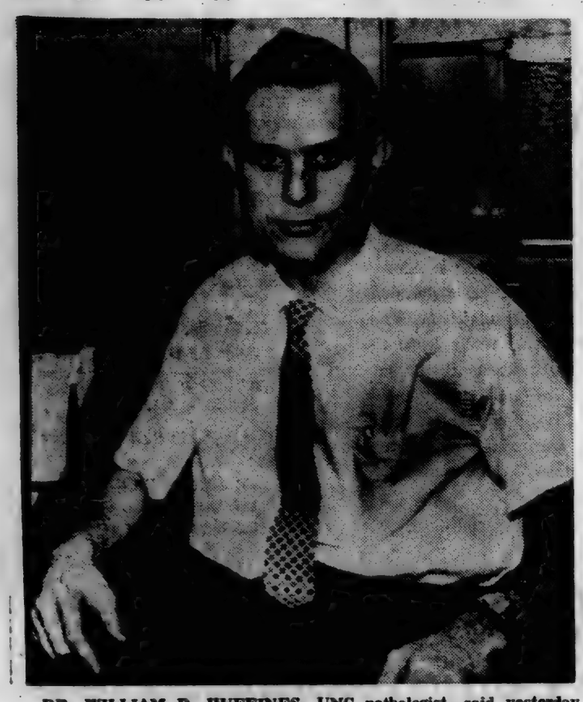
Pickets May Greet Kennedy At Airport

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



DR. WILLIAM D. HUFFINES, UNC pathologist, said yesterday his department has completed its part of the investigation concerning the tw estudents found dead of cyanide poisoning in Cobb Dorm last Friday. "There is some work that we have to complete," he said, "but it has no bearing on the case whatsoever. We're just preparing the final form." No cyanide was detected in two milkshake cups or food found in the room.

Signs protesting racial segregation at the Raleigh-Durham Airport may be among the first things President Kennedy will see when he lands there this morning, a reliable source has disclosed.

The source said there is a "strong possibility" the NAACP chapter in Durham will take advantage of Kennedy's arrival to gain national and international publicity by picketing in protest of the airport's segregated wash rooms.

Strengthening this report is the carbon copy of a letter received yesterday by the Daily Tar Heel.

The letter says the "Durham Youth and College Chapters of the NAACP" have sent President Kennedy a telegram urging him to "open the North Carolina International Trade Fair from some other location, rather than from within the walls of a public facility where African delegates to the fair, as well as members of your staff, would be subject to embarrassment and possible arrest.'

Kennedy is to symbolically open the Trade Fair, being held in Charlotte, before coming here to receive an honorary law degree from the University.

Marcher Reaches Finish

By BILL DOWELL

Mrs. Eugene Fisher, mother of U. S. chess champion Bobby Fisher, and one of 31 "Peace Marchers" to walk to the Soviet Union on a combination peace and disarmament demonstration, finally hit it big.

After being thrown out of France, jumping ship at Le Havre and again being thrown out of France, traveling through Germany and then walking to Moscow, she finally was interviewed by the Communists over Radio Moscow.

The broadcast was received at UNC recently over the usual Radio Moscow short wave band (9 megacycles).

Mrs. Fisher said the United States had warned her she would not be permitted to enter the Soviet Union but she had little trouble in entering. She promised to set the record straight when she returned to the Sttaes.

NO NEW INFORMATION

Chapel Hill police reported last night their investigation of the cyanide deaths of two University students is continuing.

It could not be learned if there are any significant developments in the case, due to the absence of Chief W. D. Blake whose wife is ill.

A department spokesman said Blake is the only person authorized to release information on the case, and that he should be available for comment sometime today.

Major Foreign Policy Speech Is Expected From Kennedy

Thousands of Tar Heels are turning out in Chapel Hill today to hear President Kennedy make what is expected to be a major foreign policy speech.

For many it will be the first opportunity to see the President in person.

Chapel Hill and the University are ready for the Chief Executive, with facilities for a 44,000-plus crowd at Kenan Stadium and Woollen Gym on standby in case of rain.

The schedule for the President's whirlwind tour of North Carolina calls for touchdown of the Presidential plane at the Raleigh-Durham Airport at 10:20 a.m., where Kennedy and Commerce Secretary Luther Hodges are to record comments to be rebroadcast later today in Charlotte at the opening of the North Carolina Trade Fair.

The presidential motorcade is to leave the airport at 10:30 a.m. and the President is to speak at ceremonies honoring the University of North Carolina's 168th birthday at 11 a.m.

Classes at the University will be suspended between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. to permit students to hear the President make his address.

Kennedy, Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara, Army Secretary Elvis Stahr and Gordon Gray, former Consolidated University president and member of the U. S. Foreign Defense Advisory Board, will fly to Ft. Bragg after the ceremonies here.

During the University Day ceremonies the President and Gov. Terry Sanford, who seconded his nomination at the Democratic Convention, will both be awarded honorary degrees.

Today's trip to North Carolina will represent President Kennedy's first major speech in the South since he entered the White House and will be the first visit of a President to the University since President Franklin D. Roosevelt's 1938 speech here.

Kennedy Is Fifth President To Visit University In Office

By W .D. Weeks

When John F. Kennedy addresses the University Columbus Day, the occasion will be far from any virgin exploration here by a U. S. President. Mr. Kennedy will be the fifth President to visit UNC, which will be honoring its 168th anniversary.

The last President to visit the University was Franklin D. Roosevelt, who gave a brief speech in Woollen Gymnasium in December 1938.

President James K. Polk, the only UNC alumnus to occupy the White House, spoke at the 1847 Commencement. James Buchanan, while in office, was an honored guest here in 1859, as was President Andrew Johnson who came to the Commencement of 1867.

President Kennedy, slated to arrive at the Raleigh airport this morning, is expected to make a major foreign policy speech in Kenan Stadium. During the University Day program he will be awarded an honorary doctor of law degree.

It was befitting that the first President to visit the University would be Polk, graduate of the UNC class of 1818. He brought with him another Carolina graduate, his Secretary of the Navy, John Young Mason, class of 1816.

In his book, "The Campus of the First State University," Archibald Henderson writes:

Polk Visit

"On learning of the coming visit of President Polk and his party to Chapel Hill, the Trustees were thrown into quite a dither on account of manifest unpreparedness to receive such distinguished guests and the dingy appearance of University buildings and residences."

As a result of this emergency, college buildings were rewashed, the four University dwelling houses—one to be occupied by the President—were repainted, and Gerrard Hall—where Polk was to speak—was enlarged.

Dr. Kemp Battle's book, "History of the University of North Carolina," describes Polk's arrival into Chapel Hill:

"The President and his wife arrived . . . in carriages from Raleigh. The Faculty and students in double line received them at the (Eagle) Hotel. After allowing a short while for brushing off the dust of the journey, the visitors were conducted to Gerrard Hall, where they were received with enthusiasm, such as students know how to accord. The speech of President Swain was 'distinguished by eminent courtesy of sentiment and chasteness of diction.' The answer of the President was most felicitous. His tribute to President Caldwell was extremely touching. Secretary Mason was as usual most happy in his answer to the cordial welcome extended."

Special Addition

During his stay here Polk was accommodated in a special addition to the local hotel, the addition built expressly to house the President and his party. Miss Nancy Hilliard, the proprietor of the Eagle Hotel, installed a metal plate on the addition, denoting the fact that President Polk was the first occupant.

After his return to Washington, President Polk wrote in his diary on June 5, 1847:

"My reception at the University, and the attentions paid me on the route going and returning, was all that I could have desired it to be. My visit was wholly unconnected with politics, and all parties greeted and welcomed me in the most cordial manner."

Twelve years after Polk returned to his alma mater, President Buchanan came to Chapel Hill — just prior to the Civil War—and gave a short talk on temperance and the preservation of the Union. He also presented an English prize.

Buchanan Received

President Buchanan did not arrive until two days after the Commencement ceremonies began. The Presidential party was received by President Swain and a dinner was given in his honor in the front yard of the latter's home. Dr. Battle mentions in his book that Mr. Buchanan's dinners were served "without any wine or other alcoholic stimulants because of the President's Presbyterian tendencies."

The President made only a presentation speech during his stay. He gave the English prize to E. E. Wright of Tennessee. His speech dealt largely with temperance.

His only other public appearance was at an informal reception under Davie Poplar near the end of his

Trade Fair Integrated In Charlotte

There will be no segregation at the North Carolina trade fair which opens today in Charlotte, according to fair director William R. Henderson.

"This is a state-sponsored event and will be open to all people without regard to race, creed or color," Henderson said. The fair is expected to attract visitors from all over the world.

"One of our exhibitors is a Negro firm," said Henderson. "Rest rooms in the Merchandise Mart and the Coliseum are marked only by sex. The exhibits and snack bars will be open to everyone of the general public who pays admission."

Asked Kennedy

The question of segregation arose after Durham chapters of the NAACP telegraphed President Kennedy asking him not to open the trade fair from the Raleigh-Durham airport which has segregated rest rooms.

Governor Sanford said in Raleigh that there actually has been no segregation of rest room facilities at the airport for some time, despite the fact that rest room signs have designated race as well as sex.

Airport officials hope to have the signs painted over to conform with actual practices before Kennedy arrives today.

Glee Club Makes First Show Today

The Men's Glee Club will make its first public appearance of the year this morning at University Day ceremonies in Kenan Stadium.

The club will join the University Band, University Chorus, and WC Chorus in a musical performance as part of today's exercises. Songs the club will sing include the tradtional "Integer Vitae," the Carolina Alma Mater, and with the other groups an arrangement of "Onward, Ye Peoples."

Following its appearance in Kenan Stadium; the club leaves on a four-day tour in and around Washington, D. C. Included on the group's itinerary are performances at the Pentagon, Ft. Belvoir, Va., hotels in the Washton area, and the Church of the Pilgrims in Washington.

The club will also appear on a brief radio spot. Saturday afternoon it will attend the UNC-Maryland football game in College Park, Md.

The sixty men who will make the trip wil be under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter of the Music Department.

Correction

Robert E. Ward of the Department of State will meet Friday instead of October 18 with students interested in careers with the State Department, as announced in the DTH yesterday.

The contest will be held at 7 p.m. Oct. 23 in Memorial Hall. The girls will wear floor-length gowns for the judging and the winner will be crowned by the 1961 Yack Queen, Miss Sharon Cates.

To enter the contest a girl must be sponsored by some campus organization.

CARLOS MONTOYA

Flamenco Guitarist Slated

Flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya will present a concert in Memorial Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. under the sponsorship of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Montoya, the only Flamenco guitarist in the word performing his art on the concert stage in solo recitals, has played in most of the major cities of the world.

He is reported to be the most widely recorded Flamenco artist of all time and is the possessor of "Standing room only" box office records, according to his advance notices.

Students Free

The concert will be free to UNC students presenting their ID cards. Student spouses will be admitted for $1.00 and the general public for $2.00, if space is available after 7:50 p.m.

Born in Madrid, Montoya, considered a genius with the Flamenco guitar, was a musical prodigy. At 14, he became a widely-known cafe guitarist. Before he became a concert artist, he spent 2 years accompanying such distinguished performers as La Argentina, Vincente Escudero and Argentinita.

Gypsy Tradition

Montoya has a repertoire consisting of his own arrangements and original compositions based on Spanish Gypsy Tradition. Flamenco music is not written, but is a combination of themes and rhythms played as the guitarist feels it.

CARLOS MONTOYA

The Chicago Daily Tribune has said of Montoya's concert, "Carlos Montoya literally stopped the show with virtuoso guitar playing that seemed to evoke the very soul of Spain."

Infirmary

Monogram Club To Usher

Members of the UNC Monogram Club should report to the Northside of Kenan Stadium, gate 2, to assist in ushering at 9 a.m., according to Joe Hilton, club faculty advisor.

Kamen's Rejection

Charles Kamen, a volunteer for the Peace Corps who broke into the news because of his activities at a showing of the film "Operation Abolition," has been rejected by the Peace Corps.

Peace Corps officials said Kamen was rejected because he was not compatible with the project for which he was being trained.

We cannot say with accuracy whether Kamen was rejected because he loudly protested the film when it was shown to a Miami, Fla., Rotary Club, or whether his rejection came for other reasons. Officials refused to disclose the reasons on the grounds that making public the reasons might serve to discourage young men from applying in the first place.

There have been objections raised on the rejection of Kamen from the Peace Corps program solely on the grounds that he objected to the film—if indeed this is the only reason.

On the surface, these objections seem to have good basis. The argument that Kamen might have been denied the privilege of serving in the Corps because of exercising his right to criticize the film, in most cases would merit support.

But the Peace Corpsman will act as a representative of the United States. Government policy must be his policy. And, although it is an unfortunate circumstance, the government still supports and sanctions the film.

We, along with Kamen, feel that this is wrong. At the same time, it would be unwise to choose a representative of our government who, in his particular capacity in the Peace Corps program, might be a hazard.

Kamen has not been rejected as a punishment for his opposition. He has been rejected because the problem of choosing men for the Peace Corps is of such vital importance that there is no margin for error.

We hope that Kamen continues to voice his objections to the film, loudly and unceasingly until it is recognized as what it is: a shameful distortion.

At the same time, we must concur with the rejection, with the hope that future candidates will not be faced with the disappointing task of having to give up a splendid opportunity because of a sincere conviction.

The Reason

The concensus of many government officials and political pundits throughout the United States is that President Kennedy will unveil plans for a settlement in Berlin in his talk here today.

The situation has been thoroughly analyzed by the most reliable of political prognosticators, and the conclusions are the same. The time is right, and the world situation seems ripe for a compromise settlement in that European trouble spot.

Yet only those men close to the President can be sure. Fortunately, we are among that select group and herewith pass on the information as to just what the young President's speech will encompass.

President Kennedy is here for one purpose: to publicly accept Chancellor Aycock's offer of a football scholarship.

The Unmasking

The Communist Party in America must come out into the open or go underground. It has been repudiated and disowned by the people and the government of the United States. It has been defined as, and labeled, an agency of the Soviet Union and must register, accordingly, with the Subversive Activities Control Board.

The United States Supreme Court yesterday declined to reconsider its June 5 decision to that effect. That means, says Attorney General Robert Kennedy, that "the Communist Party, U.S.A., has exhausted its last legal recourse after years of contesting" a 1950 order.

Consequently, the Communist Party in this country must:

1. File with the Department of Justice the names and addresses of its officers and members.

2. File an accounting of its finances.

3. File a list of printing presses owned and controlled by the party and its members.

What will the Communist Party in the United States do? It has three recourses. It may continue unmasked and identified to practice its purposes and to exert such influence as it has upon the citizens of the United States; it may choose to hide from public view and go completely underground as an illegal operation vulnerable to the law and its officers; or it may attempt to foment immediate and violent revolution against the laws of the land, the Supreme Court and the government of the United States.

Even the most optimistic Red is not likely to suggest any attempt at an American revolution. Such an idea would not attract the devotion of a handfull of Americans.

It may choose a combination of the other two—a cadre of admitted Communists operating as officers and a visible corps, which would direct the main body of the subversive organization plotting, scheming and sabotaging in secret.

MYLES ERIC LUDWIG

'Matchmaker' Hodge-Podge Of Comic Technique

Thornton Wilder's play "The Matchmaker," serves a a superb support for that old axiom which states that a playwright cannot create a play from material of which he has no knowledge. Perhaps, and I doubt this often, he is familiar with the people of a small New Hampshire town, but I protest when he attempts to include in his "theory of theatrical Americana" such characters as Dolly Levi and Horace Vandergelder. These caricatures have arisen from from a particular ethnic group and consequently, and are best left in the domain of the Second Avenue Theater. As if dealing in false stereotypes were not enough, Mr. Wilder has called his play a "farce-comedy" and so constructs it upon this basis; that is to say, one act is a comedy, another is a farce and so on ad nauseum. The results being that the piece is a hodge-podge of almost every existing form of comic technique, a large potpourri of balderash without podzah.

* * *

AFTER SEEING the performance, I asked myself the inevitable question. What does this play say, that is to say, what message does it convey to the audience? Well it is apparent that Wilder had some difficulty in answering this question also. First he tells us that the world is populated with fools, then he says that though we be in this ludicrous state "love will triumph," and later in the play he contradicts himself by warmly condoning matrimony for money. Finally, he allows one of his characters to tell us in a kind of homey epilogue that the play is "about an adventure." Certainly the play says little worth listening to and takes an intolerably long time in which to say it. It is naught but an incoherent collection of inconsequential events and poor theatrical devices . . . another antiseptic episode in the theater for small minds.

* * *

ERGO, THE MATERIAL presents a difficult barrier, to the director and, unfortunately, Foster Fitz-Simons was unable to meet this challenge. His staging techniques are as clichéd as are the lines and some of his character interpretations are offensive at best. The pace of the show is slothlike and the picking up of cues is equally abominable. Fitz-Simons leads his actors to nebulous climaxes and then abandons them on these imaginary mountains to fight Wilder's blizzards by themselves.

DANIEL H. PROCTOR, as Barnaby, literally steals the show. His interpretation, though not mine, of Barnaby as a pleasant fool is both amusing and consistent. He is gifted with a rare sense of comic timing and has an excellent feeling for proper line delivery. On the other hand, LARRY McMULLAN pales before his younger companion. His grimacing attempts at humor fall piteously short and one has the feeling that McMULLAN is wondering what he is doing on that stage . . . for he is certainly not acting.

JOHN CROCKETT had a great deal of difficulty getting into the role of Horace Vandergelder, but once he found it he attacked the role without any definite variation making for a monotonic effect. LOUISE LAMONT played a host of characters, but not one of them was Dolly Levi. She worked completely around the part, employing English, Jewish and Italian inflections.

Another interesting example is that of Malachi Stack as portrayed by LARRY RANDOLPH whose acting was good but irregular. RANDOLPH, or so it seemed, couldn't decide whether to play Stack as a tippling jack-of-all-trades or as a cynical cracker-barrel philosopher and consequently he acted both of these roles in alternate scenes.

Although VI GALVIN looked as though she didn't have her heart in the production, GWEN SIDES and JOSEPHINE PETTIS should receive kudos for their truthful persistency to the tradition of the farcical area in which they played.

TOMMY REZZUTO'S settings were pretty but unimaginative and RUSSELL GRAVE'S lighting neither added to or detracted from the production.

Fair Way To Hire

Henry E. Kendall, chairman of the North Carolina Employment Security Commission, undoubtedly was right when he said employment officials cannot tell an employer "whom to hire."

However, this does not seem to be the question involved in the charge that the ESC practices racial discrimination in its operations. The criticism lodged with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity was that Mr. Kendall's agency does not accept a Negro worker's application for a job "open to white workers only."

The only way the State employment agency can operate in fairness is for it to accept job applications solely on the basis of job qualifications. This would really leave the hiring of applicants up to the employers, instead of the agency taking upon itself the job of segregating applicants on the basis of race instead of qualifications for the convenience of employers.

Flying Saucers Finish In Congressional Tie

Last June the House Space Committee, under chairmanship of Rep. Overton Brooks, formed a special subcommittee to investigate flying saucers (Unidentified Flying Objects) and Air Force secrecy. Rep. Joseph Karth, subcommittee chairman, felt strongly that public hearings were desirable. In a letter to me in August, he said that if he had any influence such hearings would be obtained. Then the old familiar tug-of-war took over again.

Air Force spokesmen, following the policy of official censorshop, fought strenuously to keep the inquiry closed. At the other end, the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena, directed by Major Donald E. Keyhoe, worked for open sessions.

On September 16, Brooks died of heart failure; subsequently, Karth reaffirmed his stand in favor of public sessions, while Rep. George Miller, Brooks' successor as main committee chairman, straddled the fence. When Congress recessed, the Air Force had once again resolved things to a stalemate, though Karth and others were set on hearings at the next term.

ON SEPTEMBER 30 I met with five other North Carolina NICAP members and seven interested non-members for a dinner conference in Raleigh. We agreed the situation lookd bad.

By this time the UFO is almost out of the public mind; sightings are frequent but the press generally ignores them. Sober but far from dispairing, we set up a North Carolina NICAP Subcommittee, with hopes of building up NICAP's influence in this state. We intend to keep fighting till we lick the secrecy, whether through Congress or any other medium; and we more than welcome the membership of anyone who is interested, regardless of his views on the subject.

Last summer, in the wake of the new Russo - American space probes, the saucers increased operations and a good many cases broke into print. Around three A.M. July 10, 1961, two boys fishing at Sun Lake, north of Waterford, Michigan, saw a large, elongated UFO flashing brilliant orange, white, and gold lights.

It glided swiftly over the trees, then began to descend. The boys fled in panic. For almost an hour the object brought reports from scores of witnesses in the towns of Oxford, Holly, Waterford, and Pontiac.

THOSE WISHING TO JOIN the National Investigations Committee should write for an application blank to NICAP Secretary Richard Hall, 1536 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Anyone interested in the new North Carolina Subcommittee can phone me in Chapel Hill at 942-4912. (You needn't belong to NICAP to join the Subcommittee, though it is advisable.)

The October 5 Tar Heel contains a brief paroxysm from Garry Blanchard, relevant to Alan Goldsmith's take-off on the NAACP. It's amusing to see the wild rages that these self-appointed mandarins of idealism get into when anyone challenges their attitudes.

Mr. Blanchard writes that Goldsmith's column "places him . . . on a level with such mentally malodorous misfits as ardent Ku Klux Klansmen. The only information I was able to glean from . . . his masterful verbosity is that he fervently dislikes liberals and the NAACP."

Verbosity is a terrible thing and of course Mr. Blanchard has never been guilty of it himself. The rest of his complaint can be summed up in three little sentences:

(1) The Ku Klux Klan dislikes the NAACP;

(2) Alan Goldsmith also dislikes it;

(3) Ergo, Goldsmith is a follower of the Klan.

This is all that Mr. Blanchard has contrived to say, by way of argument I would suggest that he put up or shut up—preferably the latter.

Reflections

So you think college entrance requirements are getting tougher and tougher. You don't know the half of it. Take a look at the following note tacked on the Law School bulletin board:

"For the past few days the Law School has been haunted by a German Shepherd dog which, we understand, belongs to some first year law student. It is requested that the owner see that the dog is confined to other premises.

"We are very fond of dogs, but this one cannot be admitted to the school, as, while he may have an acceptable pedigree, he did not receive the requisite score on the Law School admission test."

The note was signed by Henry Brandis Jr., dean of the Law School.

Disclaimer Affadavit Still Appears On UNC Loan Forms

UNC's administration is uniquely capable of proving itself far-sighted yet cumbersome simultaneously.

After years of fighting, the University and its friends were successful in forcing the state to remove its disclaimer affidavit requirement for state employment. Now only a loyalty oath—although a very inclusive oath—is required for state (University) employment.

In this context it is strange that for over three years the Student Loan Application form has contained a disclaimer affidavit.

Until 1958 there was no disclaimer affidavit in the University loan forms. In September of that year the old UNC form was merged with the National Defense Education Act form, which contained both a loyalty oath and a disclaimer affidavit.

The affidavit, which was incorporated in full into the combination form, reads:

"I, _____, do solemnly swear that I do not believe in, and am not a member of and do not support any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods."

* * *

BECAUSE OF THE disclaimer affidavit several leading universties have refused to accept NDEA funds, among them: Harvard, Oberlin, University of Chicago, Amherst, Bryn Mawr, Goucher, Sarah Lawrence, and Swarthmore. The administrations of the Universities of Wisconsin and Washington have condemned the disclaimer affidavit in the NDEA, as has Dartmouth College.

Feelings ran high enough in 1959 against the affidavit that a bill removing it from the NDEA was recommended to the Congress by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. In a close fight the bill failed, however.

The primary objections to disclaimer affidavits, then as now, were:

—they serve no purpose, whatsoever. No real subversive would hesitate to sign the affidavit, whereas some loyal citizens would hesitate.

—they imply that until you have signed, you are not loyal,

—they may serve as basis for more restrctive legislation, which will hamper academic and intellectual freedom

—some words used in the affidavit are vague and ambiguous, such as "believe in," "support," "illegal or unconstitutional methods"—what is illegal and unconstiutional in Mississippi is not necessarily the same in New York.

* * *

ACCORDING TO PERSONS in the administration, no student was ever refused a University loan because he refused to sign the affidavit.

But in the combination loan form is an objectionable phrase:

"In case I am granted a loan from the University Student Loan Funds, I hereby certify that: (disclaimer affidavit . . .)"

The mixup apparently has been cleared up now, however. Students who request only University loans in the future will be told that they do not have to sign the disclaimer affidavit.

. . . Again the University administration has proven itself fair and liberal, if not always efficient.

Calls For 'Dynamic' Business

Hargrove Bowles, North Carolina state conservation and development director, told a group of certified public accountants in Chapel Hill Monday night that the state needs a dynamic and aggressive type of businessman to lead it to its fullest development.

Bowles, speaking to 150 Tar Heel CPA's decried the rise of the "organization man" in business. "He works only in the direction that the organization goes, and that may be narrow. He will never lead North Carolina to the fullest development of its potential," he said.

The accountants were also told of the necessity of a continuing education for a CPA. According to Louis W. Mustusiak of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, the AICPA has more than $250,000 for the expansion of workshop seminars and other courses.

visit. Dr. Battle said Mr. Buchanan "feigned illness in order not to attend the ball, but all suspected that attendance would be against his religious principles."

During the days when his hands were full with Reconstruction and Radical Republicans, President Johnson, a native of North Carolina, attended the 1867 UNC Commencement, where he received an honorary LL.D. degree.

Of Johnson's visit Dr. Battle writes:

Johnson's Reply

"In reply to the speech of welcome by President Swain, he (President Johnson) told how 41 years before he had left Raleigh, his native town, and journeyed on foot by way of Chapel Hill to his newly chosen home, how he walked over our main street weary and hungry and asked for food and a night's lodging from kindly James Craig, who not only complied with his request but gave the forlorn boy a bag full of bread and meat for his future needs. His next visit to Chapel Hill was as President of this great Republic of nearly forty million souls. The cabin which gave him shelter still stands."

It wasn't until 71 years later that another U. S. President visited the University here, a man who had his hands full with the nation's greatest depression. On a rainy December day in 1938, Roosevelt, in a half-hour speech before 10,000 who jammed Woollen Gymnasium, defended "liberalism" in spite of the unfavorable New Deal Congressional elections the month before. Roosevelt received an overwhelming reception.

Other Presidents have visited Chapel Hill and the University, but not while in office. Woodrow Wilson came to the University in 1911 when he was Governor of New Jersey. Theodore Roosevelt made a public address here, and William Howard Taft delivered the Weil lectures in 1915, after he had retired as President.

Others who have visited in the state are George Washington, Herbert Hoover, Harry Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower. Eisenhower came to Chapel Hill to visit friends, after World War II and before he became President.

Kennedy Muscles Need Mister Sam

Washington Window

By LYLE C. WILSON

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Political muscle that President Kennedy needs urgently is wasting away in the room where Speaker Sam Rayburn is dying.

Mr. Sam may not be the indispensable man. But Kennedy needs him to handle the House of Representatives in next year's election-heated session of Congress. There is not among House Democrats an equal to take Rayburn's place.

The House bucked Rayburn and Kennedy in the session just ended. Some of the administration's prime projects were demolished by the House. It was remarked in Washington that in the first session of the Kennedy Congress, it was the House that dominated legislative proceedings.

Even Rayburn Beaten

The House more often than the Senate bushwacked the new Frontiersman. This was despite Rayburn's cagey leadership, friendships and the commitments to him which were almost binding on Democrats. If Rayburn was unable to deliver the House in the congressional honeymoon of a Democrat president, what will Rayburn's successor be able to accomplish in the session beginning next Jan. 10?

That is a question to haunt a president during wakeful nights. The next session of Congress will be a political catch-all preceding the November congressional elections.

Margaret Ann Rhymes, junior from Hickory and Daily Tar Heel Associate Editor, recently received a $150 per year scholarship from Delta Delta Delta sorority. She won the purse in competition with other girls.

Di-Phi Defeats Euthanasia Bill In Vote Of 5-1

A resolution to legalize euthanasia was defeated at a Monday night meeting of the Di-Phi Society.

The resolution, submitted by Rep. Tony Rogers, read as follows:

WHEREAS: A person in the final and painful stages of a fatal disease cannot and will never enjoy or even be conscious of life again, and

WHEREAS: Our hospitals and places of healing are already working beyond capacity, and

WHEREAS: These same hospitals would be better able to treat the cases of persons who do have a better chance of survival,

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE DIALECTIC-PHILANTHROPIC LITERARY SOCIETY THAT:

ARTICLE I. A licensed medical doctor be given the legal right to extinguish the life of any patient of his whom he deems to be in the final, painful and/or physically or mentally incapacitating stages of a fatal disease or injury, provided that:

a. At least two other licensed medical doctors, thoroughly familiar with the patient's case and chances of recovery, unanimously agree to such action.

b. The patient himself must agree to the action, only if he is physically able to consent.

The resolution was defeated by a vote of 5-1 among Di-Phi members and by 9-0 in a chamber vote.

The next meeting of the parliamentary debating society is October 23 at 7:30 on the third floor of New West. A resolution advocating the abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee will be submitted.

It looks like a bleak weekend ahead for Atlantic Coast Conference football teams, especially those in the so called "Big Four." Undefeated Duke is at Georgia Tech, who, as we predicted last week, were upset by the LSU Tigers. The Engineers now appear to have one of their better teams, and that is saying a lot.

N. C. State also will have its troubles. The Wolfpack tangles with a mighty rough Alabama team, and the game will be played down in friendly Tuscaloosa.

Our predictions to date have given us a record of 19-5-1, with last week's score of 10-3-1 (the tie was Missouri - California). Here is our forecast on the outcome of Saturday's top games:

Georgia Tech 26, Duke 20. A Duke win would give this conference more prestige, but it looks like the Engineers all the way. Duke will fail in its first test of the season.

Alabama 32, N. C. State 14. State will hav ea still weaker line with the loss of Bert Wilder, and there seems to be little relief in sight for the Wolfpack.

Clemson 28, Wake Forest 7. Frank Howard has his boys on the road now, and tough luck Wake will get rolled over.

Louisiana State 19, South Carolina 10. Look for a tough fight from the Gamecocks, but the Tigers are stronger.

Virginia Military 23, Virginia 20. A close one, but it looks like the Cavaliers are well on the way to another loss streak.

Pittsburgh 33, West Virginia 13. The Mountaineers surprised us last week, but it won't happen again.

Auburn 36, Chattanooga 6. A definite mismatch.

Mississippi 44, Houston 7. Do you guess why they're first?

Missouri 17, Oklahoma State 7. A comeback for the Mules.

Penn State 21, Army 13. Errors hurt the Cadets again.

Notre Dame 22, Southern California 8. The Irish are climbing.

Michigan 28, Michigan State 20. The top game in the nation today should draw a lot of interest.

Rice 14, Florida 6. Another top matchup, but pick the Owls.

Kentucky 26, Kansas State 14. In the contest of the Wildcats, look for the Eastern cat to win.

Wisconsin 12, Oregon State 0. A real defensive battle.

Texas 27, Oklahoma 12. Some day Shirer will write a book about the Sooners.

For our visitor this week—Harvard 21, Colgate 14.

Ranson Looks To NCAA Finals

Runners May Be Best Ever

By ED DUPREE

Carolina's 18-48 victory over Clemson's cross-country team Saturday was no surprise to anyone. Dale Ranson, the jovial UNC coach, has long been noted for his excellent teams and his present crew could develop into the best UNC has ever had.

"Coach Dale" has eight lettermen back from last year's squad which rolled to the ACC championship, losing only to Maryland in a dual meet. Rett Everett, one of the top cross-country men in the nation, heads the list, but the team is loaded with talented runners.

A great deal depends on a trio of juniors—Gerry Stuver, Mike Folk, and Carmine Lunetta—who came through in great fashion as sophomores during the last part of the 1960 season. When the ACC cross-country finals were over, Stuver had finisher 2nd, Folk 4th, and Lunetta 6th.

Ranson's eyes lit up as he began to talk about his "Running Heels." "This can be a better team than last year's, however it's going to be up to those three juniors to deliver. They've worked hard and it's up to them to lay it on the line."

But Ranson isn't looking to his trio of juniors alone to carry this team to another big year. "The real potential of this year's team will depend on our sophomores. We have five good strong boys in Bob Bennett, Charlie Little, Dave Brunson, Charlie Tromba, and Jim Hodges. They are all talented and capable, though relatively inexperienced."

Looking to the latter part of the season Ranson said, "Actually what we need out of that group of sophomores is at least three first-class performers for the dual meet with Maryland, Duke, and State, the Big Five meet, and the ACC finals."

With four of the six top harriers in the conference and five good sophomore prespects, the ACC's baron of cross-country can still call on five lettermen in Larry Henry, Lou Sullivan, Scott Brent, Ted Cohen, and Bob Foxworth. Foxworth is the only one of the quintet that did not letter on the 1960 team. Foxworth won his letter two years ago, studied last year in Goettingen, Germany, and is back at UNC for his senior year.

Only Bing Somers and Benji Seagle are missing from the team which brought home the ACC championship trophy last fall.

"Coach Dale" could talk about his boys for hours and keep the listener interested, captivated, and amused all at the same time. His remarkable sense of humor is only a small fraction of his polished personality. With "NCAA finals" written all over his face, he had a little to say about the development of a good team.

"Early in the season we expect a wide range of performances—nobody's really quite ready for it. There is no stabilized level of performance you can depend on. But in the latter part of the season, we expect these boys to attain a high, stabilized level."

Stabilized or not, Ranson's teams have given him 18 championships in his 36 years of coaching at Carolina—a record envied by many in the coaching business.

The Tar Heels' next opponent will be Virginia. The team will leave for Charlottesville Thursday night and run against the Cavaliers Friday at 3 p.m.

Carolina Soccermen Whip Generals, 4-1

North Carolina sharpened up its game here yesterday and plowed through a fighting Washington & Lee soccer team, winning by a 4-1 score. Forward Bill Shettle booted two goals for the Tar Heels, who took their second win against one loss.

Coach Marvin Allen's kickers took a 3-0 lead before the visitors could score. Center forward Pete Blake was the first to score, as he booted one in the five minutes remaining in the first quarter.

Then with five minutes gone in the second period, Shettle got the first of his two penalty kicks. Ten minutes later in the same quarter, right wing Herman Prakke scored on an indirect kick with an assist from Blake.

Shettle finished up the Carolina scoring with a penalty kick boot with two minutes gone in the final stanza.

Intramural Playoffs Begin This Afternoon For 8 Teams

By John Montague

It's play-off time in the dorm division! The top two teams from each league have been placed in a play-off bracket, and the first three contests in the single-elimination tournament will be played this afternoon at 5.

There are twelve teams in all, four of them drawing first round byes. Clashing this afternoon will be the unbeaten Mangum Mavericks (3-0) against Ruffin (2-1), the power-packed Alexander Playboys (3-0) against Old East (2-1) and undefeated Winston (3-0) versus the Stacy Studs (2-1).

On the final day of regular league play, the Town Touts swamped Old East, 32-0, thus gaining a bye in the first round. Paul George scored two of the Tout's TD's and Paul Swing, John Hickey and Bob Brown added one each.

In the other league finale, Grimes stopped Stacy, 14-0, and they also picked up a first-round bye for their victory. Bill Freund scored all but one of the 14 points with two touchdowns and a PAT.

The Peacocks completed a perfect 4-0 Grad League season with an easy 49-7 trouncing of the Law Whites. Dave Kneet had quite a day, picking up three TD's and a safety for the winning cause. Other Peacock TD-makers were Jim Phoel, with two, and Charley Poindexter and Herb Hawks with one apiece.

The Med School, led by Pete Longenecker, Frank Sabiston and Jim Rose, blanked the Dental School, 25-0, in the only other action of the afternoon.

Kennedy Sees Power In Ft. Bragg Display

By LLOYD LITTLE

FT. BRAGG—President Kennedy yesterday watched the men and might of Ft. Bragg put on an impressive performance of land, men and airpower.

After a half-hour delay, the President spent four hot hours moving from area to area watching demonstrations of parachuting, hand-to-hand combat and missile striking power.

The 82nd Airborne Division, 12,000 strong, heard the President say "the United States has obligations and alliances which stretch around the world. Millions of people look to us."

He said that in many of these countries there are few Americans and no American soldiers. "Here at Ft. Bragg, there is this division, and there are other STRAC (Strategic Army Corps) divisions—these are the wings of our airpower."

Following the short speech, the President conducted an inspection of the troops in his convertible. Later the firepower and transportation facilities of the 82nd Division were driven by the presidential reviewing stand.

A few minutes later at the Sicily Drop Zone, the President watched fighter planes strafe and bomb a hillside. Completing the attack were 300 paratroopers and heavy arms, including a 6,000-pound bulldozer, all of which were dropped from C119's.

Paratroopers Presented

The lieutenant and captain of the paratroopers were presented to the President after their jump.

Minutes later at another area in the middle of hot, dusty Ft. Bragg the newest firepower was demonstrated to the President. Machine gun, guided missile and mock helicopter battles demonstrated some of the latest Army equipment.

A simulated nuclear missile, the Little John, was fired and struck a target on a hill some miles away.

Perhaps the highlight of the afternoon came with the Special Warfare demonstration, given by a force of men who had just returned from Laos.

The President saw amphibious and other special purpose vehicles—a rocket belt demonstration and a number of special aircraft.

Paratroopers demonstrated free-fall and target landing, dropping into a small pond.

The Special Forces detachment presented methods used in guerrilla and psychological warfare.

Following an inspection of the Immediate Ready Forces outloading procedure, the President was awarded honorary membership in the 82nd Airborne and presented a set of identifying dogtags.

Throughout the afternoon the President appeared to be tired from the extreme heat and dust. At most of the demonstrations he rested his head on his hands, occasionally asking a question of his aides.

His voice seemed softer and perhaps weaker than usual.

During the IRF demonstrations, the President walked among the troops, talking to them. He asked the men questions such as where they were from and how much their equipment weighed.

The President was asking one group of men how long they had been in the Army when the leader replied "only eight months."

"I'm sure you're the commander," joked the President.

JFK's Custom Convertible (right)

He Came, He Saw, He Found Cobweb

By GARRY BLANCHARD

He came, he saw, he conquered.

He — President Kennedy — also walked off with the university President's pen, played landing strip to a 10-foot cobweb strand that floated past midway through his speech, and forgot to take his degree with him when he left.

But they loved him. Thirty-eight thousand of them — children, students, housewives, working men with the morning off—loved him.

They interrupted his speech with a 30-second standing ovation at one point, and howled when he referred to Harvard, his alma mater, as "a small, land-grant college in Massachusetts."

They stood for the nearly ten minutes it took him to get away from the speaker's platform and into his car.

Then the boldest, and youngest of them came down out of the bleachers and took turns sitting in his chair, while others furtively stripped clean the bouquet of flowers set in front of the rostrum.

Also on a quest for souvenirs were two little girls who stood nervously beside a busy wire-service reporter, watching him peck madly away at his typewriter. When they were sure he wasn't looking, each made off with one of the sharpened pencils that had been provided for the working press.

* * *

The whole thing happened under a warm October sun hanging high in a cloudless sky. It took less than an hour and a half.

A caravan of cars and buses bearing newsmen and others preceded the Presidential limousine's arrival.

Two men stepped from one of the cars, turned to a photographer and asked, "Where do we go from here?"

"Are you in the Washington Press Corps?"

"No, we're congressmen."

"Damned if I know where you go."

And North Carolina Congressmen Basil F. L. Whitener and Horace R. Kornegay milled around, looking lost.

* * *

Kennedy borrowed University President William C. Friday's pen twice, once on the platform to edit his speech, and again after the ceremony to autograph a copy of the program which will go into the university's archives.

The first time, Friday got it back. The second time he didn't.

* * *

"What did President Kennedy say to you on the platform?" Pres. Friday was asked.

"He asked me how the football team was . . . last Saturday. I told him we lost to Clemson, 27-0. But don't write that."

* * *

After Kennedy left, Aycock was told by a friend, "You know what people all over the U. S. are saying? They're saying, 'who are those two fellows sitting beside the President'?"

JFK Accepts Degree With Somber Speech

By Wayne King

In the black robe of a scholar, a somber Unied States Prresident yesterday assured this University and the world that "We shall be neither Red nor dead, but alive and free."

An estimated 32,000 persons in Kenan Stadium heard President John F. Kennedy pledge every effort "to prevent the world from being blown up."

The President, who had come to Chapel Hill to accept an honorary degree on the University's 168th birthday, stressed that Americans must do their duty "undeterred by fanatics or frenzy at home or abroad."

Alhough not the major foreign policy address expected, the 14-minute speech reconfirmed his dedication to both firmness and flexibility in the fight for Western freedom.

Yet, pointing to crises from Berlin to Viet Nam, he warned his audience that "we are destined—all of us here today—to live out most, if not all, of our lives in uncertainty and challenge and peril."

The Chief Executive, referring to the North Carolina motto, Esse Quam Videri, said A merica needs men "who look at things as they are rather than as they seem."

"Our task is to do our best," he said, "and not to be swayed from our course by the faint-hearted or the unknowing, or the threats of those who would make themselves our foes."

Upon his arrival in North Carolina the President was greeted by Governor Terry Sanford and numerous state political leaders at Raleigh-Durham Airport, where he symbolically opened the N.C. Trade Fair in Charlotte.

Governor Sanford also received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Following the University Founder's Day ceremonies in Chapel Hill, he flew to Ft. Bragg to witness one of the most diversified military demonstrations ever to take place there.

He reviewed the 82nd Airborne Division, watched a parachute drop of 300 men and observed other battle-ready units of the Army's "Fire Brigade."

Kennedy, in his address, paid high tribute to the University, which conferred on him his first honorory Doctor of Laws degree since the election.

"I am honored to be admitted to the fellowship of this honored and ancient University," Kennedy said, and then pointed to such leaders from Carolina as Secretary of State Luther Hodges, Frank Graham, former UNC president and U.S. Senator and now a United Nations mediator; and Gordon Gray, also a former president who has held high posts in recent administrations.

He cited as these men carrying out a tradition that the "graduate of this University is a man of his nation as well as a man of his time."

University students were challenged to put their vitality and "intellectual energy" to the service of the country. "Regardless of your field, I urge you to recognize the contribution which you can make as educated men and women to intellectual and political leadership in these difficult days."

North Carolina has long been identified with enlightenment, he pointed out, and said he could think of no more important reason for this reputation than the University.

The President was accompanied on the one-day trip by Llewellyn Thompson, U.S. ambassador to Russia; Charles Bohlen, his top adviser on the Soviet Union; and McGeorge Bunday, presidential assistant on national security affairs.

JFK Announces $1 Million Grant To Research Program

By Newt Smith

President Kennedy announced yesterday that a one million dollar contract for the next four years has been granted to UNC for the founding of a new materials research program.

The contract agreement is with the Advanced Research Projects Agency of the Department of Defense which is interested in materials research and the training of materials specialists.

"There are nine people in physics and six in chemistry whose research interests are particularly appropriate to ARPA," said Dr. W. F. Little, assistant to the dean of the Graduate School for Research.

Dr. Little emphasized that this contract will not propose anything new but will enlarge the existing facilities and permit greater concentration. The contract will also allow increased training of the graduate students and post-doctoral fellows.

The ARPA materials research program will combine research in solid state physics, inorganic chemistry, metallurgy, mechanics, polymer science, ceramics, surface phenomenon and other related fields. The study of materials will make feasible the development of new hardware to be used in such fields as space exploration and rocket components.

Combined Research

The million will provide equipment, supplies and salaries for the assistants and fellows. The Departments of Physics and Chemistry are to direct the program under H. D. Crockford and Paul E. Shearin, chairmen of the respective departments.

Dr. Little said, "Although there are only 15 men at present who form the backbone of the new program, the contract provides for enlargement." He added that one of the most important areas of the contract was the provision for the training of materials personnel .

Eight other universities have contracts with ARPA with interdisciplinary laboratories. UNC is one of the three recent additions to the materials research project along with the University of Maryland and Purdue University.

Carolina is one of the first universities in this region to qualify for such a contract. Dr. Little noted that the money was a contract, not a grant.

Kennedy said that the contract had been awarded to the University "in recognition of its notable faculty and student body. The state of North Carolina can well be proud of the accomplishments of this great University, the first State University in the land."

"Results of more specialized materials research in recent years have indeed had a revolutionary impact in a number of existing non-military technologies, that of the communications industry being a prime example.

"Applications of new materials and processes has contributed greatly to the explosive growth of such vital new industries as electronic data processing and compnuters. They have also made feasible the development of essential hardware for unprecedented technical advances."

Secret Service Scores TD; Clamps Security On Campus

By Linda Cravotta

Secret Service agents discovered a new way to score a touchdown Wednesday morning. One agent, wearing a football sweat shirt, went underground into the sewer pipe stretching beneath Kenan Stadium to check it for sabotage before President Kennedy's visit.

The large number of Secret Service men who came to Chapel Hill to protect the President were joined by more than 150 State Highway Patrolmen, FBI agents, and hundreds of city and county law enforcement officials from all over North Carolina.

In addition, select groups from the University's ROTC program, numbering over 100 cadets, were stationed in strategic locations as an added precaution.

One week in advance of Kennedy's visit, Secret Service men were already scouring the Chapel Hill area to lay out detailed security plans. They memorized every detail of the stadium area, assigned posts to each agent and law enforcement officer and organized exact seating arrangements for the press, members of the faculty, and guests.

Their major task was to map out each step of Kennedy's trip, providing detailed security measures from the time his plane landed in North Carolina until time of departure.

Special security precautions were taken in building the stand upon which President Kennedy delivered his address. A Secret Service agent, dressed in the uniform of a carpenter, was on duty at all times during its construction. The stand was again checked before the President's arrival by agents who went underneath it and then stationed themselves outside of the stand on every side.

Another hazard was the wooded section behind Kenan Stadium which was patrolled thoroughly by police, agents, and ROTC cadets. One man was even assigned to the Bell Tower.

While the crowds watched President Kennedy, the agents and police watched the crowds. With the conclusion of the President's speech, anxious photographers were quickly discouraged by agents, who surrounded Kennedy as he departed. A few agents jumped on the running board of the Presidential car as it left.

N.C. Highway 54, the route which was used by Kennedy and his multi-car police escort, had been shut off since 10 a.m. Grass and brush had been cut away as far as 10 or 20 feet on either side of the road. ROTC cadets and police officers were stationed in strategic positions along the road all the way to the Raleigh-Durham airport.

Although the work of North Carolina police officials was over when Kennedy stepped on his plane, the Secret Service agents' job continued and would soon be aided by the military police at Fort Bragg—Kennedy's next stop.

A Difficult Course

President Kennedy's address yesterday in Kenan Stadium was a far cry from the Berlin policy speech expected.

Only in the broadest terms did the talk touch on the stalemate in that cloven city.

The reiterated emphasis on peaceful settlement can be interpreted as a commitment to repeated attempts toward negotiation and possible concessions on the issues in Berlin and elsewhere.

All-out war over Berlin still remains only a faint possibility. The "firm hand" that the President has made much of in recent months still seems to apply to limited war. Defense Secretary McNamara's pleas and plans for a capable and swift-striking force in the event of limited war seems to bear this out.

The President said nothing yesterday that he has not said in one form or another before.

And the nation still sits, waiting and anxious for the path to peace to be opened. The affirmation that the people of this nation will not have to choose between being either Red or dead spells out a hope that all have felt, but of which we cannot be sure.

Rededication to both peace and liberty is a difficult course to follow. That we are destined, as the President put it, to "live out most, if not all, of our lives in uncertainty and challenge and peril" each day becomes more evident.

The alternative to this existence, it seems, is to be either Red or dead. In the avoidance of this alternative, the United States will move to crisis after crisis.

The picture, as the Chief Executive paints it, is not one to bring rejoicing. The prospect of continuing under the stresses that characterize these present days is depressing. It calls for a courage that we cannot be sure that we possess, and diplomacy that borders on the impossible.

To continue our present policy is a difficult task in view of the Soviet plan for world domination. The United States cannot concede, nor can she afford to trigger a nuclear holocaust by adopting a plan of offense.

Yet the Red tide continues to rise, threatening not only Berlin but much of the world, including Cuba, 90 miles from U.S. soil.

Whether the President's course of action can be followed remains to be seen. Can Russia be contained indefinitely? Can the United States retain a firm hand while that hand hovers over a pistol butt?

The young Chief Executive left many questions unanswered yesterday as he spoke under a cloudless sky to his audience of dignitaries, press men and students.

How soon he will be forced to answer them cannot be predicted.

Significance Of UNC

A man who went from Surry County via State College to become head of two Duncan Hines firms has described the Consolidated University of North Carolina as "one of the most significant factors in the recent dramatic growth" of our State. That man is Roy Park of Ithaca, N. Y., and he made his remarks at a meeting of the Society for the Advancement of Management in Greensboro.

It is good to have such an appraisal of the Consolidated University from such a man at any time. At this time, however, such an appraisal is unusually welcome for it comes just three weeks before the people will vote on a State bond issue to help provide for the needs of higher education.

What Roy Park said in Greensboro emphasizes the importance of making adequate provision for the higher education of our young people:

"The significant thing about the development of North Carolina has not been the increase of manufacturing activities, the new industries, the new products or the increased dollar income . . . (the significance is in) the accelerated progress in providing education and character building for our young people . . . (the three institutions of the Consolidated University) are producing smart, well-educated young men and women, trained for leadership roles in industry, education and politics . . ."

Roy Park was describing what the Consolidated University has done for our young people and by inference what it can do in the years to come. It can do the job in the future, however, only if it has the tools it needs and it cannot get those tools if the bond issue is not approved on November 7. In that bond issue are the funds needed for dormitories, classrooms, laboratories, things the University and other institutions of higher learning must have if they are to do the jobs for which they were created.

That is the only issue in the November 7 election, the issue of making it possible for our own young people to get the educations they must have.

The Complete Text Of Kennedy's Address

I am honored today to be admitted to the fellowship of this ancient and distinguished University, and I am pleased to receive in the short space of one of two minutes the honor for which you spend over four years of your lives.

But whether the degree be honorary or earned it is a proud symbol of this University and this state.

North Carolina has long been identified with enlightened and progressive leaders and people, and I can think of no more important reason for that reputation than this University which year after year has sent educated men and women who have had recognition of their public responsibilities as well as their private interests.

Distinguished presidents like President (Frank Porter) Graham and (President Gordon) Gray, distinguished leaders like the Secretary of Commerce, (former) Gov. (Luther) Hodges, distinguished members of the congresstonal delegation, carry out a tradition which stretches back to the beginning of this school, and that is that the graduate of this University is a man of his nation as well as a man of his time.

And it is my hope in a changing world when untold possibilities lie before North Carolina and indeed the entire South and country that this University will still hew to the old line of the responsibility that its graduates owe to the community at large.

That in your time too, you will be willing to give to the State and country a portion of your lives and all of your knowledge and all of your loyalty.

I want to emphasize in the great, great concentration which we now place upon scientists and engineers how much we still need the men and woman educated in the liberal tradition willing to take the long look undisturbed by prejudices and slogans of the moment who attempt to make an honest judgment on difficult events.

This University has a more important function today than ever before. Therefore I am proud as President of the United States and as a graduate of a small land-grant college in Massachusetts, Harvard University, to come to this center of education.

Those of you who regard my profession of political life with some disdain should remember that it made it possible for me to move from being an obscure lieutenant in the United States Navy to Commander-in-Chief in 14 years with very little technical competence.

But more than that I hope that you will realize that from the beginning of this country and especially in North Carolina, there has been the closest link between educated men and women and politics, and government, and also to remember that our nation's first great leaders were also our first great scholars.

A contemporary described Thomas Jefferson as a gentleman of 32 who could calculate an eclipse, survey an estate, tie an artery, plan an edifice, try a cause, break a horse, dance the minuette, and play the violin.

John Quincy Adams, after being summarily dismissed by the Massachusetts Legislature, from the United States Senate for supporting Thomas Jefferson, could then become Hollston Professor of Rhetoric Oratory at Harvard University, and then become a great secretary of state.

And Sen. Daniel Webster could stroll down the corridors of the Congress a few steps after making some of the greatest speeches in the history of this country and dominate the Supreme Court as the foremost lawyer of his day.

This versatility, this vitality, this intellectual energy, put to the service of our country represents our great resource in these difficult days.

I would urge you therefore regardless of your specialty, and regardless of your chosen field of occupation, and regardless of whether you bear office or not, that you recognize the contribution which you can make as educated men and women to intellectual and political leadership in these difficult days when the problems are infinitely more complicated and come with increasing speed, with increasing significance in our lives than they were a century ago, when so many gifted men dominated our political life.

The United States Senate had more able men serving in it from the period of 1830 to 1850 than probably any time in our history and yet they dealt with three or four problems which they had dealt with for over a generation.

Now they come day by day from all parts of the world.

Even the experts find themselves confused and therefore in a free society such as this, where the people must make educated judgment, they depend upon those of you who have had the advantage of the scholar's education.

I ask you to give to the service of our country the critical faculties which society has helped develop in you here. I ask you to decide, as Goethe put it, whether you will be an anvil or a hammer; whether you will give the world in which you were reared and educated the broadest possible benefits of that education.

It's not enough to lend your talents to deploring present solutions. Most educated men and women, on occasions, prefer to discuss what is wrong rather than to digest alternative courses of action.

"But would you have counted him a friend of ancient Greece?" as George William Curtis asked a body of educators a century ago. Would you have counted him a friend of ancient Greece who quietly discussed the theory of patriotism on that hot summer day, through whose hopeless and immortal hours Leonidus and the 300 stood at Thermopylae for liberty? Was John Milton to conjugate Greek verbs in his library when the liberty of Englishmen was in peril?

This is a great institution, with a great tradition, and with devoted alumni, and with the support of the people of this State. Its establishment and continued functioning, like that of all great universities, has required great sacrifice by the people of North Carolina.

I cannot believe that all of this is undertaken merely to give this school's graduates an economic advantage in the life struggle.

"A university," said Professor Woodrow Wilson, "should be an organ of memory for the state, for the transmission of its best traditions."

And Prince Bismarck was even more specific: "One-third of the students of German universities," he once stated, "broke down from overwork, another third broke down from dissipation, and the other third ruled Germany."

I leave it to each of you to decide in which category you will fall. I do not suggest that our political and public lives be turned over to college-trained experts.

Nor would I give this University a seat in the Congress, as William and Mary was once represented in the Virginia House of Burgesses. Nor would I adopt from the Belgium Constitution a provision giving three votes instead of one to college graduates—at least not until more Democrats go to college—but I do hope that you join us.

This University produces trained men and women and what this country needs are those who look, as the motto of your State says, at things as they are and not at things as they seem to be.

For this meeting is held at an extraordinary time. Angola and Algeria, Brazil and Bizerte, Syria and South Vietnam, Korea, Kuwait, the Dominican Republic, Berlin, the United Nations itself, all problems which 20 years ago we could not even dream of.

Our task in this country is to do our best, to serve our nation's interest as we see it and not to be swayed from our course by the fainthearted or the unknowing or the threats of those who would make themselves our foes.

This is not a simple task in a democracy. We cannot open all our books in advance to an adversary who operates in the night.

The decisions we make, the weapons we possess, the bargains we will accept; nor can we always see reflected overnight the success or failure of the actions that we may take.

In times past a simple slogan described our policy: "54-40 or fight!" to make the world safe for democracy. No entangling alliances, but the times, the issues and the weapons all have changed and complicate and endanger our lives.

It is a dangerous illusion to believe that the policies of the United States can be encompassed, stretching as they do world-wide under varying and different conditions, can be encompassed in one slogan or one adjective, hard or soft or otherwise; or to believe that we shall soon meet total victory or total defeat.

Peace and freedom do not come cheap and we are destined, all of us here today, to live out most if not all our lives in uncertainty and challenge and peril.

Our policy must therefore blend whatever degree of firmness and flexibility which are necessary to protect our vital interests, by peaceful means if possible, by resolute action if necessary.

There is, of course, no place in America where reason and firmness are more clearly pointed out than here in North Carolina.

All Americans can profit from what happened in this State a century ago. It was this State, firmly fixed in the traditions of the South, which sought a way of reason in a troubled and dangerous world.

Yet, when the war came, North Carolina provided a fourth of all of the Confederate soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice in those years. And it won the right to the slogan: "First at Bull Run, farthest at Gettysburg . . . and last at Appomatox."

Its quest for a peaceful resolution of our problems was never identified in the minds of its people or people today with anything but a desire for peace and a preparation to meet their responsibilities.

We move for the first time in our history through an age in which two opposing powers have the capacity to destroy each other and while we do not intend to see the free world give up, we shall make every effort to prevent the world from being blown up.

The American eagle in our official seal emphasizes both peace and freedom and as I said in the State of the Union Address, we in this country give equal attention to its claws which in its left hand holds the arrow and in its right the olive branch.

This is a time of national maturity and understanding and willingness to face issues as they are, not as we would like them to be.

It is a test of our ability to be far-seeing and calm as well as resolute, to keep an eye on both our dangers and our opportunities, and not to be diverted by momentary gains or setbacks or pressures.

And it is the long view of the educated citizen to which the graduates of this University can best contribute. We must distinguish the real from the illusionary, the long range from the temporary, the significant from the petty.

But if we can be purposeful, if we can face up to our risks and live up to our word, if we can do our duty undeterred by fanatics or frenzy at home or abroad, then surely peace and freedom can prevail.

We shall be neither red nor dead, but alive and free! And worthy of the traditions and responsibilities of North Carolina and the United States of America.

Gridders Leave Today

North Carolina football players leave today for their big upcoming contest with the Maryland Terrapins in College Park on Saturday afternoon.

The Tar Heels will leave by plane from Raleigh-Durham airport at 11:45 bound for Washington. Some 40 players will make the trip.

On the basis of their fine performances in three games already this year, the Terps have been made 1-2 touchdown favorites by the oddsmakers.

Carolina will be seeking its first victory since 1958 against the Terps. Last year, the Old Liners won by 22-19 on a hotly-contested interference decision late in the game, and two years ago they took a similarly-close contest by 14-7.

In the 27 games that have been played since 1899, Carolina holds a series edge of 15-11. One game has ended in a tie.

* * *

At Maryland, Coach Tom Nugent claims to have his best team since he came there from Florida State. He has both the speed and size up front, with deception and running ability in the backfield, he says. His startling wins over Syracuse and Clemson have served to bear out that fact.

Possibly the most overlooked man on the team is big Pat Drass, the fullback. Drass, a senior, is a returning starter. He averaged 3.9 yards per carry last season, and was always a pass receiving threat. Drass is considered a fine blocker. His alternate is Joe Hrezo, who has quite a reputation as a hard hitter both on offense and defense.

Another cog in the Terp atack who doesn't draw the attention he deserves is halfback Tom Brown, an all-Conference outfielder last spring. Only a junior, Brown seems to have quite a a career ahead of him in either sport.

The Terps also are blessed with a fine one-two punch at quarterback that few teams have. One of them is the experienced man, the other is the bright neophyte with ability to burn: The old hand is Dick Novak, the newcomer is Dick Shiner. Novak still claims the number one position, but Shiner has outshined him on occasions.

Linemen that the Carolina fans can watch for, or more precisely, listen for on their radios, include centers Bob Hacker, Gene Feher and Ed Gilmore; guards Tom Sankovich, Bill Kirchird, Gary Jankowski and Jack Reilly; tackles Dave Crossan, Roger Shoals and Gordon Bennett, and ends Harry Poniatowski and Dick Barland. And yes, of course, Gary Collins.

Collins, who rated as an All-ACC and honorable mention All-America last year, already has his foot in the door toward a first team berth on the A-A team this year. Sports Illustrated named him lineman of the week for his play in last week's game against Syracuse.

Frosh Booters Win

In its first regular season game of the 1961 season, the freshman soccer team capitalized on two scoring opportunities and held off a threatening Appalachian State Teachers College rally in the closing minutes to pull out a 2-1 victory.

The Tar Heels caught fire early in the contest as left wing John Schlacter took a crisp pass from right inside Tommy Wright and drilled a high shot past the outstretched hands of the Appalachian net-tender. Play continued to see-saw back and forth as both squads utilized the short pass and long clearing strategy.

With the action getting a bit heated in the third period, Carolina's freshmen finally managed to secure an insurance goal as a result of an Appalachian player handling the ball within the penalty zone. Faced with an important decision, head coach Lemary sent starting center forward Jim Talbot to the penalty line and he in turn fired a blazing drive past the stunned opposing goalie.

Leading 2-0 with only a period to go, the Tar Heels began to play a conservative game and take their time in setting up the plays. This technique backfired midway through the final period as Appalachian came alive and started pressing the Carolina cager. With five minutes remaining in the game, the visitors tallied on an indirect kick from about ten feet out. Time ran out on Appalachian and the home squad walked off Fetzer Field with the distinction of being the only undefeated soccer team at Carolina.

Frosh Tackle Deaclets At 2

By Ed Dupree

UNC's Tar Babies play host to Wake Forest's freshman football team today at 2 p.m. in Kenan Stadium. The Carolina yearlings will be looking for their first victory after dropping contests to N. C. State, 7-6, and Clemson, 30-27.

Tar Baby Coach George Barclay plans to open up the offense a little more in the first home game for his freshman eleven. He has added a few more passing patterns, but the offense will still feature a balanced mixture of running and passing.

In the opener against State's frosh, the Tar Babies ran well, but couldn't move through the air. Last week, the passing was sharp, but a strong Clemson line kept the Tar Heel backs from moving on the ground. If the passing and running jell at the same time against the Demon Deaclets, the Tar Babies could be plenty of trouble for the visitors.

The opposing coaches have a number of things in common. Both are former Big Four head coaches, Barclay at UNC and Wake's Beattie Feathers at N. C. State. Barclay was UNC's first All-American at guard and Feathers took A-A honors at Tennessee. Last year Barclay was on the Tulane coaching staff and Feathers finished up an eight-year tenure at Texas Tech.

The lineups:

Baseball Coach Walt Rabb Pleased By Fall Practice

Almost 90 UNC baseball players put away their gloves and bats and ended fall practice last Friday. Coach Walter Rabb had an excellent turn out and was pleased with the results.

His major change during the two-and-a-half week practice was to switch sophomore Jim Speight to shortstop and install Larry Neal at third base, where he played until last year. Neal played short, while Ferg Norton handled the chores at the hot corner, but Norton's graduation leaves the position open to Neal, who was one of UNC's .300 hitters.

Len "Woogie" Dellolio at first base and Paul Swing at second complete the UNC infield. Both Dellolio and Swing hit in the .300 bracket last year.

Rabb has a number of candidates for the outfield, but Heyward Hull, the only returning fly-catcher, is almost a sure bet to handle the chores in right field. Hull missed fall practice because of a large number of afternoon labs, but will be ready for action when baseball season rolls around.

Dave Pope, Buddy Tilden, and Tom West are ony a few of the outfield hopefuls who will have to fill the gaps left by Tommy Camp and Jim Mooring. Rabb is hoping that Russ Hollers who played on the 1960 team that went to the NCAA finals will be able to play this spring. Russ is now in law school, but has one more year of eligibility left. Rabb calls Holers "an exceptionally strong hitter who could help us a lot."

The catching department is still up for grabs. Wendell Brande is the most experienced, but sophomore Bob Cox and a host of newcomers should make the battle for the number one spot an interesting development in the spring.

Dee Frady is the number one utility man on the club, since he can play first base, outfield, or handle the backstop duties. Frady is a top candidate for an outfield position.

Cage Work To Begin

Basketbal coach Dean Smith has announced that drills for the coming season will begin officially here Monday. Varsity workouts will be held at 5 p.m., and freshman workouts start at 7.

Coach Smith has requested that all persons interested in trying out for the varsity come to see him this week. Assistant coach Ken Rosemond would also like to meet the boys trying out for his freshman team.

Lettermen returning to the varsity this season include Jim Hudock, Don Walsh, Jim Donohue, Larry Brown, Dieter Krause, and Harry Jones.

JFK 'Far From Convinced' To Ship Troops To Viet Nam

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy met for 90 minutes Friday with his top policy advisers to discuss the Berlin crisis and presumably the question of whether U.S. troops should be rushed to South Viet Nam.

The President's session with his National Security Council came amid reports that he was "far from convinced" that American troops should be sent into South Viet Nam's mounting battle with communist guerrilas.

It also coincided with a Peiping Radio report, heard in Tokyo, that Ho Chi Minh, communist chief of North Viet Nam, met Red China's top leaders in Penping Thursday night, presumably to discuss U.S. efforts to halt the communist tide in South Viet Nam.

Until now, Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh diem has tken the positions that his forces could handle the Red threat. But the communists have built up their forces until, as Kennedy said in his recent U.N. speech, they are fighting at battalion strength.

As usual, there were no announcements of proceedings at the Security Council meeting. But the President is understood to be weighing conflicting advice on the actions that the United States should take in South Viet Nam.

He is confronted with the problem of whether to commit American forces to a dogged fight in the far eastern jungles as Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev continues his unyielding stand on Berlin.

The argument over whether use of U.S. troops should be considered undoubtedly was a big reason for the President's decision to send Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor to Saigon this weekend for conferences with Diem.

Taylor, who leaves Sunday on his fact-finding mission, will be accompanied by Walt W. Rostow, the President's special assistant for national security. Some 10 other State and Defense Department officials will be in the party.

Rostow was reported to have urged consideration of stronger measures in South Viet Nam, including the dispatch of U.S. combat troops as reserve force.

Neither Secretary of State Dean Rusk nor Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara has joined Rostow's side of the still informal debate, according to a reliable source.

Opponents of immediate intervention argue that talk of sending American troops is premature because measures to strengthen South Viet Nam's own defense forces are only now beginning to go into effect.

America Protests To Soviets

BERLIN (UPI) — Communist police pinned down five U.S. Army MP's and 14 West Berlin police with a barrage of machinegun and rifle bullets early Friday and opened fire across the border again Friday night. The United States protested to the Soviets in strong terms.

The first shooting incident came in predawn darkness when the Communist police (Vopos) fired an estimated 250 to 300 shots at nine East Berlin refugees who crashed their way to freedom in the American sector by ramming a barbed wire barrier with a truck.

When the American and West Berlin police arrived on the scene the Communists cut loose with several more volleys. No one was hit but the incident was regarded as grave because American soldiers were involved directly.

Friday night West German police reported that Vopos firing at two more escaping refugees fired 10 to 15 shots into the French sector of West Berlin. German police said the shots came so close to them they might have been aimed.

An American spokesman said the United States had formally protested to the Soviet commandant in Berlin over the recent East German shooting incidents which have endangered the lives of West Berliners and the Western Allies as well.

Society Sponsors 'L'Atalante' Film Monday Evening

Jean Vigo's "L'Atalante" will be shown Monday evening to UNC-Chapel Hill Film Society members as the second feature film in the fall-winter series of classic and experimental motion pictures.

Photographed by Boris Kaufman and directed by Vigo from a scenario by Jean Guinee, "L'Atalante" was produced in 1934 and starred Dita Parlo, Jean Daste and Michel Simon, with other roles played by Louis Lefebvre, Gilles Margaritis, Maurice Gilles and Raya Diligent.

Michel Simon's portrayal of Pere Jules has been ranked as among the greatest characters ever created on the screen by any actor or director.

It is the story of a newly married couple who start their life together on a barge, "L'Atalante," and ends with their reunion and reconciliation after she has run away from the barge and her self-centered, jealous husband to discover the glamorous city life in Paris of which she has dreamed so long.

A short will accompany the feature and both will be shown in Carroll Hall starting at 8 p.m. A small number of memberships to the Society are still available.

Because of the interest in the "Operations Abolition" showing and discussion on campus Monday night, the Cine Club of the Film Society will not meet after the showing of "L'Atalante" but will resume operations on November 6.

SP Seats To Be Filled

Dorm Men's legislature seats will be filled for districts one and two at the Student Party meeting Monday night at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall.

Jimmy Weeks, SP chairman, stipulated that all members would have to be present in order to be eligible to vote at the nominating convention next week.

Race Opens For Fall Election November 7

Freshman, sophomore and junior class officers plus eight members of the Women's Honor Council will be elected in the fall election, Nov. 7.

Anyone wishing to run for a class office may seek nomination by the Student Party or the University Party.

Anyone wishing to run independent of a party may do so by presenting a petition of 25 signatures to Dave Buxton, Elections Board Chairman.

The Women's Council is the judicial body which tries all cases involving violations of the Honor Code and Campus Code by women students.

It is composed of women students elected biannually from geographically-apportioned districts, according to the location of their living residences.

The judicial districts are: Judicial District I—Alderman, Spencer, Kenan and McIver; Judicial District II—Carr, Nurses' Dorm, Whitehead and Smith, and Judicial District III—Sorority Houses and town residences.

The available positions are: District I—one year seat and one six-month seat; District II—one year seat and one six-month seat, and District III—one year seat and three six-month seats.

If a senior receives the majority votes in her district, she will assume only a six-month seat.

Any woman student interested in running for a position on the Council must be interviewed by the Bi-Partisan Elections Board. This committee will endorse all candidates it considers worthy of its support.

The scheduled interview times are October 16-18 from 7 to 9 p.m. and October 19 from 3 to 5:30 p.m.

Interviews will be held in the Council Room on second floor of Graham Memorial and applicants must sign up for one October 15 on a schedule to be posted on the door of that room.

Positions are also open for clerical and Attorney General Staff work. They will be filled on appointment by Bill Harriss, student body president.

Attorney General Staff members investigate all facts, question all witnesses, examine all material and present an impartial account of each case to the Council. The clerks take notes during the trial.

Interviews for these positions will be announced in the DTH.

"Abolition" Postponed

The Monday night showing of the HUAC film, "Operation Abolition," has been postponed to the following Monday, Oct. 23. Mike Harrington and Fulton Lewis will tentatively debate on the film at that time.

Murder-Suicide Indicated

Chief W. D. Blake said Thursday that the Chapel Hill Police "are trying to clear up the loose ends and determine a motive" in the deaths of two Carolina students last Friday.

Suicide-murder is strongly indicated, he said, in the deaths of William Henry Harrison Johnson Jr., 24, of Statesville and James Michael Barham, 20, of Burlington.

Blake said it may be three days to a week before he will have the results of tests made of vomit found on the bed and floor in the students' room.

The test is being done by William Best, chemist of the State Bureau of Investigation.

Cyanide poisoning was ruled as the cause of death by a corner's jury.

Bond Issue Handbill Circulated In Kenan

The State Affairs Committee distributed 600 circulars in Kenan Stadium prior to the President's speech. The handbills, asking North Carolina voters to support the coming educational bond issue, were circulated to the University Day crowd by 11 girls under the direction of Joe Routh.

The committee, directed by co-chairmen Larry McDevitt and Tom White, is working in co-ordination with the Students Committee for a Better North Carolina. These committees plan to reach as many people as possible before the election to show the interest of the students in improving North Carolina education.

Other North Carolina schools are initiating post card campaigns, newspaper support, radio and television programs and telephone marathons in support of the bond issue.

The Time Of Day

The clock started ticking loudly in McComb, Mississippi, about 100 years ago. It was diffcult to hear it for almost four years: The Confederate guns boomed loudly trying to drown it out.

But it ticked anyway, until in 1865, it was discernible again, loud and clear. But McComb, like the rest of the South, muffled its ears and pretended that it was the sound of the cotton gin.

Recently the sound has been getting louder, and it is difficult to ignore it. The clock ticked a loud note last week when Negro students in McComb marched on the City Hall in protest against racial injustices.

The local school board heard the sound and refused to allow the students to return to school until each had signed a statement allowing himself to be put on probation.

The students refused and the clock ticked again. Thursday, the board set a deadline of 3:30 p.m. Monday for the rebels to sign or be suspended for the remainder of the year. Most of the 100 students refused.

This news from McComb comes on the heels of a news dispatch reporting that two white men, Paul Potter, 22, of Philadelphia, and Thomas Hayden, 21, of Atlanta, who were beaten Wednesday during a student march, had reported to the Justice Department. Again a loud tick.

And still the residents of McComb muffle their ears and hope that the clock will stop so it can be turned back to the ante-bellum years.

But they will not and cannot succeed. The clock will continue to tick there just as it will in the rest of the country, slowly and inexorably, until the ticks become so loud that the click of locked school doors and the crunch of blows can no longer drown it out.

And McComb will have to listen to the time of day.

'Criminal & Corrupt'

To say the least the action taken on Tuesday by the executive council of the AFL-CIO and the stated reason for its action in voting against letting the Teamsters Union rejoin it emphasized a serious situation in the United States.

The rejection of the Teamsters was an action taken by no enemies of organized labor but by the guardians of organized labor itself. Furthermore, the representatives of labor on the executive council voted overwhelmingly, 25 to 2, against allowing the Teamsters to return to the ranks of the AFL-CIO. And that clear vote represented the feeling of organized labor, as President George Meany put it, that "there is every indication that the Teamsters Union is more than ever now under the influence of criminals and corrupt elements."

If organized labor is right in its charges about this labor union it constitutes a menace to America. Certainly it must be presumed that the leaders of the AFL-CIO did not take this position lightly. And if the "criminal and corrupt elements" dominate this union, which plays so great a part in American transport, the grasp of these elements upon important segments of the American economy must be ended.

Of course, neither Jimmy Hoffa nor anybody else in America can be counted guilty until he is proven guilty. Still if the evidence is available to convince labor's guardians and friends that the Teamsters are contaminated by crime and corruption, that evidence should be available to the government. It should be arrayed effectively in the courts. If the Teamsters are too crooked to be accepted in America's house of labor, they are too corrupt to be tolerated in a position of power in the American economy.

Campus Entertainment

The Campus Entertainment Committee started the year with a budget of $3,500 appropriated by the Student Legislature. After one project, the committee now has $700.

The Four Aces, it seems, did not attract the kind of audiences the committee had hoped. There are reasons for the failure, not the least of which is the committee's choice of entertainers. The Four Aces may be a good poker hand, but they didn't win anything for the committee. People stayed away in droves.

The project was a flop. And with only $700 left in the budget, the committee will have to seek additional revenue before planning another concert.

No one, not even the committee, is sure of whether the campus wants the committee to schedule another program, or of exactly what the campus wants in the way of entertainment.

The committee has asked the DTH to solicit comments on the continuation of the program and on the type of entertainment wanted.

Letters can be addressed to the DTH either for publication, or for use by the committee.

NSA Can Be Better Through Criticism

The National Student Association has always been subject to criticism and always will be. Criticism i sthe best thing possible to keep NSA a functioning and vital organization if it is not destructive in intent. It is through such criticism that NSA can grow into a more perfect organization representing the American student.

NSA must constantly be changing if it is to keep up with the times, or it will become stagnated and die. Reforms are always needed and always will be. NSA must be aware of this and open always to change.

NSA is not a secret organization and wants the student community to be informed of what it is and the stands that it takes. Anyone who is interested in the functions of NSA is invited to come and talk with the NSA Coordinator who will be most happy to supply him with any information that he would want.

* * *

THE NATIONAL Student Congress is not a collection of average students but a collection of interested student leaders who have knowledge and opinions about the issues, both national and international, facing the American student.

All agree that knowledgeable opinions are a prerequisite for responsible action. Unfortunately most of the American students are not thus qualified, probably out of complete lack of interest. It is therefore a purpose of NSA to raise the interest of the masses of students in these problems facing them.

In this respect controversy is considered necessary and is therefore invited. The views of NSA are not the only ones and possibly some are not even the right ones. This is for the student to decide in his own mind.

* * *

AT THE CONGRESS, held this year at Madison, Wis., the conservative and moderate voices were both heard, and the ideas presented were as thoroughly discussed as possible. Many of the controversial issues, such as HUAC and Cuba, were hotly debated, and both the liberals and conservatives were given every chance to present their views and resolutions. Although the liberals dominated, the debate and controversy triggered much healthy inquiry into the issues, which through amendments helped to make the resolutions of NSA sounder and more representative.

The question of representation was brought before the Congress and thoroughly discussed. Out of this came a constitutional amendment that reapportioned the number of delegates that a school could send, making the Congress more representative of the member schools.

There was also an amendment that failed, calling for member schools to elect their representatives to the congress. It failed because a direct campus election of delegates was considered unpractical on many campuses. It was decided that the question of the election should be left up to the individual campuses.

THE REPRESENTATIVES from UNC were the officers of the student government, the attorney general, a representative from the Tar Heel, and the NSA Coordinator. All were approved by the Student Legislature, which is elected by the student body.

The representatives from UNC were not in agreement on all the issues brought before the Congress, and all the UNC delegates considered student opinion before they voted. If this system of representation is not acceptable to the student body, then it should be changed.

There will always be disagreement with the policies of NSA, i.e. the conservatives when HUAC was condemned or the far left when Castruly be representative until th setudents express their views with a direct interest in their National Student Association.

It is representing you throughout the world. It is up to you to make it truly and completely representative of the American Student.

COMMUNIST TROUBLES:

The Communist bloc in Europe is having a rash of new agricultural and other troubles. Now more difficulties loom ahead. There has been a crop failure in the Soviet Union's Kazakhistan and virgin lands region for the second year in a row. There have been failures in agriculture, building construction and other fields in Czechoslovakia. There are complaints by East German Minister of Agriculture Hans Reichelt about the high degree ofs alleged sicknes among the farming population.

Communist publications more and more are openly criticizing the national, regional and municipal committees for the Czech failures. They are putting the blame squarely on ineptness, mismanagement and lack of interest.

FOREIGN MINISTERS:

Look for a Western foreign ministers' meeting later this month to align policy in advance of any possible negotiations with the Russians on Berlin. The Bonn government is understood to be pressing for an early conference at the Ministerial level. Paris is tipped as the likely meeting place.

* * *

FRENCH PROBLEMS:

The date of the next Algiers revolt has become a favorite guessing game in France. Some officials who claim to be "in the know" are setting it at "any time after October 10." In line with that, President de Gaulle is reported by Western diplomats as getting ready to pull a third army division out of Algeria to join NATO forces in Western Europe.

INDONESIAN RUBBER:

The operations of American and British rubber estates in Sumatra may be hampered seriously by a new Indonesian agrarian law which went into effect in late September.

According to some interpretations of the law, the companies may be forced to give up their rights to large portions of their holdings. British and Belgian tea estates in Indonesia also may be affected.

Carolina's Infirmary Needs Improvements

The infirmary at UNC is in need of many improvements, although it is possibly one of the most conscientiously-run and well-managed student hospitals in the United States. But, like any other institution, there are some policies and practices of our infirmary which upset and disturb many students.

One disturbing policy of the infirmary staff is their criteria for the placement of students in wards. It is usually a practice of hospitals to avoid the spread of disease among its patients. But when five students are put in one ward, all with apparently different ailments (and most of these infectious), one wonders just how many diseases he will have the next morning.

And the next morning begins so bright and early! A nurse trots into the room at 6 a.m., nudges the patient, says, "It's time to take your temperature," and pops the glass instrument into the victim's mouth. At such an hour, it's no wonder that when she returns she finds the thermometer shattered on the floor and her patient sound asleep again. Who ever heard of a sick person being so wide awake at this hour?

* * *

BUT THIS IS THE LAST bit of sleep any patient gets for the next 16 hours. A continual stream of nurses, doctors, maids, and orderlies run in and out of rooms and down the hall all day. Don't let anyone fool you about the quiet and solitude of the infirmary. Of course, no student visitors are allowed, but the activity compensates for their absence.

The policies of the second floor and the first floor concerning the association between men and women patients contradict each other a bit. On the second floor, men and women may not visit in each other's rooms and "supervised separation" of the sexes is at all times practiced. However, on the first floor, one can walk down the hall, pass the examining rooms, and see a variety of sizes and shapes of half-nude male and female students on examining tables, with the doors to the rooms wide open, having been left so by doctors and nurses.

If these people are hired to examine students, then only they should do so. No student expects to come to the infirmary and be on public display.

* * *

EVERY INFIRMARY has its faults, and ours is no exception. However, the fact that other universities have not improved their infirmaries is no excuse for our negligence. Only through student action will improvements begin. Students should begin now by talking to its staff members and employees and work in cooperation with them to eliminate its defects.

What Means Bass Weejun?

What means the Bass Weejun?

Every clothing store in Chapel Hill sells them. The great majority of students here, both male and female, own at least one pair of them. If you stare downward as you walk across the campus or along Franklin Street, your eyes are bound to bump into them. They are worn with dresses, slacks, shorts, and suits. This great standard has even more variety in itself: there are green Weejuns, black Weejuns, brown Weejuns, and, praised be its name, the almighty Cordovan Weejuns. They also come in two finishes.

Are they some sort of status symbol? Do they really mean anything, or are they so esoteric in nature that one must accept their omnipresence as essential to our University society, our culture.

I guess they are as much a part of our college world as button-down collars and London Fog jackets. All three of these essentials to the collegian's wardrobe have three important things in common: comfort, style, and availability.

This isn't a fad; Weejuns are here to stay. Why do Carolina Coed and her masculine counterpart wear them? Because they are so comfy, so wearable, and so just-like-everybody-else.

A great philosopher once said, "Buy 'em, today!" His name, G. H. Bass.

But they'll never replace Mother.

Editor: This is not an angry letter. It is a commentary on the scene. The author's own Weejuns themselves.

La Dolce Vita & The Clashing Of Symbols

Overheard at Lenoir Hall: "No, you've taken it the wrong way entirely. The girl was a symbol of innocence." "No, that's not true at all. She was innocent, but not innocence. Just because . . ."

And again: "You mean that you actually didn't see the resemblance between the statue of Christ and Ekberg holding out her arms when the actor was spinning her around?" And still again: "And then the camera switched to the river, and you know what that means!!"

But there is another side to this issue. Jack Pollock is emphatic: "Symbolism? I have an entire philosophy of life against working symbols into a work of art!" And The Great Porn is equally outspoken: "Symbols?——!!"

And I am in agreement. I would like to strike a blow for the non-artsy-craftsy group who would like to think of a work of art in direct, cohesive terms. I don't want to be bothered with a nagging sense of guilt at not knowing whether or not I'm missing secret significance when inanimate objects are innocently placed in a scene.

* * *

IT'S COMFORTING to know that this attitude has support in higher places. Ingmar Bergman, more sinned against than artistically sinning, has described his modus operandi as ". . . seeing the black mass of the subconscious with a small red thread protruding.

I pull at the thread until it is all unwound, and that is a movie." This is fairly clear. Bergman sides with other pre-Freudian or non Freudian artists in relying on a highly developed esthetic sensitivity for sureness in suggestion.

Henry James, Henri Rousseau, 9/10 of mythology, Rimbaud, Villon, Verlaine, and a host of other serious and successful artists cannot be judged by a set of symbolic criteria simply because they were innocent of any such forethought or calculation. Nor is it excusable to manufacture critical paeans to native artists of Papua and New Guinea for their lovely grasp of fertilty or erotic meanings as demonstrated in their "quaint artifacts."

* * *

WITH THE ADVENT of Bergman's film classics and the 'nouvelle vague' in French motion pictures it has been easy for the psuedo-intellectual to air an ill-fitting erudition by making passionately vague statements which no one can contradict. Cases in point: Hiroshima Mon Amour," "The Savage Eye," "La Dolce Vita," "Black Orpheus," others. The artistic symbol is such a treacherously slippery thing that a Legion of Decency Toward Artists could profitably be established, forbidding attendance by anyone without sufficient background and depth.

Is it critical integrity that makes a New York columnist read an abortion into the doctor's past in "Wild Strawberries," when it is almost painfully obvious that the doctor's problem comes from mental frigidity and nothing more complex?

This is almost as bad as a hypothetical case in which a tyro critic finds meanings beneath the surface of Henry Miller's "Tropics," or even worse, finds his characters representing something more implausible than themselves.

* * *

PICKING SYMBOLS out of a consistent (which is the only relevant criticism) work of art is failing to see the forest for imaginary trees. While it is possible that certain objects have a definite, even an important meaning to the whole, as in the novels of Alain Robbe-Grillet, for example, it is far more likely that these are placed by a highly refined "feel" for unity and appropriate setting that enables a serious craftsman to employ objects to support his theme.

It doesn't take much sense of verbal harmony to feel right and wrong in this sense, both writing and reading. My arguments rests on this. Be fair to artist of all forms and schools, and judge them by their purposes, good or bad. It is the worst possible lack of intelligence to assume a lack of intelligence on the part of another.

I NEEDED A SHAVE badly when I got up this morning. As I fixed breakfast I absentmindedly rubbed the gritty black stubble. Naturally I burned the toast, and scraped off the charred part onto my empty plate. The coffee was poorly prepared and the residue of grounds made me put down the cup without finishing it. I thought the first cigarette of the day would help, but seeing the ashes turn into fine mud in the damp saucer depressed me more than ever. I can't understand why I've been feeling like this all day.

Suicide Illegal, Says N.C. Court

The State Supreme Court Wednesday ruled that it is against the law to commit suicide. The high court reached back to the common law of 1715 to back up its ruling.

The high court's decision upheld a motion to quash a bill of indictment against Edgar Willis of Carteret County, who allegedly attempted to commit suicide last February.

Associate Justice Clifton L. Moore, author of the court's opinion, said the General Assembly in 1715 said the English common laws "are the laws of this government as far os they are compatible with our way of life and trade." English common law considered suicide as a felony.

The court granted the fact that suicide cannot be punished in the State, but refused to yield tis opinion on the illegality of the act.

In countering the claim that the common law is obsolete, the justices said, "We do not agree since suicide is a crime, one who aids and abets another in, or is accessory before the fact to, self-murder is amendable to the law."

Justice Moore said suicide "has perhaps been reduced to the grade of a misdemeanor by reason of the following statutory provision:

"A felony is a crime which may be punishable by either death or imprisonment in the State's prisons. Any other crime is a misdemeanor."

Willis' attorneys based their motion on the grounds that the indictment "failed to state a crime."

Group Appointed To Study Program On Orientation

Student Body President Bill Harriss has appointed a student committee to study and evaluate the freshman orientation program.

The purpose of the committee is to discuss various phases of orientation in an effort to improve it next year. The committee will make recommendations to next year's orientation committee and to Chancellor Aycock's committee on orientation and the entire freshman program.

Dr. George Harper, chairman of the faculty and a member of the English department, is head of the Chancellor's committee.

Harriss is acting chairman of the students committee. Other members are Sara Jo Allen, Fred Anderson, Hank Patterson, and Al Pollard.

"For some years a need has existed for a critical evaluation of orientation—beginning with the general aims and direction of the program," said committeeman Patterson.

According to Pollard no recommendations for change in orientation will be made until the faculty and student committees have met together and exchanged their evaluations of this year's program.

"This is the first thorough investigation of orientation," Pollard said. "I'm hoping they won't shorten it anymore. It went smoothly this year, and I've heard nothing but good reports about it," he concluded.

Items Dropped In Fluoridation Suit

Eighteen allegations have been eliminated from Manning Simon's suit against UNC to block fluoridation of Chapel Hill's water supply.

Superior Court Judge Clawson Williams granted the University's request that they be taken out as irrelevant. Horton Rountree, University counsel, also tried to eliminate 26 others.

Harold Edwards, Simons' attorney, has 30 days in which to file an amended complaint. Edwards said after the hearing he did not think that would be necessary.

Rountree said that eliminating the 18 allegations "serve to boil down the issues."

If Edwards files an amended complaint UNC could make another motion to strike, according to Rountree.

Rountree said the University will answer the charges or demur if no amended suit is filed. A demurral would require another hearing.

If the demurral were overruled the University would have to answer the allegations.

If it were upheld Simons could drop the suit or appeal to the State Supreme Court.

Simons, Chapel Hill tax consultant, filed the suit last August against UNC which controls Chapel Hill's water supply.

Drama Group Conducting State Workshop At UNC

The North Carolina Dramatic Association is conducting a two-day Theatre Workshop yesterday and today in the Playmakers Theater for over 100 delegates from community, college and high school organizations throughout the state.

No registration fee is required, and anyone interested in theatre arts has been invited to attend.

Directors of these drama groups will be guests of the Carolina Playmakers at their production of Thornton Wilder's "The Matchmaker," which opens their 44th season.

A series of eight one-hour instructional programs got underway yesterday. Staff members included Josefina Niggli, of Western Carolina College and president of the state-wide drama group, now beginning its 40th year; Ralph C. Williams of Wingate College; John Sneden, of Davidson College; and Kai Jurgensen, of UNC.

Today's sessions, starting at 9 a.m., will be led by Miss Niggli; Daniel A. Linney, of Campbell College; James L. Hamilton, Asheville Country Day School; Mrs. Ada Hobbs, of Rocky Mount High School; Clifton Britton, Goldsboro High School; Doug W. Swink, Wilmington College; and Gene Lominac and Gordon Clark of the Playmakers staff.

JFK Names Rashi Fein To Council

President John F. Kennedy has appointed Associate Professor Rashi Fein of the School of Business as a staff member of the Council of Economic Advisers. Now in Washington, Dr. Fein is on a two-year leave of absence.

The staff of the Council of Economic Advisers analyzes the national economy and assists the President in his economic report to Congress.

Dr. Fein, a Johns Hopkins graduate, came to the University in 1954. He has previously served as statistician with the Department of Commerce in 1958-59.

CAN'T BEAT HIAWATHA

LA CROSSE, Wis. (UPI) — Sculptor Anthony Zimmerhakl and the City Council rejected the plea of the Winnebago Indian tribe that the city's 25-foot statue of an Indian be named for their famous chief, Decorah.

Decorah had only one eye, Zimmerhakl explained, while the statue has two. Besides, the statue is of an Iroquois Indian, he added. The issue came to an end Thursday when it was christened Hiawatha.

Press Receives Red Carpet Treatment, Better Than 1859

The press was much better cared for Thursday when President Kennedy was here than they were back in 1859 when President James Buchanan was the commencement speaker.

"The stadium certainly is fixed up nice for us," said Bryan Haislep, AP reporter whowa s here to cover Kennedy's speech.

Carolina welcomed 225 reporters, photographers and movie/TV cameramen to Kenan Stadium with open arms and an apology for the "treatment the press got the other time you were here."

When President Buchanan spoke at the 1859 commencement, the press was almost ignored. All attention was on the President.

No one made arrangements for the newsmen to get food, hotel rooms, a vantage point to view the ceremony or even transportation to Chapel Hill.

A Raleigh correspondent angrily complained then that the 22 newsmen were loaded in a converted wagon without springs that traveled at two miles per hour six hours to come from Raleigh. The reporters paid two dollars a head for the one-way trip.

Thursday a TV cameraman from Telenews said that they had a "hell of a loading at Raleigh-Durham." Everyone seemed generally pleased with the transportation this time, except for Charles Clay, reporter for the Raleigh News and Observer, who missed his ride back to Raleight.

Jay Jenkins, veteran Charlotte Observer reporter, noticed that there were "certainly a lot of newsmen around."

There were no writing tables or equipment provided for the press in 1859. Thursday there was a temporary press room set up in the field house complete with typewriters, telephones, teletypewriters, paper, pencils, a mimeographm achine and journalism students to answer any questions.

Ed Higgins, long-time radio newsman for WDNC in Durham said, "This coverage is a combined effort of several of the larger radio/TV stations in North Carolina," he continued. "It is being broadcast on about 60 North Carolina stations, the Voice of America all of the Westinghouse radio stations and NBC radio stations."

Russell Clay, ace reporter for the Durham Morning Herald, expected a major policy speech. He was disappointed that there was no "prepared text of the speech."

There was no prepared text because Washington didn't send one ahead. The UNC News Bureau did mimeograph copies of the speech when it got here in the press room at the field house.

Opera Tryouts Monday

Tryouts for "The Beggar's Opera," The Carolina Playmakers' second major production of the season, will be held Monday at 4:00 and 7:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

Director Russell Graves announces that he will need twelve men and eight women to fill the roles. Positions for technical work are also open.

Previous voice training is not a prerequisite to trying out for 'The Beggar's Opera,'" Graves said. "Many of the songs in his musical can be talked."

Copies of the script and music for the production are on reserve in the music library and the reserve room at Wilson Library. Students and townspeople wishing to try out may go by and study them.

Graves said that music from the show was preferred at the tryouts, but that any music would be acceptable. An accompanist will be present.

Often referred to as "the granddaddy of all musical shows," "The Beggar'sc Opera" was first presented in 1728. A current descendant is the record-breaking "The Threepenny Opera," with many of the same characters, including Macheath, Polly and Peachum. "The Beggar's Opera" was written by John Gay

Carolina Looking For Second Win

Underdog Tar Heels Battle Maryland's 9th-Ranked Terps

By Ed Dupree

North Carolina's Tar Heels invade College Park today, hoping to upset Tom Nugent's high-flying Maryland Terrapins, ranked ninth in the nation. Gametime is 1 p.m. (EST).

Nugent's Terps have rolled over SMU 14-6, Clemson 24-21, and once-mighty Syracuse 22-21. The Tar Heels fell to Clemson last week, 27-0, after opening their season with a 27-22 victory over N. C. State's Wolfpack.

Maryland's Gary Collins, a top candidate for All-American honors at end, is the big man in Maryland's offensive attack. The 6-3, 205-pounder is also outstanding on defense—there doesn't seem to be anything he can't do. Collins was named lineman of the week for his brilliant play in the upset victory over Syracuse last week.

Dick Novak and Dick Shiner share the quarterback position for the College Park crew. The two form a sprkling one-two punch at the signal-calling spot for the Terps. Novak is the likely starter, but Shiner, a sophomore, will see a lot of action.

UNC Coach Jim Hickey has indicated that he my shake up his starting team quite a bit, but has not released the starting lineup yet. The starting backfield should be Ray Farris at quarterback, Bob Elliot at fullback, and Gib Carson and Lenny Beck at the halfbacks.

Tar Babies Trounce Wake Frosh

By ED DUPREE

A sparkling first half passing attack carried UNC's freshman football team to a 20-0 victory Friday over Wake Forest's Demon Deaclets. The Tar Babies supplemented the aerial attack with 158 yards on the ground and captured their first victory of the season against the winless Deaclets.

Quarterback Gary Black connected on 8 passes in 12 attempts for 97 yards. His favorite target was end Billy Axselle, who hauled in 4 passes for 49 yards.

Halfback Johnny Payne thrilled the crowd when he made a spectacular catch of a 21-yard pass from Black on the one-yard line and went over for the Tar Babies first touchdown with 2:10 remaining in the first quarter. Dave Braine booted the extra point to give the little Tar Heels a 7-0 lead.

Seconds later Wake Forest's Wayne Welborn fumbled and Carolina tackle John Hill recovered the loose ball on the Wake 33. An offsides penalty against the Deaclets moved the ball to the 28 and the Blue and White was on the move again.

This time, quarterback Ron Tuthill was at the helm and after Ray Jones had carried to the 21, Tuthill picked up six more yards to the 15. The first period ended with the ball on the Wake 14.

Ken Willard, a hard-driving fullback, went up the middle for seven yards and another Carolina first down. A penalty pushed the ball back to the 12, but the Tar Babies were not to be stopped.

On second down Jones "stumbled, fell, and fought" his way to the one-yard line to set up the next TD. Willard then scored standing up to give the Tar Babies a 13-0 lead. Braine's extra point try was blocked. Willard's marker came with 13:21 to go in the half and the UNC frosh went off the field at halftime with a 13-0 lead.

Late in the game, Don Loveday intercepted a Wake Forest pass on the Wake 35 and lateralled to the speedy Tommy Ward to set up the final score. Ward fought his way to the 20-yard line and the Baby Blue scored five plays later.

Third-string quarterback Jim Gallagher hit his twin brother Frank with a 7-yard pass to move the ball to the 13. Ward picked up 7 more and two plays later, Tuthill who had replaced Gallagher at QB, went the final five yards to make the score 19-0. Braines kick was good to give the Tar Babies their final 20-0 margin.

Tuthill turned in the longest run from scrimmage, with a 48-yard carry from the UNC 31 to the Wake 21. Jackson and Willard picked up 17 yards on three plays, but Gary Black's fumble on the Wake 3 stopped the drive.

Ken Willard's pass interception with less than a min ute to go in the game almost resulted in a fourth UNC score. Willard picked the ball out of the air on his own 39 and with the aid of a few key blocks, returned it to the Wake 14. The Tar Baby fourth-string almost got the score, but a pass from Bill Duff was caught a few feet out of the end zone.

Wake's Wayne Welborn turned in the longest sprint for the Deacs, with a 44-yard run in the second quarter. Welborn was also Wake's top ball carrier with a 5.2 rushing average.

Willard carried 9 times and picked up 37 yards for Carolina, for a 4.1 average. Tuthill had 47 net yards in 8 carries for a 5.9 average. Jones carried 12 times for 18 yards and 9.0 average and fullback Richard Zarro picked up 20 yards in 4 carries for a 5.0 average.

The first frosh game at home this year had its crowd-pleasers. Halfback Ronnie Jackson, a speedy 5-8, 155-pounder, who returned two kickoffs against Clemson for touchdowns with 85 and 90 yards runs, kept the small crowd on the edge of its seat every time the Wake Forest team punted and kicked off. He didn't break away for any long runs against the Baptists—but the crowd faithfully cheered the lightning-quick Tar Baby each time he entered and left the game. Jackson did carry the ball 3 times from scrimmage for 12 yards and almost broke away from the pack on one of his runs.

Tom Hood, easily the most faithful Carolina supporter and an ex-vaudeville performer, entertained the small group of spectators with some magic tricks at halftime and the audience responded with the usual encores. Tom's tricks proved to be the only excitement until late in the game when the Tar Babies marched to the final touchdown. The third quarter was sluggish as the Deaclets stopped the UNC passing attack and the two teams exchanged punts for most of the period. But Tuthill's 48-yard run in the opening minutes of the fourth stanza livened the game up quickly.

NCAA Suggests 16-Point Program

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association today recommended a 16-point program aimed at combating "the criminal conspiracy of bribery" in college sports.

The program was drafted by the NCAA after months of study and review of information and suggestions obtained from a variety of college agencies, the New York County district attorney's office, and the permanent subcommittee in investigations of the House of Representatives.

The report, issued by NCAA Executive Director Walter Byers, urged passage of federal anti-gambling and anti-bribery laws. It also encouraged state legislatures to enact anti-bribery laws.

"The cancerous core from which much of this evil spreads is organized gambling," the report added, "and both recent legislation and proposed laws pending before Congress can do much to strike against this recognized evil."

Several gamblers have been indicted by the New York County grand jury on bribery charges involving basketball games. The jury granted immunity to the players involved for testifying. In North Carolina, other players have been indicted in connection with a bribery scandal there.

The NCAA report said colleges themselves must take the offensive in the fight against bribery "by pursuing their own self-improvement program."

Ten of the 16 recommendations were directed toward improving basic procedures in college athletic administration. They would be implemented by NCAA, conference or institutional action.

Five of the proposals were aimed explicitly at the problem of organized gambling and the final one suggests that regional accrediting associations strengthen general academic requirements to "avoid admitting students who are not qualified to realize the moral and intellectual goals of the institution."

Earey's Swimmers Begin Tough Training Program

By Ed Dupree

"Our goal is to build up strength in the muscles wihout losing flexibility. If this can be accomplished, then the boys are going to be much faster and stronger in the water."

This is the central idea in swimming coach Pat Earey's "dry" training program for the first month of practice. Earey plans to keep his swimmers out of the water for the first four weeks, concentrating on exercises, wall-pulleys, and weight-lifting.

He pointed out that many schools have used this system for a number of years with good results and that "strength continues to play a more important part in the development of a good swimmer."

"Our training program this year will be a little different than last season. Last year we stopped the heavy work when the season began, but this time we're going to continue the strength-building program until right before the big meets with Maryland and N. C. State."

Earey pointed out that repetition is the important factor in this program. The boys will work with 50- and 60-pound barbells, rather than the big weights.

"This program has proved to be most satisfactory in other sports," the youthful coach added, "and I think it's the best thing we can do."

Earey's "Blue Dolphins" don't open the season until December 1, when they swim against VMI, so they have almost seven weeks to prepare for a tough schedule which includes Maryland and N. C. State, the teams that shared the ACC championship with UNC last winter.

The Maryland swimmers are Earey's pick as the team to beat. "They're not quite as individually capable as State, but their depth makes them tough. State has six boys who are outstanding, but they don't have too much behind them."

In addition to the tri-championship last year, Earey has won ACC championships in 1958 and 1959. In 1960, he finished third, the only time in his four years at UNC that his swimmers weren't at the top of the league.

Missing from the tri-championship team are Vin Simonton, Harv Hamrick, and All-American Harry Bloom. Bloom was rated 4th in the nation in the free style and 11th in the butterfly.

"I think we'll be pretty well off in the distance events," Earey said as he began to talk about his team's chances for the coming season. "We'll have four juniors, Willie Bloom (Harry's brother), Art Merrill, Frank Lea, and Jon Weber, who are all good distance men."

"There are a few question marks at some key positions, but if one or two boys come along, we'll be in good shape."

One of the key points Earey is concerned with is the butterfly event, which was left vacant by Simonton's graduation. He named Sophomore Joe Mummaw and juniors Barry King and Harry Schiffman as the big men at this spot and added that "if they don't come through, we could be hurting at this position."

The loss of Bloom, an all-around performer who specialized in the freestyle, could be felt in the sprinting events. "Sprinting is a perennial problem. We need more sprinters than anything else."

Bob Bilbro, co-captain, and Howard Cone, Bryan Williams, Don Murray and Bill Wells are the men being counted on to take up the slack in these "speed events." Bilbro and Williams are seniors, Cone and Wells juniors, and Murray a promising sophomore.

Thompson Mann, a sophomore who finished fifth in the National AAU 100- and 200-yard backstroke events this summer, is an outstanding performer who should help tremendously. He broke several records during his freshman year and could compete in the individual medley if he is needed at that position.

Jim Huffman, a junior, is the other backstroker for UNC and co-captain Bob Briggs and Jim Bromwell should be the top men in the individual medley.

Briggs, Tom Cannon, a senior, and junior Pete Swift give Earey good strength at the breastroke position.

Earey feels that this season will be interesting, just to see how some of his question marks come along. "We have a good deal of depth and this will be a tremendous help to us," he added.

When asked to name the number one swimmer in the ACC for the coming season, Earey had his pick for each event. "I would have to chose Fogarasy of State in the breastroke, Spencer of State in the butterfly, and Mann in the backstroke. For the freestyle events, I rate Bilbro, Ostrander of Maryland, and State's McGinty about even."

Earey went back to his own team again to point out the importance of his two divers, Doug Fambrough and Sandy Patterson. These two boys took first and second in many of last year's meets and could prove to be the deciding factor in some of the big meets this year.

Ruffin Tops Mangum

Capitalizing on every break, Ruffin roared from behind in the second half Thursday to stun the previously unbeaten Mangum Mavericks with a 25-9 first-round upset. The Mavs had taken a 9-0 lead at the half, on a safety and a TD and PAT by Len Dellolio.

Joe Garner led the second half onslaught with two touchdowns. Walter Ward and Wommack White each added a TD to the Ruffin cause.

Winston marched with ease to its fourth straight victory, a 22-0 whitewashing of the Stacy Studs. Dick Blackmon had a TD and a safety, while Charlie Wright and Keith Wyke each scored 6-pointers.

Over in the grad division, the Med School topped the Law Blues by a 13-6 score. Jim Rose and Jim Williams scored TD's for the winners, Williams also picking up the PAT.

In the only other game, the Dental School whipped the Law Whites, 22-6. Killian scored two touchdowns and Tom Ward one for the Dentists. Martain Murphy made the PAT. Hal Redwine's TD accounted for the Whites' six points.

Aycock Calls End To Housing Jam, Three-Man Rooms

By Newt Smith

"Next year there will be no three-man rooms in the dormitories," Chancellor William Aycock said yesterday. The new dormitories will allow 60% of the student body to live in dorms and student housing without overcrowding," he said.

The new dormitories will provide 1,432 new spaces for men; however, the 400 spaces in Cobb will be converted to women's residence. The net increase of 1,032 will alleviate the overcrowded conditions in the men's dorms despite the expected enrollment of 9,500 for next year.

Although 4,500 qualified students were turned away from North Carolina schools this year because of inadequate dormitory facilities, UNC accepted all qualifed North Carolina applicants. Most of the rejected students had applied to private schools and only 1,500 applied to state-owned institutions.

15% Restriction

Chancellor Aycock said there were 600-1000 qualified out-of-state applications refused, but that this was due t othe 15% restriction and not because of dorm inadequacy. Trustees limit out-of-state students to 15% of the student body.

Chancellor Aycock said that there were approximately 4,600 students in the dormitories and 611 married students. He said that there were 600-700 extra men in the dormitories and approximately 70 women causing three-man rooms in all of the dorms but four. The official enrollment for this year is 9,082, a 4.2% increase over last year's 8,592.

The State Board of Higher Education reported that the minimum enrollment for 1969-70 would be 72,400: however, the present enrollment of the state is 1,000 short of this mark.

The Chancellor reported that UNC's estimated enrollment would be 13,000-16,000 for the same period. He said that 13,000 would probably be the correct approximation.

WCHL Starts Folk Bill At 4:30 P.M.

A radio show featuring student folksingers was initiated Thursday from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. on WCHL. M.C. Tom Gauger interviewed several campus performers and presented an informal program with solo and group singing.

Participating were Dan Brock and Stark Sutton. who did a version of the Irish classic "Bold Brennen on the Moor." Jeff Warner, son of noted folk singer and collector Frank Warner, sang "Wreck of the Old 97." Classical guitarist Doug Keeley gave Portuguese solo, "To Sleep Again" and Mark Sellers sang the comical Legger Lover and led the entire group into "Michael Row Your Boat Ashore" with the introduction on his Melodica.

Gauger has said he supports the campus folk revival and says he plans to use his program to further the group interests and the interest in folk music on the campus.

Future plans of the group, according to Mike Hall, the group's originator, include radio shows, local group sings and a concert in the Rendezvous Room in Graham Memorial.

4 From N.C. Accepted For Peace Corps

By The Drene

Four more North Carolinians have been selected to work with the Peace Corps in the Philippines and Sierra Leone.

John A. Green, 23, of Roxboro, has been accepted for the second group to be sent to the Philippines.

A previous group of 128 men and women successfully completed the training at Penn. State on Sept. 14 and will depart for the Philippines soon.

They will serve as teaching assistants in rural elementary schools, teaching English and general science.

B.S. This Year

Green received his B.S. in physical education from Appalachian State Teachers College, Boone, N. C., this year. During the last few summers he has been working as a "Water Front Director" for the Boy Scouts, and at college he was a physical education and swimming instructor.

Wallis U. Green, his wife, 22, also of Roxboro, is joining him on the Philippine project.

Mrs. Green received her A.B. in math education this year at UNC. She also studied for two years at the University of Utah, having attended high school in Utah.

Thomas C. Allen, 22, Leaksville, and Rex B. Jarrell Jr., 27, Durham, will be sent to Sierra Leone, a new African nation, as secondary school teachers.

Island Training

They began their training Oct. 10 at the Peace Corps Field Training Center in Puerto Rico and will finish Nov. 4.

Allen was graduated cum laude with a B.A. in biology this year from Johnson C. Smith University at Charlotte. He was president of the honor society and vice president of his sophomore class.

Doctor Examines Rayburn

DALLAS, Tex. — Another of the nation's top cancer specialists is scheduled to examine House Speaker Sam Rayburn, 79, Sunday to determine whether cancer-remission drugs are helping him.

The cancer will, in the end, kill Rayburn. But specialists hope that 5 fluoro-uracil and a derivative, FUDR, will slow the progress of the tumor enough for him to be returned to his Bonham, Tex., home to spend his last days.

His condition is about the same as it was. He is relatively comfortable and apparently fully recovered from a pneumonia attack Wednesday.

Police Check Lead In 2 Cobb Deaths

By Steve Vaughn

Chapel Hill police have gone out of town to check a new lead which may shed light on the Mike Barham-Bill Johnson death case, Asst. Chief Coy E. Durham said yesterday.

He would not say anything on the nature of the lead.

The department is conducting an investigation to find out how the two students received the fatal cynanide. Chief W. D. Blake has expressed belief that the case is a murder-suicide.

The case events up to now are as follows:

FRIDAY, Oct. 8—Barham and Johnson were found dead in their Cobb dormitory room by Robert Holt, janitor of that floor. Both were in "unnaturally straight" positions and bore traces of foam around their mouths. A coroner's jury ruled death by unknown causes and called for an autopsy.

Police obtained statements from nearby room residents and those persons who had last seen the decedents.

SATURDAY — Autopsy reports showed death caused by cynanide and chemical analyses were started on cups and food found in the room. Any connection between the two deaths and that of Robert Mauldin, four days earlier, was ruled out by the police. Rumors rampaged over the campus.

SUNDAY—Both boys were buried. Analyses were continued. Ralph Sargeant, junior, was arrested for possession of mercuric cyanide.

MONDAY—Cup analyses showed no trace of cyanide on them. Police interviewed 30-40 students trying to discover the boys' movements of Thursday night. Sargeant was cleared of connection with the deaths.

TUESDAY — Testimony by a chemistry student disclosed that Johnson had been seeking a "fast acting poison" the night before he and Barham were found dead.

The University pathologist on the case reported no cyanide present in the food found in the room.

WEDNESDAY THROUGH YESTERDAY—Police continued the investigation and began correlating the facts of the case.

Yesterday State Bureau of Investigation chemist William Best started an analysis of vomit found in the beds and on the floor of the dormitory room. The results will be out in several days, according to Best.

Meanwhile, the search goes on for facts that might bring forth a concrete explanation, but many doubt that anything but theories will turn up.

Score Twice With Maryland Fumbles

By Harry W. Lloyd
(Special To The DTH)

North Carolina turned rain-soaked Byrd Stadium into a muddy hell for ninth-ranked Maryland here Saturday, upsetting the favorite Terrapins by 14-8 before 23,000 surprised fans.

The Tar Heels scored twice in the third period on freak fumbling plays to take a 14-0 lead and then chalk up their second win in three games.

Left halfback Gib Carson, who smashed his way for 100 yards over the thick turf during the dreary afternoon, was the ball carrier on both of the scoring plays. Both times he fumbled into the end zone and both times a UNC teammate was there to recover.

Lenny Beck fell on the ball the first time after Carson fumbled from the one. This play occurred with 9:30 remaining in the third quarter. Four minutes later quarterback Ray Farris made another recovery for the second touchdown. Bob Elliot kicked both extra points.

The Tar Heels, with a slightly altered lineup, tore into the highly-ranked Terps early in the game, and gave an indication of things to come with their solid defensive work on the speedy Maryland halfbacks. The new faces in the Carolina lineup were halfback Roger Smith, tackle Vic Esposito, ends George Knox and Steve Yates.

The Terps were stopped for no gain on their first series. Carolina took over on their own 47 and began with Carson carrying four straight times. The march stalled on an incomplete pass and Farris pushed the Terps back with a punt.

Maryland then began a serious drive which was abruptly halted when Smith intercepted a pass by Shiner at the UNC 30. Farris kicked back to the Maryland 38. The Terps drove to midfield, but this march was ended by an interception made by John Flournoy.

The interception trick was pulled back on the Tar Heels on the next series as halfback Jim Davidson pulled off a Farris pass at the

SDX Leader Asks Stop Of U.S. Secrecy

MIAMI BEACH (UPI)—A professional journalistic organization yesterday called for 'the cloak of bureaucratic secrecy" to be removed from the country's foreign aid program.

V. M. Newton Jr., chairman of the freedom information committee of Sigma Delta Chi, made the statement in the federal government phase of his committee's annual report.

Newton recommended that President Kennedy give monthly speeches which "not only will tell the full and complete story of American foreign aid, but also will tell the story of freedom and what it means to man."

He noted a secret State Department report that U. S. prestige has declined around the world despite an outlay of approximately $75 billion in foreign aid. The report was widely publicized during last year's presidential campaign.

"Since the close of World War Two, Stalin, Khrushchev and other Russian leaders have made great propaganda gains in the cold war by their promises that communism is the answer to the world's undernourished."

"Not only have the American people been deprived of their rightful knowledge on the expenditures of their tax funds, but it is very apparent that our bureaucratic secrecy has barred knowledge of the United States foreign aid program from the distressed peoples of the world. Otherwise, American prestige would not have been on the decline in foreign lands."

Dentistry Head Painted Teeth On WW II Air Corps Plane

By Garry Southerland

Palladin and Matt Dillon cut notches on their guns, but Dr. Marvin E. Chapin, head of UNC's Department of Oral Surgery, painted teeth on the side of his fighter plane, "Pandemonium" for enemy missions during World War II.

With a military background, Dr. Chapin was commissioned as a Dental Officer in an Army General Hospital Unit. At that time there was no Air Force, only the Army Air Corps.

"People were pretty spastic during a period" he said. In 1941 there was a shortage of flying personnel. Most anyone who could get released from their present unit and pass the physical, could transfer to the Air Corps for pilot training.

"Flying seemed a better way to fight a war than wading through mud or sitting in a submarine," Dr. Chapin said.

Casual Approach

He seems to take the same casual approach to dentistry, but the results speak for themselves. After graduating from Loyola University School of Dentistry in Chicago, he took his internship at Boston's Forsythe Dental Infirmary for Children. He had a residency at Cook County Hospital in Chicago following this and taught at his alma mater for 18 months before going into private practice.

World War II intervened, and instead of pulling teeth, Dr. Chapin spent the next four years pulling a tour of duty as a fighter pilot.

Dr. Chapin first came to Carolina in May, 1952. He is now Head of the Dept. of Oral Surgery.

Though grades are helpful as an index of a student's progress, he feels that they can be even more of a stumbling block between instructor and student.

Difficult Job

"Clinic-wise, it's particularly difficult to determine the difference between an 85 and an 80 tooth extraction?"

The really important thing, Dr. Chapin feels, is to teach people to think. Then students know only "When," and "When Not" but "WHY!"

"The more a weapon a grade becomes," he says, "the less an individual will think.

"This is not TEACHING," Dr. Chapin exploded.

"Giving some meathead a list of facts he has to memorize, but if you've taught him to THINK—there's nothing more rewarding!"

State-Supported

Parents of North Carolina's college age students were no doubt alarmed to read in several newspapers yesterday that 4,500 qualified students were denied entrance to N. C. institutions of higher learning due to lack of dormitory space and inadequate teaching facilities.

Two-thirds of the rejections reported came from private institutions. The eight state-supported institutions in North Carolina rejected 1,500. Of these, most were out-of-state students.

UNC, for instance, accepted every in-state student who passed entrance exams and decided to enter, with the exception of approximately 40 students who applied after the deadline.

Some 200 "borderline" applicants —students who were barely qualified—changed their minds about entering after talking with University officials.

UNC managed to accept all these students not without some strain. Dorms and other facilities are crowded beyond their normal capacity.

But this is a situation which will not continue to exist. Next year promises to provide enough dormitory facilities to bring the load back to normal.

In fact, a higher percentage of students will be able to live in University housing than in recent years.

For the past few years, approximately 50 per cent of Carolina students have lived in University housing. Sororities and fraternities provide housing for 10 per cent. Commuters, day students and off-campus dwellers comprise the remainder.

Next year, the University will provide housing for an estimated 60 per cent of the enrollment.

Each year, UNC accepts 15 per cent of her enrollment from out-of-state. The figure will remain the same next year.

It is probable that Carolina will not have to reject qualified students in the foreseeable future. If need be, entrance requirements can be stiffened: A change that is a needed one anyway.

The number of drop-outs here for purely academic reasons is seven per cent. This means that there is probably room for a tightening-up of entrance requirements.

The number of students who drop out for academic reasons is probably much higher than seven per cent. Many students leave before their grades fall below the minimum.

Lopping off the bottom 10 per cent of applicants would not be unreasonable. A number of these students are unable to succeed academically.

The great danger that faces this University is not that it will fail to meet physical standards, but that it will fail to parallel physical growth with academic growth.

The administration is not unaware of this. The quality of entering freshmen classes has increased slightly for the past few years. The average college board score for this semester showed a gain of 23 points over last year—a slight change, but possibly a significant one.

At present, the average college board score at this University matches that of the colleges in the rest of the country, a fact that does not sound encouraging until we consider that many state-supported colleges do not use the college board index as an evaluation. Chancellor Aycock estimates that UNC would be well ahead of the national average if all schools used the test.

All this is encouraging. At the same time, we wonder if there is not much more cause for concern on the academic level than on the physical level.

UNC still operates ahead of "the other state universities," we are offering basically sound education. This may be true, but is it enough?

Is it enough to be adequate when we could be outstanding, and good when we could be great? With the help of the State Legislature and the people of North Carolina, the University has met the problem of physical drawbacks. We are almost out of the forest on that front.

Perhaps now the University can start considering the possibility of competing with some of the giants in education—maybe that there is no reason that Carolina should be intimidated by the bugaboo of believing that private institutions must necessarily have a great advantage over their state-supported counterparts.

But she is, and continues to be.

For how much longer is anybody's guess.

Jack Benny In 12th TV Season

By JACK GAVER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Comedian Jack Benny returns to start his 12th network TV season on CBS this week after a summer hiatus. He will appear weekly, as usual.

ABC will offer a musical special starring Jane Powell. The season's first "Hallmark Hall of Fame" on NBC will be a repeat of last season's "Macbeth." NBC also will have the fall's first "Purex Special for Women."

SUNDAY

NBC airs the NFL Baltimore-Chicago game.

ABC's "Bus Stop" offers "The Resurrection of Annie Ahearn." A young woman feels a supposedly strange town is familiar; a man is in prison for murder of a child who disappeared 12 years before.

Comedian Shelley Berman and Glynis Johns head the cast of "The $200 Parlay" on the CBS "General Electric Theater." An engaged couple is trapped while trying to return money "borrowed" from the office till.

Jack Benny's return to the CBS lineup will be with the assistance of Phil Silvers and singer Betty Johnson.

NBC's "DuPont Show of the Week" is a drama called "The Battle of the Paper Bullets," dealing with Nazi concentration camp inmates forced to work as counterfeiters. Frank Lovejoy, Cesar Romero, Jerry Lester and Russell Collins are some of the players.

MONDAY

"Modus Man" is the title of the episode on NBC's "87th Precinct." A different criminal's technique is used in each of a series of apparently related burglaries.

NBC's "Thriller" has "The Weird Tailor," dealing with a man's use of sorcery to revive his dead son.

ABC's "Ben Casey" deals with "The Insolent Heart," in which the doctor's old teacher faces heart surgery likely to prove fatal. Luther Adler is guest star.

TUESDAY

The drama on NBC's "The Dick Powell Show" is "John J. Diggs." Powell and Rhonda Fleming head the cast. A drifter's life is changed by an encounter with a fashionable widow, and he goes to the aid of a son he never knew at a critical point in the boy's life.

Comedian Don Knotts is guest star on Red Skelton's CBS program. He plays a western trouble-shooter called in to help Sheriff Deadeye catch a desperado. Charlton Heston heads the cast of "The Fugitive Eye," ABC's "Alcoa Premier." He plays a one-eyed carnival performer who finds a corpse in an auto and sees men digging a grave nearby. But when he gets back with the police, all evidence has disappeared.

WEDNESDAY

Jan Sterling is guest star on NBC's "Wagon Train" appearing in "The Selena Hartnell Story" as a bounty hunter seeking the arrest of a pacifist member of the train on a charge of murder.

Dan O'Herlihy, Phyllis Thaxter and Leo G. Carroll head the cast of "Bury Me Twice" on the CBS "U.S. Steel Hour." A man is suspected of having killed and buried his wife in the garden, but investigation turns up no evidence. Subsequent developments involve the husband with his wife's female cousin.

THURSDAY

"What's Wrong with Men?" is the title of the season's first new "Purex Special for Women" on NBC. James Daly stars in this dramatized documentary about the reasons for the deterioration of the masculine image and the increase in "passive males."

ABC has a musical special entitled "Featuretop." Story is based on a Nathaniel Hawthorn tale. Jane Powell, Hugh O'Brien, Hans Conried and Cathleen Nesbitt have the top roles. "The Real McCoys" and "My Three Sons" are preempted.

FRIDAY

The repeat of the "Hallmark Hall of Fame" filmed production of "Macbeth," starring Maurice Evans and Judith Anderson, is on NBC. "Robert Taylor's Detectives" and "The Bell Telephone Hour" are preempted.

"First Class Mouliak" is the episode on "Route 66" for CBS. The long friendship of two men is threatened by the discovery that their son and daughter have been seeing each other secretly and the girl is missing.

SATURDAY

The topic on the CBS "Accent" documentary is "The Rebellious Mind Behind the Iron Curtain." An examination of veiled political satire in Soviet satillites. Poet John Ciardi becomes permanent host of this program.

The ABC college football schedule, on a regional basis for this day, starts with Syracuse-Penn State. Tennessee-Alabama is telecast for the South and Southern California-California for the West Coast.

The Daily Tar Heel suggests that the House Committee on Un-American Activities is out to expose innocent individuals; that the Committee, and not those who appeal before it, is un-American; and that the Committee and Democracy cannot exist in the same society.

Innocent individuals? Do you remember Arthur A. Adams, J. Peters, Gerhart Eisler, Nathan Gregory Silvermaster, Harry Dexter White, William W. Remington, Alger Hiss and the Atom Bomb Spy ring at the University of California Radiation Laboratory? Do you remember those "innocent" individuals who were exposed by the Committee?

All of them claimed to be innocent and had a degree of Liberal support for their contentions. In addition to their espionage activities, they had another thing in common: all of them hated the House Committee on Un-American Activities and worked to abolish it. They were interested in destroying not only the Committee but the Nation and the system of government that sanctioned—and continues to sanction—the committee.

* * *

CAN THE HOUSE Committee on Un-American Activities and Democracy exist in the same society? I suggest to you that the House Committee on Un-American Activities has in impeding the work of individuals such as those mentioned above, assisted us in maintaining our representative government, as well as the freedoms provided by such government.

William F. Buckley Jr., the foremost Conservative spokesman, summed up the Liberal attitude in his book, "Up From Liberalism," when he said:

"What can one do to kindle in the Liberal bosom a spirit of antogonism toward the Communists equal in intensity to that which moved the Liberals to fight against Senator McCarthy? The horror of the philosophical postulates of Communism has not sufficed, nor the horror of Communism's historical record.

"A few years ago a witty observer indulged in a little wishful thinking. 'If only,' he said, 'Mao Tse-tung, back in 1946 or 1947, had criticized Margaret Truman's singing! China might have been saved!' We cannot, it seems, count on the evil in Communism to instill in us the will to fight back. Something else will have to furnish the impulse. Perhaps some day, in his cups, Nikita Khrushchev, moved to repay a long outstanding diplomatic courtesy, will sputter out, 'You know, I like old Joe McCarthy, that is.' Then will the Liberals mount their chargers, and join the fray, prepared to shed their blood to devastate the newly discovered enemy."

Fantasy Black Black; White White—Never The Twain To Meet

A fantasy-black is black and white is white and never the twain shall meet.

There was once a small black girl and a big white girl on a bus leaving from Washington, D. C.

Now this small black girl was with her big black grandmother with whom she was going to stay in Virginia for a year because her mother was sick back in Washington. And the big white girl was a college girl who had lived in Virginia all her life and who was coming from a visit in Boston.

They sat across from each other and strangely enough started to talk. Now the big white girl had always loved children, black or white, and always enjoyed talking to them.

And the little black girl had always liked friendly people, as most children do. So neither the big white girl or the little black girl thought that there was anything wrong with sitting by each other while the big white girl read a story to the little black girl.

Nor did the big white girl think that there was anything wrong with treating the little black girl to a coke when the bus stopped in Charlottesville at the same counter since there was only one.

But the big white girl soon found that there was something drastically wrong for she found people staring and the waitress was rude, not only to the big white girl, but to the little black girl when she asked the waitress for a glass of water after she had finished her coke.

NOW IT SEEMS that the big white girl should have realized that she was wrong to be seen in public with the little black girl and her big black grandmother, but because she was young and because she liked children, black or white, the big white girl continued to talk to them all the way to Lynchburg.

And since the big black grandmother had several bags, and the big white girl had checked hers, she offered to help the big black woman when they got off the bus at Lynchburg to change for Danville where they were both going.

Once again the big white girl realized that she was doing something wrong for she saw the bus driver stare at her and scurry off into the bus station even before he had finished helping all the people off the bus. And as they entered the station the big white girl saw the bus driver and the men behind the ticket counter nodding and looking in her direction.

So when the little black girl and her grandmother were settled, the big white girl retired to the counter marked WHITE, upon which she noticed that the big white men behind the ticket counter sighed with relief. And this could have been the end of the story had not the big black grandmother discovered that she had left her new white hat on the bus which had already left the station.

* * *

BUT SHE HAD, and when she asked the ticket-men if they could get it back and have it sent to her, they were not very definite in whether they could or would even try.

Now it seems that the big white girl overheard the conversation, and knowing Carl Jessup, the president of the company, asked the ticket-men if they couldn't try a little harder to get the hat back, which they did once they knew that the big white girl knew their boss.

And again this could have been the end of the story, except for the fact that the next bus driver, it seems, had heard something of the furor that the big white girl had caused and asked her if she were only going to Danville as her ticket said.

When she answered in the affirmative, the bus driver nodded somewhat in relief. Still he found it necessary to glance continually in the mirror from the big white girl to the big black grandmother and her little black granddaughter as they continued their journey. And when the little black girl and her big black grandmother got off the bus just outside of Danville where the grandmother lived and the big white girl once again helped them, the big white bus driver stood by with a look of disgust.

* * *

BUT THE LITTLE black girl didn't understand so she gave the big white girl a big kiss at which the big white bus driver gave a strangled sound of horror. And the big white girl got back on the bus and rode quietly to Danville.

Circus Comes To Town Monday

(According to reports as of press-time, "Operation Abolition" will be postponed. The film will be shown October 23.—Ed.)

"Operation Abolition," the House Un-American Activities Committee's filmed version of the 1960 San Francisco student "riots," will be shown in Memorial Hall Monday at 8:30 p.m.

Mike Harrington, one of the Committee's most articulate opponents, will be here to present his version of "It Ain't Necessarily So."

"I'm for the whole gallery—Communists, Fascists, Nazis, KKKers, Teamsters, Quakers — having the same civil rights," said Harrington during an "Operation Abolition" debate in August.

* * *

This will be Carolina's first glance at House Committee "truth," and it's long overdue encounter. For more than a year "Operation Abolition" has been touring the countryside, winning converts and enemies all the way. But the closest the film ever got to the knobby hill where the former Communist chief for the Carolinas—Junius Scales—graduated, was the Duke campus in Durham last spring.

Some UNC students saw the film in Durham, others have seen it at civic club meetings, church gatherings and open showings by "patriotic" societies.

The film was shown at this summer's National Student Congress, which was attended by seven UNC delegates. At the Congress Harrington debated Fulton "Buddy" Lewis III, who is the narrator for "Operation Abolition" and former HUAC staff member.

"The House Un-American Activities Committee demands ritual recantation" by accused Communists, said Harrington, editor of NEW AMERICA, the Socialist Party magazine, and a director of the Fund for the Republic.

"In Operation Abolition, the Communist is seen as a superman," said the Socialist leader. "San Francisco students are seen as unable to think for themselves, as being able to be led by a few 'hard core Reds'."

* * *

Harrington's statement contains the crux of the controversy over "Operation Abolition": were the hundreds of students in San Francisco "duped" by several "hard-core Communists," such as Archie Brown, Harry Bridges, Merle Brodsky, and Mickey Lima?

In the debate following the film Harrington will attempt to convince the audience that there are numerous major errors in the film and that, consequently, the situation which developed on "Black Friday" in San Francisco was neither Communist-caused nor directed.

Harrington's opponent (not chosen as of the writing of this column—probably "Buddy" Lewis, M. Stanton Evans, or Jessie Helms, all very able conservative speakers) will either gloss over or directly challenge the reputed errors in the film and attempt to convince his audience that Communists caused the "riot."

The film, 45 minutes long, opens upon a shot of a pamphlet, which the narrator (Lewis) tells the audience is only part of the Communist propaganda and subversion activities which culminated in the "riots." "A few well-trained hard-core Communist agents are able to incite . . ."

Thus begins HUAC's effort to smear the student demonstrations in San Francisco, using the familiar tactic that all opposition to HUAC is Communist-inspired or directed.

UN Signs Truce In Katanga

ELISABETHVILLE (UPI) — The United Nations signed a formal cease-fire agreement with Katanga President Moise Tshombe Friday night but Tshombe warned his people that "the war is not over."

Instead of celebrating the cease-fire the Katangese government decreed Saturday a day of national mourning for all victims of the U.N. attempt to return secessionist Katanga to the central Congolese government.

The signing of the agreement left the United Nations exactly where it was on Sept. 13 when the U.N. military operation against Katanga began.

The cease-fire was virtual recognition of Katanga's independence and it guaranteed that U.N. troops would not intervene if Katangese soldiers fought to repulse any military invasion.

Tshombe, at a moving ceremony attended by 2,000 persons, paid homage to the heroism of those killed in the U.N. fighting and delivered his warning.

It was not clear whether he meant new clashes could be expected with the U.N. forces or whether he was warning Leopoldville that any attacks on Katanga would be met by force.

The cease-fire appeared to be a major victory for Tshombe.

The 13-point agreement called for the exchange of prisoners taken by both sides during the military operations. The exchange of 191 U.N. soldiers held by the Katangese against some 200 Katangese prisoners in U.N. hands will take place Oct. 16. Their arms will not be returned.

The agreement provided for creation of three subcommissions of two officers from each side to supervise the truce.

The garrisons of each side would be allowed to reoccupy the positions they held before the cease-fire.

QUITS WHILE AHEAD

ALBANY, N. Y. (UPI)—John E. Datz, 82, of Valley Stream, N. Y., who has driven 56 years without an accident, decided to quit while he was ahead.

Datz wrote state Motor Vehicles Commissioner William S. Hults that he did not wish to further imperil his flawless record. He surrendered his driver's license voluntarily although it would have been good until Sept. 30, 1963.

Duke Default Gave UNC Art Museum

By Chuck Mooney

Carolina got Ackland Art Museum by Duke's default and a legal battle that reached up to the Supreme Court.

William Hayes Ackland, a wealthy Washington lawyer, (having no near relatives) set up a trust fund in 1936 to build an art museum at "some outstanding southern university."

He wrote letters to Duke, Carolina and Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla. asking each if they would like the museum. Duke and Rollins College both answered that they would love to have it.

Carolina answered by asking for a catalogue of the paintings and the size and type of the proposed building.

Ackland then decided that Rollins, a private, expensive school with an average of 400 students, was too small for the museum and Carolina was too particular.

Willed To Duke

He drew up a will in 1938 naming Duke as the recipient and stipulating that his body be interred in the museum. Ackland, 84,. died in 1940.

Duke refused to accept the museum when it learned that Ackland's body had to be buried in it.

Ackland's relatives, a collection of nephews and nieces, went to court sueing for the entire estate, $1,400,000. UNC with the aid of the O. Max Gardner law firm fought the suit up to the U. S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D. C. and won.

Next Rollins College started suit to have the museum built on their campus in Winter Park, Fla. Carolina and the O. Max Gardner law firm fought this case up to the U. S. Supreme Court, winning by a comparison of UNC and Rollins as prospective sites.

Ackland's Tomb

On the first floor of the building, located on Columbia St., is an 88-person auditorium, reading room, art library, study rooms, offices, three galleries and a memorial room with Ackland's tomb.

There are studios for sculpturing and a photo lab in the basement and classrooms on the second floor.

The galleries contain many fine paintings, statutes, tapestry and other objects d'art. The most famous is the Joseph Palmer Knapp exhibit.

It consists of 400-year-old wall panels and antique Chippendale furniture, paintings and figurines—was brought here from New York.

I Am The Green Traf Monster

Macmillan: We May Live With Long Struggle

BRIGHTON, England (UPI) — Prime Minister Harold Macmillan warned Saturday that the ideological struggle with the "strange and perverted creed of communism" may last for another generation, perhaps even longer.

"We could lose very quickly by a false step," he told a Conservative Party rally. "But to win will mean a long drawn-out effort waiting for the time when communism itself falls a victim to the spiritual forces which it despises."

He said the West must bide its time, hold its own positions and give time a chance to do its healing work on the Communist world. Then, he said, "Communist countries may begin to develop into more normal civilizations recovering a moral basis for their life."

Discussing a nuclear test ban, the Prime Minister said, "I still hope that the Russians may, in their own interests, be willing to accept something in the nature of a detente; that they may wish for a pause in this particular turn of the struggle."

"Berlin may provide the first real test of that," he said.

Addressing himself to the Western world, Macmillan said, "we must be calm and steady. But firmness does not mean obstinacy."

"We must not oscillate wildly from one extreme to the other—unilateralists one year, multilateralists the next; sometimes isolationist, sometimes internationalist, sometimes a bit of both," he said.

The remark about switching from unilateral nuclear disarmament to a multilateral policy was an obvious jibe at the opposition Labor Party. The Laborites this month dropped the unilateral "ban the bomb" policy they adopted last year.

In discussing his party's plans for the next decade, Macmillan hinted at retirement. "I cannot promise to be at the helm during all that time. For, like one of Shakespeare's characters, I do not intend 'to live after my flame lacks oil to be the snuff of younger spirits.' Certainly in our Conservative ranks there is no lack of younger spirits," he said.

West's London Meet Raises Crisis Issues

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Western Allies will be asking themselves some searching and crucial questions on the Berlin crisis in the next few weeks.

In strategy talks tentatively scheduled to begin Thursday in London, the United States, Britain, France and West Germany are expected to consider:

How much "give" there must be in the Soviet position before tht West would be willing to start negotiations. And on what specific points must this come.

Which points do the Western powers themselves consider might ultimately be negotiable. And which are absolute and beyond discussion.

General Terms

In the view of officials here, the West has operated all these months with a "Berlin position" worked out only in very general terms.

This has been partly because of strategy differences among the Allies. Partly also it is because West Germany has been going through national elections and still will not have a new government for a week or more.

The purpose of recent U.S. talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko was to try to see what kind of Berlin settlement the Kremlin has in mind.

But the talks made little progress in that direction. Gromyko stuck to what in diplomacy, as in any kind of horse trading, is called the "first bargaining position." He showed no clear glimpses of any position that the Russians could fall back on.

LLEWELLYN THOMPSON

Gromyko proposed:

Removal of U.S., British and French troops from West Berlin except for "token forces" and placing "token" Russian troops alongside them in the city. East Berlin, meanwhile, would remain exclusively Communist controlled.

Removal of nuclear weapons from West Germany, East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia, which U.S. experts feel would strike at the "defense of depth" of the Western alliance. This would leave the West a narrower military foothold in Europe but would not affect the depth of Communist forces.

Severing political ties between West Berlin and West Germany while leaving East Berlin the capital" of Communist East Germany.

Essence Of Position

Thus, the essence of the Soviet position still is to end Western control of West Berlin, to hit at the heart of the NATO alliance and thereby strengthen Russia's position in Europe.

To a major extent, U.S. officials believe, all the recent talk about Allied "access" to Berlin is still icing on the cake. Access is only meaningful to preserve the Western "presence" in West Berlin, and Russia is still challenging this very presence.

U.S. Ambassador Llewellyn E. Thompson is returning to Moscow Tuesday to continue the "sounding out" process where the recent Gromyko talks left off. But officials here believe that before Thompson can make the Kremlin be more specific, he must be armed with a more specific Western position himself.

This does not mean Thompson will "negotiate" with the Kremlin—his talks will still be only "exploratory." Nor does it mean the Allies in the next few weeks must commit themselves to final positions.

But as one official put it, "we can't discuss it in a vacuum."

'Sky Shield' Halts Airline Flights

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (UPI)—A calm fell over North America's great civilian airports Saturday while the skies high above thundered with one of the greatest military air exercises in history.

For 12 hours—from 1 p.m. to 1 a.m.—no U. S. or Canadian airliner, private plane, or non-essential military craft left the ground in civil aviation's longest flight suspension.

During that time, the North American Air Defense Command directed from its command post here Exercise Sky Shield II.

The exercise put into operation the two-nation command's vast apparatus for detecting and intercepting an enemy air atack and involved more than 200,000 military personnel from Alaska to the Gulf of Mexico, and nearly 3,000 military airplanes.

Sky Shield used more than 250 bombers from the U. S. Stategic Air Command SAC and the British Royal Air Force as an "attack force," and the fighters, missiles and electronic brains of Norad as the defenders.

But Gen. Laurence S. Kuter, Norad commander, emphasized here that the operation was "by no means a contest between offensive and defensive forces."

Kuter said the bombers presented themselves as targets repeatedly over crucial areas. The object was not for the Norad forces to "shoot down" the attackers, but to practice and train personnel in the use of the system.

Like Sky Shield I a year ago and other such operations, the exercise put into effect the U.S.-Canadian command's far-flung apparatus to detect and intercept enemy air attack.

But the grounding of civilian craft was twice as long as the six hours required for Sky Shield I. An estimated 3,000 American, Canadian and foreign airline flights, 70,000 other U.S. civilian craft, and hundreds of non-participating military planes were kept on the ground.

The main reason was that the "attack" forces' radar-jamming devices would have interferred with civil air navigation.

Flights Cancelled

The exercise extended out over the North Atlantic to disrupt some 20 transAtlantic airline flights. Officials in London said major airlines such as Pan American, Trans World Airways and the British Overseas Airways Corp. cancelled or rescheduled some 20 flights affecting up to 2,000 passengers.

Around 2,000 Norad fighter planes flew about 6,000 sorties against the attacking force, which converged on the northern continent through Norad's northern radar sentry fences and dense U.S. interlocking network.

Sprinkled among the B47 and B52 bombers from SAC were about 12 to 15 British Vulcan jet bombers of the RAF V-bomber force operating out of British bases.

Norad's 300 continental radar stations, its miles of land line communications, computers, and the electronic equipment packed into its combat operations center here were called into play.

The combat operations center issued bulletins every two hours on the progress of the exercise, but withheld specific details for security.

UNC Receives $10 Million

Over $10 million was received by the University in gifts, bequests, grants and contracts during the year ending June 30, 1961.

Total from gifts, grants and bequests was 3½ million for the period. Included in this figure are alumni contributions of over $450,000 from the eleven foundations aiding the schools of business, dentistry, journalism, law, medicine, pharmacy, library and other areas.

A total of $6,666,000 was received in grants for special scientific research.

Wake Forest Wins; Duke And State Defeated

Deacs Upset Clemson

Wake Forest's Demon Deacons finally penetrated the win column yesterday with a surprising 17-13 victory over the heavily-favored Clemson Tigers before 26,000 fans in Clemson.

The Tigers, two-touchdown favorites, scored first when quarterback Jim Parker connected with right end Tommy King with a 14-yard pass. Armstrong's kick was good and Clemson took a 7-0 lead. The scoring march was highlighted by Parker's 26-yard pass to halfback Elmo Lam to the Wake Forest 14.

The Deacons narrowed the gap to 7-3 before the half ended on a 27-yard field goal by Mickey Walker.

Bill Ruby hauled in a pass from Chuck Reilly in the third quarter for an 11-yard touchdown play which gave the Demon Deacs a lead they never relinquished. The two-point attempt was no good, so the Deacs held a 9-7 lead going into the final period.

The underdog Baptists struck again in the final stanza when halfback Alan White broke loose on a 59-yard scoring jaunt. Reilley hit Donnie Frederick in the end zone for the two-point conversion and Wake pushed their surprising lead to 17-7.

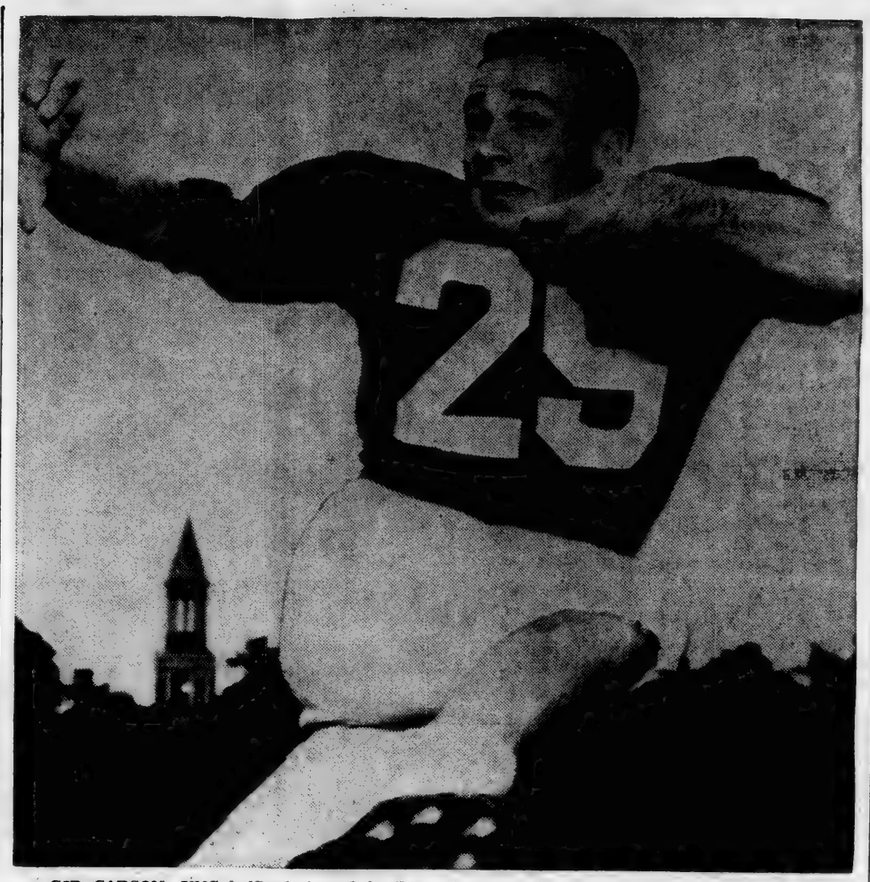
The Tigers took to the air in an attempt to overcome Wake's lead after Ron Scrudato's touchdown from two yards out had narrowed the score to 17-13, but the clock ran out on Frank Howard's men.

Score by periods:

Clemson	0	7	0	6	—13
Wake Forest	0	3	6	8	—17

Scoring: Clemson—King, 14, pass from Parker; Armstrong, kick. Wake Forest—Walker, 27; Ruby, 11, pass from Reilley, pass failed; White, 59, run, Frederick pass from Reilley. Clemson—Scrudato, 2, plunge, pass failed.

Attendance: 26,000.



GIB CARSON, UNC halfback turned in the best performance of his career yesterday in Carolina's 14-8 victory over the previously unbeaten Maryland Terrapins. The 5-11, 192-pound senior ground out 100 yards rushing to spark the Tar Heel offense and was the ball carrier on both scoring plays.

Georgia Tech Throttles Unbeaten Duke, 21-0

ATLANTA (UPI) — Quarterback Stan Gann brought Georgia Tech to life after a frustrating first half Saturday and the Yellow Jackets responded by routing the previously unbeaten Duke Blue Devils 21-0.

It was the biggest margin Georgia Tech has run up against Duke since 1955 and the sell-out crowd of more than 44,000 was screaming for the Jackets to pour it on even worse as time ran out.

Tech and Duke see-sawed back and forth in the first half with neither team threatening. But as the third period began the Jackets started to rall.

Halfback Chick Graning teamed with Gann to carry Tech 75 yards down the field and Gann went the final six yards on a trick bit of option running. During the drive, Gann passed for 37 yards and Graning, who caught one of the passes, ran for 15 more.

But it was still anybody's ball game going into the final period and it was then that the Yellow Jackets broke it wide open.

Halfback Joe Auer got Tech winging with a pass interception and four plays later Graning slashed over from four yards out with Tech's second touchdown. The next time Duke had the ball, Auer recovered a fumble to give the Jackets possession on the Duke 3-yard line. A 31-yard touchdown pass from Gann to Graning was called back because of clipping but Tech, with Gann getting off a slick nine-yard run and quarterback Billy Lothridge hitting two key passes, went on in with more than five minutes still left to play. Lothridge sneaked across from one yard out for the third and final touchdown and then added his third conversion of the day.

Going into Saturday's game, Duke, which had won three straight, was ranked 13th in the nation. Tech, which gained a 3-1 record Saturday was 14th this week after dropping third on a loss to LSU last Saturday.

Georgia Tech dominated the first half but, hampered by penalties, was never able to get within scoring distance of the Duke goal line.

Duke's only near score was an apparent safety when Graning fumbled a long Blue Devil punt and recovered it in his end zone. But Duke was called for illegal procedure on the play and its only chance for a score was lost.

Georgia Tech's defense was even more devastating than its offense. The Yellow Jackets held the Blue Devils to only five first downs and a total of 67 yards rushing and passing.

Score by periods:

Georgia Tech	0	0	7	14	—21
Duke	0	0	0	0	— 0

Scoring: Tech—Gann, 6, run; Lothridge, kick. Graning, 4, run; Lothridge, kick. Lothridge, 1, run. Lothridge, kick.

Attendance: 44-015.

LSU Mauls USC, 42-0

COLUMBIA, S. C. (UPI)—Chinese bandit tackle Bob Richards recovered stray pitchouts to set up two touchdowns Saturday as Louisiana State University scored in every period and routed South Carolina 42-0 before 28,000 fans.

Richards, a 217-pound senior from Oak Ridge, Tenn., recovered at the 12 to set up USU's first score and fell on a loose South Carolina pitchout at the one to set up the third. He recovered a third fumble at the Gamecock three but that play was nullified by a penalty.

In addition, Richards hit South Carolina quarterback Jim Costen for losses of four and 10 yards at times when the Gamecock passing attack was beginning to click.

ACTON, England (UPI)—Night watchman Andrew Carling, 24, grabbed a sabre Friday when five men broke into the sword factory where he works. The burglars parried neatly. They overpowered him, took his blade, bound and gagged him and emptied the safe.

'Bama 26 State 7

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (UPI)—Alabama's Pat Trammel outdueled the heralded Roman Gabriel of North Carolina State Saturday, passing for two touchdowns and a two-point conversion and running over a third six-pointer in a 26-7 victory for the fourth-ranked Crimson Tide.

In guiding Alabama to its fourth straight victory Trammell passed 12 yards to Dick Williamson for one score and two yards to end Bill Battle for a touchdown with less than four minutes of the first half left.

In the fourth period, the husky Crimson Tide quarterback swept left end for five yards and a touchdown, then passed to halfback Bill Oliver for two more points. Ed Versprille ran 45 yards for a third touchdown.

Gabriel, a constant threat with his short bullet passes, completed five in a row, then dove over from the one for the Wolfpack's only score. Jack Shaffer added the extra point.

As in past games, the defensive-minded Tide, which stymied all of State's efforts on the ground and limited Gabriel's passing effectiveness to short gains, struck swiftly and with little wasted effort.

With State holding a 7-0 lead, Ray Abruzzese returned a Dave Houtz punt 15 yards to the Wolfpack 39. Trammell ran once for five yards, passed to Williamson for 22 yards and again for 12 and a touchdown.

Within three minutes, Alabama was in front to stay. After State punted, Trammell passed 8 yards to Williamson to put the Crimson Tide on the State 21. Four plays later came the 2-yard touchdown pass to Battle.

North Carolina State was still in the running in the fourth period when Albruzzese returned another Houtz punt 27 yards to the State 19 in four plays. Trammell put the game away with his five-yard dash.

Versprille's 45-yard dash came as extra insurance with the game in its closing minutes.

Score by periods:

Alabama	0	12	0	14	—26
N. C. State	0	7	0	0	— 7

Scoring: NCS—Gabriel, 1, run, Shaffer, kick. Alabama—Williamson, 12, pass, kick failed; Battle, 2, pass, run failed; Trammell, 5, run, Oliver pass; Versprille, 45, run, run failed.

Attendance: 30,000.

Carolina Tops Terps

Maryland 36. The Tar Heels got possession again as Smith snatched the slippery pigskin out of the air at the NC 44. A penalty pushed the Hickey-men back to their 29 from which they began their longest sustained drive of the game. On the second play Farris passed 13 yards to end Steve Yates. A roughness penalty against Maryland resulted in a first down at the UNC 44. Another Farris-Yates pass carried for a first down at the Maryland 43.

On third down, Farris threw to Carson who couldn't hold on, but Yates caught the ball on the rebound at the 28. Carson gained 10 more yards in two plays. When the march stalled at the 14, with 4th down and six to go, Junior Eedge entered the game to attempt a field goal and try to break the scoring ice. It was the best scoring opportunity that either team had up to that point, but the kick, tried at an angle, was short.

A long pass play from third-team quarterback Cliff Nelton to end Gary Collins gave the Terps 26 yards and put them on the UNC 30. But two consecutive losses on fine defensive plays by Bob Lacey and Jim Lecompte held the home-towners short.

Maryland pulled two more interceptions before the end of the first half to keep the Tar Heels in check.

Smith returned the second half kickoff 30 yards to the 37, but the Tar Heels could only get to the 50 before being forced to punt.

Maryland took over at the 16 and didn't gain in two plays. On the third, halfback Dennis Condie carried into the center of the line and fumbled. Carolina center Joe Craver recovered at the 19.

From this point Carson carried five straight times. It was on the final try from the one-and-a-half that he fumbled and Beck recovered for the score. Both of these runs were slanted toward Maryland's left end Collins.

On the kickoff, Edge made a slip, which resulted in another big break for Carolina. The boot travelled only 14 yards, but Bob Lacey recovered for Carolina.

Farris kicked out on the Maryland 14. On the first play halfback Murnis Banner fumbled and halfback Lenny Beck recovered. Elliot hit the line three times and carried to the 8. On fourth down, Carson carried to the 1, fumbled, and the ball was recovered by Farris.

Maryland scord after recovering a fumble at the UNC 33. Novak passed to Collins at the 3 and Bob Burton plunged in for the score with 1:20 left in the third quarter. Collins took a pass from Novak for the two-point conversion.

The Tar Heels did a fine job on holding down the Maryland attack in the final quarter. At one point, midway the period, Terp center Bob Hacker blocked a punt to give them possession at the Carolina 40, but the hard-charging Carolina line held there and gave Farris a chance to punt out of difficulty.

Ranson's Runners Stomp Cavaliers

By Martin Kruming

Paced by the swift performances of senior flash Rhett Everett and the reliable harrier Jerry Stuver, Carolina's varsity cross-country squad trounced a considerably weak Virginia team 15-54 at Charlottesville on Friday afternoon.

From the crack of the starting gun North Carolina made it clearly evident that the race would be only a rough workout for the upcoming encounter with Maryland. At a little over the midway point of the four-mile course Everett pulled ahead of Stuver and wtnt on to win with a time of 19:42 as compared to his teammate's 20:21.

Carolina came across the finish line with Bob Bennett capturing the third position, Charlie Little and Carmine Lunetta tying for fourth in 21:53, and Charlie Trombe and Dave Brunson positiontd in the sixth spot with a respectable time of 22:00. As an interesting sidenote it should be said that Charlie Hodges, although not officially entered in the race, was clocked in a time that would have given him a seventh place finish.

Commenting on the Virginia meet, head coach Dale Ranson maintained that the course was characterized by hard pavement and a great deal of crushed stone. "Carolina likes the course and this is especially good since the ACC meet will be held at Virginia this season." Back in 1956 a Tar Heel sensation named Jim Beatty, the distance runner who went on to star in the United States Olympic team, set a conference course record at UVA with a time of 18:57. Although this record will probably stand for a long while, ACC runners will be shooting for it when the championships come into focus at the season's end.

Meet State Wednesday

Before the Tar Heels battle the Maryland Terrapins at College Park on October 21, they will engage State's Wolfpack on Wednesday at Raleigh. Coach Ranson predicts a relatively easy victory but the element of surprise is always an important one in sports. In this meet the main objective will be to bunch the runners in pretty close at the start since Coach Ranson believes that it is essential to group the men in pretty tight to have a good team.

Maryland, who bowed to Duke on Saturday, 25-45, will include all their runners from last year's strong squad. The Terrapin runners to watch are Harper, Garten, Wells, Krueger, and Smith. Maryland's course is a hilly one with part of it winding through the golf course.

Carolina's Ranson feels that the Tar Heels are in good condition and the upcoming meet on Saturday is the one which they have been pointing to all season.

As a preliminary to the varsity meet at Charlottesville, the freshman harriers eased past the Virginia squad, 23-36. Leading the victors was Dave Bradford with a time of 9:08.

Legislature Meets On $2,500 Bills

Student Legislature is being asked to appropriate a total of $2,436.50 divided among three bills to be considered Thursday night.

The biggest chunk of student government money, $2,024, would be used to print an additional 775 Yackety Yacks.

The printing of the books at $3.60 each, plus three per cent sales tax, plus $150 for photographic expenses totals $3,024 but the Athletic Assn. this year is paying $1,000 for its space in the yearbook.

A bill to appropriate $112.50 to provide University of Toronto exchange students with tickets to the L.S.U. football game was also introduced at the last session.

The money would be used to purchase 25 tickets at $4.50 each. For the past two years, the Athletic Assn. has provided complementary tickets for the game which the exchange students attended.

The sum of three hundred dollars is being asked to reimburse the Orientation Committee for a dance held this fall for the freshman classes of Carolina and Woman's College.

Originally, the Orientation Committee eliminated the provision from the budget request last spring because Orientation Week had been shortened. But upon the request of the Deans of Student Affairs of both schools, the dance was returned to the agenda.

The appropriation request was passed by the Summer School Student Government Board but was vetoed by President Hank Patterson because the money did not apply to Summer School students.

Other new legislation includes the consideration of the revised by-laws of the Publications Board.

Ike May State GOP Foreign Policy In N. J.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former President Eisenhower may set the Republican foreign policy line when he goes to bat for a GOP candidate in New Jersey Tuesday.

Informed sources expect the ex-President to speak his mind on the Berlin crisis and relations with Russia at a news conference set for Tuesday noon in Newark.

Some key Republicans hope the Eisenhower observations will clarify his party's position on supporting a "firm" Berlin stand by the Kennedy administration and on whether negotiating with the Kremlin smacks of "appeasement."

Eisenhower's main purpose is to help the gubernatorial campaign of his former labor secretary, James P. Mitchell. The former President will speak for Mitchell at a Newark luncheon following his news conference and at an evening rally in Jersey City's Journal Square.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Adlai E. Stevenson

"S. America Must Help Itself"

NEW YORK (UPI) — Adlai E. Stevenson said Monday Latin American governments must dedicate themselves to the principles of basic reform and self help if President Kennedy's alliance for progress is to bring real democracy to the continent.

The U. S. ambassador to the United Nations told the 17th annual general assembly of the Inter American Press Association that the United States will be a willing and eager partner to "all who practice these principles."

He said the U. S. government is keeping pace with its pledge to contribute more than $1 billion in the first year of the 10-year $20 billion economic development program. In the six months since President Kennedy proposed the alliance, the United States has made 82 loans totaling more than $700 million to 16 hemisphere countries, he said.

One More Week, Says U. S.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States will give Russia about one more week to agree on reasonable terms for appointment of an interim United Nations secretary general, official sources said Monday.

If there is no agreement by then, it was said, this country will urge the General Assembly to by-pass the Russian veto and appoint a temporary secretary general.

Officials here believe there is now adequate support from other U. N. members for this action.

Communist Congress To Hear Khrushchev

By Henry Shapiro

MOSCOW (UPI)—The 22nd congress of the Communist Party meets Tuesday in the modernistic glass and marble Kremlin Palace of Congresses to hear a marathon speech by Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev that could shape the cold war for years to come.

An anxious world awaited his views on Berlin and Germany, on Laos, the United Nations, nuclear testing and disarmament and the thousand and one issues that have plunged the world into its worst East-West crisis since the end of World War II.

N. Khrushchev | Chou En-lai | Janos Kadar

Communist Leaders

It was considered almost certain Khrushchev would review what the Communist Party considers its "historic mission"—the prevention of thermonuclear war and the promotion of peaceful co-existence. Accordingly, Khrushchev was expected to repeat Soviet readiness for a peaceful Berlin settlement and improved East-West relations.

In a separate report of the 4,354 delegates representing the leaders of world communism, Khrushchev later this week will unfold his vision of the "golden age of the Communist future" and his plans to turn Russia into a Utopia within 20 years.

Red "Summit" Conference

East-West negotiations aimed at easing the Berlin crisis were in a state of suspended animation waiting for his speech which is expected to last from six to eight hours and give the Soviet position on everything from nuclear warfare to consumer goods.

The party congress is the ultimate constitutional authority for the Communist world and has brought to Moscow such Communists as Premier Chou En-lai of Communist China, Walter Ulbricht of East Germany, Janos Kadar of Hungary and Ho Chi Minh of North Viet Nam.

Those Communist leaders are expected to hold a summit conference of their own during or just after the congress itself. That meeting may be of importance because the presence of Chou gave indication a reported split between Peiping and Moscow had been healed.

The Soviet Communist constitution calls for a party congress every four years though this was not always observed during the time of Josef Stalin. The last congress was in 1956 when Khrushchev emerged as the post-Stalinist leader.

One Year Delayed

That congress was notable because of Khrushchev's revision of Marxist doctrine establishing "peaceful co-existence," a non-violent transition from capitalism to socialism and the "non-inevitability" of war. Khrushchev at that meeting also began the downgrading of Stalin.

The congress was to have met last year but the meeting was postponed until this year to take up a five-point agenda.

They were Khrushchev's long report on the state of the Soviet Union, and the party since the 21st congress; a report by the Central Inspection Commission on Internal party affairs; Khrushchev's presentation of the new party program, the first since V. I. Lenin's in 1919; Secretary Frol Kozlov's introduction of revised party rules; and the election of Communist leaders.

The unofficials tentative schedule calls for the congress to open at 3 a.m. EDT in the Palace of Congresses to hear Khrushchev's welcoming remarks and to elect a presidium, the collective chairmen who alternate as chairmen. Then comes adoption of the five-point agenda followed by Khrushchev's speech. The speech is expected to start about 5 a.m. EDT and is expected to end after 11 a.m. EDT.

Khrushchev, who prepared his speech at his Black Sea resort, is expected to report progress on all fronts, particularly in the economic boasting of an 8 to 10 per cent annual growth and in the scientific unmatched Soviet cosmic exploits.

Taylor Gets Report Of Red Asian Gains

By Stewart Hensley

HONOLULU (UPI) — President Kennedy's special military advisor, Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, heard a grim report Monday of new Communist gains in Southeast Asia from America's top military man in the Pacific.

Taylor conferred here with Adm. Harry D. Felt, U. S. commander in chief in the Pacific, who had just returned from a survey of the critical area where the Reds are cracking out new advances in jungle warfare.

Aides said Felt gave Taylor specific details of Communst successes in Vietnam in recent weeks and the two officers then discussed the general military situation there and what could be done about it.

Felt brought back from his recent Saigon visit reports of bigger and bigger units of Communist troops involved in action against the government of President Ngo Dinh Diem. During his tour in Southeast Asia and upon his return to Hawaii, Felt several times referred publicly to the Vietnamese situation as "dangerous" and for the first time he referred to it as a full scale "war" instead of skirmishing.

Taylor leaves Monday for Saigon where he will try to determine what sort of "crash" program the United States can devise to halt the Communist advance against the embattled South Vietnam government.

GEN. M. D. TAYLOR

Taylor's decision may or may not involve the direct commitment of U .S. troops to South Vietnam, depending upon what he finds to be necessary to stabilize the situation.

The impression here was that Felt probably was resigned to the necessity of placing U. S. forces in South Vietnam, but this could not be confirmed. Taylor has said the possible dispatch of U. S. troops to the country as only one of a number of possibilities he is considering as he seeks a broad range of political, military and economic measures to help Diem.

Another possibility he and Felt were almost certain to discuss was the feasibility of getting Southeast Asia Treaty Organization troops to intervene in behalf of Diem. There also has been talk of turning Nationalist Chinese troops loose against Red forces in Vietnam.

Taylor expects also to survey the situation in Laos and Thailand and it probably will be at lest two weeks before he completes his mission.

YEMEN KING ABDICATES

The ruler of the isolated Red Sea kindgom spoke on Radio Sanaa. He asked the nation to obey the crown prince as king.

Reports from Yemen said the aged Imam's health was deteriorating and he intended to go to Italy for medical treatment.

Four Students At Conference On Union

Four delegates from Carolina attended the Twelth Annual Region IV Conference of the Association of College Unions at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville this weekend.

The delegates, Kate Oldham, Jim Cushion, Dan Moore, and Archie Copeland, are members of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Charles Pillans of the University of Florida presided over the largest delegation in the history of the conference. There were 187 delegates representing 29 colleges and universities in the south east.

Woman's College of the University of North Carolina has been chosen host school for the conference next year. Bev Crump of the University of Virginia was elected president of Region IV and the new vice president is Ronald Fleming of Tuskegee Institute, who narrowly defeated Carolina's Dan Moore for the position.

The delegates discussed various ways of "bridging the gap" ranging from the question of the "union's role in the education goals of the university" to the "union's role in the recreational life of the university."

No Ackland Competition Sought In Harry's Student Paintings

By Chuck Mooney

"We are not trying to compete with Ackland Art Museum; we just want to help the students," said Mrs. Mack, when asked about the paintings that line the walls of Harry's Restaurant.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Macklin started displaying paintings on their walls in 1954, when their shop was two doors farther up Franklin St.

Then their walls featured murals of Ramses, the Carolina Ram. "We had him going to college, going to a football game, celebrating the victory with a mug of beer and getting his diploma," said Mrs. Mack.

"Then some art students asked me if they could hang a couple of paintings on my walls, and I couldn't refuse.

"The customers liked it so much we got rid of the murals and featured student paintings.

"When we moved here we had to keep on. People liked the idea too much to let us quit," Mrs. Mack continued. "Harry and I like the idea, too.

"We'd love to display any student's paintings. If any one wants to buy one, we'll put them in touch with the artist.

"One of our paintings was done by a four-year-old. His father brought it in and said that 'it looked as good as some of the others.' "

HARRY, LE PATRON. This work of modern art by Jo Ann Denton is hanging on the walls of Harry's. The piece is up for sale and Harry, local patron of the arts, can refer prospective buyers to the painter. Mainly, Harry wants the artists to sell their paintings so they can pay their tabs. Jarrell Ceremony First CU Tribute

The tribute to WC's Poet-professor Randall Jarrell at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Hill Hall will be the first such recognition given by the CU as a whole.

At the ceremony, President Friday will speak for the CU and Paul Green, author of The Lost Colony, will speak for North Carolina writers. The main address will be delivered by Robert Penn Warren, Pulitzer Prize winning novelist and poet. His topic wil be Poetry and Our Moment.

This recognition for Jarrell originated with Lambert Davis, director of the University of North Carolina Press. The UNC Press is sponsoring the tribute with the Historical Book Club of North Carolina.

Davis was the publisher's editor when Harcourt Brace Co. published Jarrell's Blood For a Stranger. While at Harcourt Brace, Davis also worked with Warren on his novel All the King's Men.

Jarrell, who has been connected with WC's English department since 1947, won his National Book Award for "The Woman at the Washington Zoo," published in 1960.

Jarrell has recently translated Goethe's Faust and his next book will be A Sad Heart at the Super Market, a series of essays about popular culture, education and mass literature.

Jarrell gave a selection of his working notes, original drafts of poems and manuscripts to the WC Library.

According to Charles M. Adams, WC librarian, Jarrell said he never had any poetry published in student publications. Although he was editor of the Vanderbilt Masquerader in 1934-35 and did have poems in the American Review for May, 1934.

Jarrell has served as consultant in poetry and English to the Library of Congress and has taught at Sarah Lawrence College, Princeton, University of Illinois, and Kenyon College in Ohio. From 1942 to 1946 he served with the Army Air Force.

Russians Fire New Rocket

MOSCOW (UPI)—The Soviet Union has fired a multi-stage rocket more than 7,500 miles into the central Pacific, the official Tass news agency said Monday.

Tass said the rocket, the sixth in the current series of Russian tests in the Central Pacific, was fired Sunday from an undisclosed site in Russia.

The rocket's flight, it said "was strictly in accordance with the pre-set program."

Tass said the next to last stage of the giant rocket hit the Pacific "with great precision" at a point near the target.

The rocket launching came almost on the eve of the convening of the 22nd Soviet Communist Party Congress in Moscow. The congress opens Tuesday.

UP Supports Bond Issue

The University Party has joined the campaign for the passage of the Nov. 7 state bond issue.

The party will contribute writing materials to students from a booth in Y Court today through Friday so that they may write to their parents, relatives, and friends in the state to urge them to support the bond issue. Envelopes, stationery, stamps, and pens will be supplied from the booth.

The UP feels that personal correspondence between the student and voters in the state will be more effective than the mailing of literature by the party. The party has urged all students to take advantage of this opportunity to help the statewide campaign.

CU President William Friday has expressed his approval of the mailing service and feels that it is the best way to encourage citizens of the state to vote in favor of the issue.

Fraternity Government

On October 19, another round of discussion on the problem of establishing some new fraternity regulations will be held. Most of the discussion will center around regulations on coed visiting, drinking with women present, chaperones and other questions of fraternity supervision and control.

At present, fraternities are bound by a temporary agreement set up by the Inter-Fraternity Council and sanctioned, for the present, by the administration.

One of the major changes under the present agreement is the elimination of the section forbidding consumption of alcoholic beverages while women are present.

The administration is at last able, due to some changes in trustee policy, to officially recognize the old ruling as impractical and unenforceable.

The temporary agreement, which we hope will become a permanent one, is the first really concrete step toward a realistic policy concerning drinking.

In a broader perspective, the IFC-administrative talks could serve to eliminate fraternities from the list of problem areas and give the job of governing fraternities to the IFC, exactly where it belongs.

We don't think it is necessary or fitting to congratulate the IFC, as was suggested by Mike McClister in a letter not too long ago, for starting the job that it should have finished a long time ago.

But it is gratifying to acknowledge that this is what seems to be happening. The IFC is beginning to work on some of the real problems of fraternity government.

The outmoded supposition that each house has the ability to run its own affairs, with the IFC acting, in most cases, only as a figurehead is giving way to the image of a strong, centralized policy-making body.

Whether the steps already made by the IFC are the heralding of a new era remains to be seen. But one thing seems relatively certain. That is that the IFC is being put to a severe test, one that will dedetermine whether it can take hold and eliminate the need for outside interference, or so bungle the job that the administration will step in with more rulings of the "80 per cent" variety.

Most of the administrative control over fraternities stems from a fear—until this time a well-grounded one — that, given a completely free hand, the fraternity system would take no steps toward governing its own affairs.

Even now, it would be a mistake to assume that the IFC is suddenly going to have the final word on all fraternity questions. The administration seems to have no intention of giving the IFC more responsibility than is necessary for a test.

A final agreement on the new regulations is slated to be reached by November 1. The actual date will probably be later.

After this decision is made, perhaps further decisions will be handled by the IFC.

Complete and effective fraternity self-government has been a long time coming, and still has a long way to go.

But it is now at least a possibility.

Tickets For Toronto

A bill to be thrashed out on the floor of student legislature Thursday requests $112.50 to buy 25 tickets to the UNC-LSU game for the Toronto Exchange group which will be here the weekend of Nov. 11.

For the past two years, the Athletic Association has donated the tickets. This year, however, the Association will be "unable to do so," on the grounds that a limited number of complimentary tickets are available, under agreement with LSU.

We've heard flimsy excuses, but this one from the Athletic Association is about as strong as wet tissue paper.

If the stumbling block to giving away 25 tickets is an agreement with LSU, why not give that school their share of the profit on the tickets, with this sum appropriated by student legislature, if necessary. The sum would be considerably less than $112.50.

We are sorry to hear that the Athletic Association is so short on funds that the cost of 25 tickets is prohibitive.

Perhaps the Association is foundering on the rocks of bankruptcy.

There are only 44,000 seats in Kenan Stadium. If the Association gave away 25 of them, it might mean that an alumni might be deprived of plunking down $4.50.

And, after all, the only reason we have a football team is to make money, isn't it?

Carolina Theatre Integrated?

To the Editor:

I am the mother of two small children, ages eight and three years, and the wife of a full-time student at the University of North Carolina.

The Carolina Cinema here in Chapel Hill adopted a policy in August that applies only to Negro students in the University; that is, these students will be admitted to the theater upon presenting identification cards at the ticket window.

On Thursday, September 21, I took my son and daughter to the Carolina Theater to see "The Trapp Family," a story they had followed and talked of extensively at home. They didn't get to see the film for we were informed at the ticket window the children of Negro students were not welcomed.

* * *

MY CHILDREN are being oriented to the United States for the first time in their young life and it is unbearable for me to see them refused entrance to one of the only two cinemas in this University town simply because of the color of our skin. The children were disappointed, and I was furious, at being refused entry to this movie.

On Friday evening, Sept. 22, I went back to the Carolina with friends and was sold a ticket without showing any identification.

With the exisiting policy the Carolina Cinema is still more segregat- than integrated.

"If You Don't Like This Situation, You Can Cast Your Twentieth Of A Vote Against It"

Slow Reader May Mean Deep Thinker

By LESLIE J. NASON, Ed.D.
Professor of Education
University of Southern California

If you're a slow reader, there must be a reason. Perhaps you are a deep thinker. More likely you're a deep sleeper who does not really concentrate on what you're reading. You doze between the lines when you should be devouring pages.

It takes about one-third of your thinking power to read the words of a book or an article.

What do you to with the other two-thirds of that power?

* * *

HERE ARE some typical answers from slow readers who were asked: "What do you think about when you read?"

"I always have music on the FM when I read."

"I look for mistakes in grammar or spelling."

"I argue with the author and wish I could tell him what I think about his subject."

"If it's a story I sometimes think about something that happened to me. Before long I'm not even reading."

Now let's consider how you should use your spare thinking power when you read.

You should be using that spare power to read with a purpose. Read to find out something.

* * *

WHEN YOU PICK up a whodunit, you don't often concern yourself with the author's style or necessarily with the number of murders. What you want to know is:

"Who was the murdered—the butler, the chauffeur, the upstairs maid or the disinherited son-in-law?" You probably read such a story very rapidly, noting the clues as you see them and hoping that you'll find out who is the Bad Guy before the author tells you.

This does not constitute an endorsement of whodunits. But this is an example of purposeful reading—reading to find out something.

* * *

STUDY-READING for school subjects demands a plan which will help you read for understanding. Here are the steps of such a plan:

1. Before you start to read, check through the book's table of contents; look at the chapter headings; scan the chapter summaries. You can tell from these some of the things the author will be discussing.

2. With these ideas in mind, read each chapter rapidly, searching for key expressions and a general understanding of what has been said in the chapter.

3. At the conclusion of each section, ask yourself: "What did the author say?" "How does this fit into the general pattern of the book?"

4. You can't answer these questions? Then your trobule is in the way you are reading. You are probably reading too slowly. Too Slowly? That's right. You're reading with such slowness that your mind has a lot of time to wander. Read faster, faster. Increase your reading speed until you're reading so fast you're thinking of nothing but what you're reading.

5. Now re-read. This time look for precise meanings. Each example ought to be connected in your mind with some key idea about which you're reading. This will help impress the key ideas in your memory.

THESE KEY IDEAS will become storage bins in your memory for groups of facts and illustrations.

In your review for tests, return again and again to these key ideas and their collection of related facts. In so doing you will be building up a storehouse of information.

This storehouse will become your rounded-out understanding of what you have read.

You will have built up a bank of knowledge and will draw freely when the time comes to write a final examination.

Conservative Thinks HUAC Serves Legitimate Purpose

October 5, 1961

Editor:

Lest anyone be misled, cases before the Supreme Court are decided by majority, not by dissent. Strong dissenting opinions have been recorded in many cases involving all branches of the law. The members of the Supreme Court, just as you and I, have different opinions on HUAC. Fortunately for me and my Conservative colleagues, the majority of the Supreme Court believes that HUAC is serving a legitimate purpose.

* * *

I POINTED out in an earlier letter that it is the responsibility of HUAC to seek and receive public information upon which to base legislative recommendations. Your editorial implies that HUAC is a sinister group, seeking only to expose and ruin innocent individuals. The Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress conducted a research study which disclosed the following legislative recommendations by HUAC:

1. Legislation to bring about the immediate mandatory deportation of alien spies and saboteurs.

2. Legislation to outlaw every political organization which is shown to be under the control of a foreign government.

3. Legislation to stop all immigration from foreign countries that refuse to accept the return of their nationals found under American law to be deportable from this country.

4. Added legislation to place restrictions on the distribution of totalitarian propaganda, when that distribution involves any cost to the American taxpayers, and when such propaganda emanates and is shipped from foreign sources.

5. Legislation to restrict the benefit of certain tax-exemption privileges now extended to a number of Communist fronts posing as educational, charitable and relief groups."

* * * *

HUAC WAS primarily responsible for the enactment of the internal Security Act of 1950, the Communist Control Act of 1954 and various provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952.

"Is the Committee fair to those who come before it? Any witness may consult his lawyer whenever he so desires during the course of a hearing, and submit any statement he wishes. Before a scheduled hearing, the witness may confer with the Committee in confidence. If any citizen feels he has been in any manner wronged, he can demand and get a public hearing in which to state his case."

* * *

DOES HUAC have "reason to believe" a person is a Communist when such person apears before the Committee? Your editorial implied that HUAC snatched up anyone it chose to investigate, brought him to "trial" and "exposed" him.

The fact is that the FBI gives HUAC names of Communists and persons who have had extensive associations with Communists. It is believed that the FBI has evidence on these persons but that it is evidence which was obtained by wiretapping and illegal search and seizure. Such evidence cannot be used in a court of law.

Thus, the FBI will have tape-recordings of conversations which prove conclusively that these persons are Communists. Since such evidence is inadmissable in a federal court, the FBI gives it to HUAC. HUAC, knowing a person to be a Communist, conducts an investigation, hoping to gain information which will enable the Committee to recommend appropriate legislation to Congress.

MOST OF THOSE who are called before the Committee are Communists and know that HUAC knows of their activities. The result is a clamoring for freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of this and feedom of that—the very freedoms which they as Communists would destroy.

They go to the extremes of refusing to tell their names, their addresses, the names of their parents, whether or not they are married and their ages, claiming the privilege granted by the 5th Amendment. They claim that to tell their names would be self-incrimination.

Their purpose is to abolish HUAC. It is unfortunate that so many Americans, led by a few ultra-Liberals, put down their beers and wipe their eyes and rush off to help them.

Reflections

One thousand Nigerian university students have demanded that American Peace Corpsmen be deported, and its difficult to argue with them.

"Everyone but us" lives in squalor, the female Peace Corps postcard-writer(who began the trouble by writing offensive statements in a postcard to an American friend) proclaims, yet she is complaining.

The United States government went to great pains to warn all Peace Corps volunteers that they would be greeted by squalor in the underveloped nations to which they were sent. It would be a terrible blow to the new stage of American foreign policy if one luxury-fed girl should bring disgrace to the whole Corps program.

We Afraid Of Losing Face Now?

Why do we have to insist on freedom and be afraid of losing our faces at the time we are at the brink of annihilation of the whole civilization of the entire world? Aren't the matters of freedom or losing face luxurious concerns of people who are pretty sure that their civilization is securely protected? Isn't the preservation of exisiting civilizations of the world the first and the most crucial problem to be discussed?

'Freedom or death' must be regarded as the jargon of fanatics when whole world faces the danger of eternal distrucction.

* * *

THE STRIFE between so-called free countries and so-called communistic countries threatens the dissolution of man's coping with nature, man's control over nature. Selfish desire for preservation of this freedom and for extension of a certain doctrine brought out this dangerous situation.

The civilizations of the world belong to all human beings who have ever exisited on this earth and to the people who will exisit in the future. But the desires to preserve or extend our freedom or our own doctrine are our own interests in the limited lengths of the generations. My question is whether it is worth endangering the property that belongs to the eternal past and to the eternal future only because of our petty selfish desires.

THE WORST KIND of blame that we may get in the future will be that we were the generation which destroyed the civilization which had been achieved by our ancestors' priceless efforts and energy, which had been handed down to us to preserve, to improve and to bestow to posterity. Comparing with this blame, isn't this the best adminration we can possibly receive that we are the people who were courageous enough to risk even our freedom which we deemed more precious than anything else to preserve the legacy of human wisdom to the future for its better use?

". . . The risks inherent in disarmament pale in comparison to the risks inherent in an unlimited arms race. . . " said President Kennedy when he addressed the sixteenth session of the United Nations General Assembly.

* * *

CERTAINLY THIS is not the time to worry about the matters of losing or gaining face. One would lose his face by merely being known that he is worrying about such a trivial thing at a time of the greatest danger.

Which is more important either our freedom or preservation of civilization? We must realize that the contemporary idea of freedom was mainly moulded by people who did not know the possibility of a danger like we are facing today. We must develop the idea of freedom to cope with the unprecedented situations.

Shall we destroy this civilization by sticking to a outmoded selfish desire to be free or shall we preserve civilization even at the risk of our freedom?

If we really believe in the right-cousness and in the final victory of Freedom, and if Freedom occupies such an essential part of human nature that one generation is about to trade it with annihilated civilizations of the entire world, we ought to be able to sacrifice our own selfish desires to preserve the civilization from which real unselfish Freedom will arise with a greater strength in the future by its nature.

Therefore, in every respect we must wholly support and push forward the disarmament policy of President Kennedy, remembering that our Father will help us only when we are courageous enough to cast away our pride, our weapons and our vain desires, and to give ourselves humbly under Him through sincere prayers for His mercy upon us.

Reporter Visits Tribe Of Congolese Natives

(EDITOR'S NOTE: UPI correspondent Peter Lynch paid another visit Monday to the camp outside Elisabethville where some 35,000 Baluba tribesmen live in fear and squalor. Here is his account.)

By Peter Lynch

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo (UPI)—A Baluba tribal leader and a gang of young toughs escorted me past a sea of black faces shouting "death to the white man." They showed me the bodies of nine Balubas preserved in ice in a shallow trench.

The "ice box" is located inside the sprawling Baluba refugee camp near Elisabethville where thousands of tribesmen hostile to Katanga President Moise Tshombe have taken refuge.

The bodies, swathed mummy-style in blankets lay in the trench and were covered with huge ice blocks. French ice is brought in every day.

Baluba leader Bauze Dekeres charged the nine tribe members—eight men and a woman—were killed by United Nations Swedish troops who opened fire on the camp with automatic weapons 11 days ago in retaliation for an attack the Balubakat youth movement on a Swedish sergeant.

Dekeres, the president-general of showed me the bodies. He said they were being preserved as "proof" the natives were killed by U.N. soldiers.

It was a mile-long walk through the center of the refugee camp crowded with shantles made of grass sod, pieces of cardboard and sacks and bags. The walk seemed much longer.

Surrounded by a protective squad of youth movement guards, we marched past a sea of hostile faces. The anti-white feelings bore into your back.

"If you didn't have the youth guards with you, you would be dead long ago, white man," shouted a native.

Near Baluba youth headquarters, a gang of some 70 toughs began screaming for an attack on "the white man who has killed Balubas."

Youth Army Chief Monga Hydlebert detached himself from the group. Swinging his baton hewn from a tree branch, he shouted back to the menacing crowd that I was an American journalist—not a Belgian, not from the United Nations.

The procession halted at the trench, where Dekeres removed ing from Swahili into English, Deksome branches to reveal the bodies.

Through an interpreter translateres read a manifesto scribbled on a writing pad. It said the Baluba would not leave the camp until President Tshombe was deposed by

"It will be certain death for the Congolese central government. us to return to the communes" Dekeres said. He charged that Tshombe has armed other tribes with rifles so they can shoot all Baluba as soon as they return to their home areas.

"The Balubas are not a truculent people," he said. "We only attack when we are attacked but everyone, including the United Nations, is against us," he said.

Dekeres said the youth movement, which claims 40,000 members in South Katanga, has weapons and is ready to fight if the United Nations tries to clear out the camp. He said his group does not recognize the peace treaty signed Friday between Tshombe and the United Nations.

After we looked at the bodies, the youth squad escorted us from the camp. Again came shouts of "death to the white man." A Swedish U.N. truck roared up. A Swedish officer with a submachine gun leaped out and hurried us aboard.

"You got out alive this time," the Swede said. "Next time you may not be so lucky."

Allied Differences Cancel Thompson's Moscow Return

By ROBERT BARRDOLL

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Allied differences over Berlin talks with Russia forced postponement Monday of Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson's return to Moscow and cancellation of a Western Big Four meeting in London.

At the heart of the dispute was French President Charles de Gaulle's insistence that even exploratory talks with the Soviets would be premature now. He wants some sign of Russian concessions before going to the conference table.

On the other hand, the United States and Britain favor going ahead with exploratory discussions —such as the recent Kennedy-Gromyko talk—to see if some basis can be reached for East-West negotiations later on the Berlin crisis.

Confronted by this split, Thompson postponed his departure for Moscow to attend Allied strategy talks at the State Department. He hoped to get a clearer picture of just where the West stands on the question of further discussions with the Soviets.

Thompson originally was scheduled to return to Moscow before the opening Tuesday of Russia's 22nd Communist Party congress, and then try again to sound out the Soviets on possible Berlin solutions.

The State Department said the ambassador now may stay in Washington for at least the rest of this week. But department press officer Lincoln White also said Thompson was expected to go ahead with his "exploratory" talks after reaching the Soviet capital.

Whatever form the Allied talks take, their purpose will be to work out a more detailed Western position, including a decision on just what points are negotiable in the Berlin crisis and which are not.

Reds Halt Workmen

BERLIN (UPI)—Communist East German police Monday turned back a West Berlin work crew sent out to cross one mile of Soviet Zone territory to build a street in the isolated U. S. sector enclave of Steinstuecken.

The new road was to replace one cut off by Communist barbed wire that barred direct access of Steinstuecken housewives to the Red-surrounded community's only grocery. The housewives now have to walk across fields and through woods to get to the store.

There was speculation that American authorities might airlift the six workmen by helicopter. U.S. officials previously had used helicopters to fly out East German refugees who managed to slip through the barbed wire into Steinstuecken.

NEW FACE, SAME SPORTING HEART

We might as well tell you straight off: Corvair's the car for the driving enthusiast. Think that lets you out? Maybe. Maybe not.

Until you've driven one, you really can't say for sure, because Corvair's kind of driving is like no other in the land. The amazing air-cooled rear engine sees to that. You swing around curves that is you please, in complete control. You whip through the sticky spots other cars should keep out of in the first place. (Especially this year, now that you can get Positraction as an extra-cost option.) You stop smoothly, levelly with Corvair's beautifully balanced, bigger brakes.

And Corvair's found other new ways to please you this year. A forced-air heater and defroster are standard equipment on all coupes, sedans and both Monza and 700 Station Wagons. So are dual sunshades and front-door armrests and some other goodies. You'll note some new styling, inside and out. Nice. And safety-belt installation is easier, too, and cheaper. Another extra-cost option well worth considering is the heavy-duty front and rear suspension; it turns a Corvair into a real tiger.

So you can see we haven't really done much to Corvair this year. Why on earth should we? If this car, just as she is, can't make a driving enthusiast out of you, better take a cab.

CHEVROLET
A New World of Worth

And here's America's only thoroughbred sports car, the '62 CORVETTE. We warn you: If you drive a Corvette after your first sampling of a Corvair, you may well end up a two-car man. And who could blame you?

West Chester Nips Booters By 2-0

Tar Heels Lose Second Match After Scoreless First Half

North Carolina's soccer team held the powerful West Chester, Pennslyvania, Rams to a first half scoreless tie here Monday before bowing to the visitors by 2-0.

The Tar Heels stuck with the Rams until center forward Don Williams scored on a head shot with 11 minutes to go in the third quarter. Joe Brownholtz got an assist with his boot from the corner.

Griffith's play at goalie was outstanding. He was credited with 35 saves against the ball-controlling visitors and his only mistake was the fourth period fumble which resulted in the second tally for West Chester.

West Chester's brilliant ball-control was a deciding factor in the match. The Rams monopolized the ball with their kicking and perfect passes which kept the Blue and White on the defense for most of the game.

The lineups:

UNC		West Chester

Bordogna	LFB	Bievenour
Kenrick	RFB	Yeagley

Red Umbrellas In The Crowd

Umbrellas went up all over the stadium long before the game was scheduled to begin. There were a few black ones, some blue ones, and some with multicolored patterns. But most of the umbrellas were red. Football followers from the University of Maryland, where everything not red is usually annihilated, had come to see their powerful football team operate. But despite the color, the umbrellas were to be a necessity. Rain began to fall at noon, and rain didn't stop falling until long after the game was over.

However, the fans weren't the only people with umbrellas in their hands. The Federal Aviation Agency had put their own kind of umbrella over the sky, and although it didn't keep the rain from coming down, it kept the airplanes from going up.

Someone else, too, had a umbrella. This was North Carolina coach Jim Hickey. Hickey's umbrella wasn't in his hands, where it would keep the rain away. It was on the field, where it trapped Maryland's highly-touted team and kept it away from the goal. Hickey and his assistants devised a new defense for the Terrapins. On the information in the scouting report supplied by Coach Vito Ragazzo, he worked up a new pattern for his linebackers to follow. On occasions, a drop fell through this umbrella. But on the whole, it was quite effective.

New Defense Does Trick

Hickey gave credit to more than his new defense for whipping the Terps. He wouldn't single out any individuals, but was quick to praise the efforts of the team as a whole. "We just played hard football," he explained, as if it were that simple. "The team was completely different from the one that lost to Clemson last week. I can't explain the difference. You try to build them up for every game, but one week they will respond, and another they won't."

The differences in the team were quite evident, no matter where they came from. Roger Smith, in his first starting role at halfback, intercepted a pair of passes, was a threat as a receiver, and played a fine game as a defensive back and blocker. George Knox, a senior who was once a fullback, started his first game at end. Knox made some vital tackles, including one of the most important of the game when he stopped a Maryland ball carrier short of a first down on a fourth down situation. Vic Esposito and Bob Lacey, probably the most promising sophomores, played like veterans.

Gib Carson, who had another great running day, gained 100 yards and outperformed the entire Maryland backfield. Jimmy Addison, his counterpart, hit hard for a 180-pounder, and was hard to bring down.

Team Play Makes Difference

Ray Farris came through with the right play at the right time. He was alert to recover a fumble and score what proved to be the winning touchdown. He picked up a fumble of his own on a fourth down punt and ran it back for a first down. He got off some fine kicks that kept the Terps back in their own mud hole. Above all, he called a fine game that kept the Marylanders second guessing and making defensive mistakes.

All of the line hit hard. Joe Craver and Jim LeCompte were bruising tacklers. Tony Hennessey kept the Terps honest. Jack Tillery, in a starting position at guard, was his old self at cracking holes in the opponent's line and dogging its passer.

Need we say that the Tar Heels won the ball game? The score of 14-8 did not really indicate how much the Tar Heels outplayed the Terps, who saw their winning streak broken.

PIERTRANGELI LEADS ITALY OVER U. S. DAVIS CUPPERS

ROME (UPI)—Italy, led by Nicola Pietrangeli, defeated the United States in the inter-zone Davis Cup tennis finale Monday and won the right to meet defending Australia in the challenge round for the second year in a row.

The 28-year-old Pietrangeli, Europe's leading amateur player, clinched the inter-zone final for Italy in the first of the two concluding singles matches, defeating Jon Douglas of Santa Monica, Calif., 9-7, 6-3, 6-2.

That gave Italy an insurmountable 3-1 lead and Fausto Gardini made the final score 4-1 when he beat Whitney Reed of Alameda, Calif., 3-6, 7-5, 3-6, 8-6, 6-4, in the final match.

It marked the second straight year that Italy eliminated the U. S. in their inter-zone final. Until last year, Italy never had played in the challenge round. The U. S. had played in 17 consecutive challenge rounds between 1937 and 1959.

David Freed, the non-playing captain of the U. S. team, summed up the inter-zone final when he said:

"We got off to a wonderful start and then, boom."

The 25-year-old Douglas had given the U. S. a 1-0 lead when he came from behind after losing the first two sets to beat Gardini. Then the 29-year-old Reed won the first two sets from Pietrangeli and was trailing 3-4 when darkness halted play Friday.

When play was resumed Saturday the Italian star came from behind to win and Italy then took the lead Sunday when its doubles team of Pietrangeli and Orlando Sirola defeated Reed and Don Dell.

Warren, Jarrell Appear Tonight

Robert Penn Warren Jr. speaks at Hill Hall tonight at 8 at a Literary Recognition Convention in honor of North Carolina poet Randall Jarrell.

Warren will speak on "Poetry and Our Moment."

The convocation, open to the public, is being sponsored by the UNC Press in association with the Historical Book Club of North Carolina.

Both Warren and arrell are noted authors of verse and prose. Randall Jarrell, currently a professor at Woman's College, Greensboro, is the 1961 winner of the National Book Award for Poetry, awarded to him for his collection of verse entitled "The Woman at the Washington Zoo." Warren has been awarded Pulitzer Prizes twice, once in 1946 for his novel, "All the Kings Men," and again in 1958 for his collection of verse entitled "Promises: Poems 1953 to 1956."

Lambert Davis

Lambert Davis, director of the UNC Press, will preside at the convocation. Paul Green, well-known North Carolina playwright and winner of the Pulitzer Prize for Drama, 1927, and Consolidated University President William C. Friday will pay tributes to Jarrell.

From 1956-58, Jarrell served as the Consultant in Poetry in English for the Library of Congress. He was elected to membership in the literary department of the National Institute of Arts and Letters in 1960.

Jarrell has received numerous awards for his verse. He has recently translated Goethe's "Faust," which will be published soon. His next book will be "A Sad Heart at the Super Market," a series of essays about popular culture, education, and mass literature in general.

Returned From Europe

Warren has just returned from Europe to his home in Connecticut. His convocation address will be his first major appearance since his return. Warren's next book, to be published in November, is a Civil War novel entitled, "Wilderness."

KONRAD ADENAUER

Adenauer To Retire Before Next Election

BONN (UPI)—Aging Chancellor Konrad Adenauer announced Tuesday he will retire before the end of the next four-year legislative period.

Adenauer, 85, disclosed his intention just before parliament opened a new session and thus assured his re-election by the Bundestag lower house to a fourth term as chancellor.

Adenauer has served as chancellor since 1949, when the first West German government was formed. It appeared his likely successor would be Economics Minister and Vice Chancellor Ludwig Erhard.

The chancellor's Christian Democratic party lost its absolute parliamentary majority in the Sept. 17 elections. It since has negotiated a coalition with the balance-of-power Free Democrats.

Free Democratic party leader Erich Mende has said he will join Adenauer in a coalition provided the chancellor agreed to step down after a set time.

Vietnamese DemandArms Withdrawal

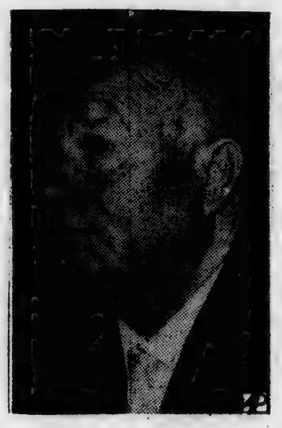
TOKYO (UPI) — Communist North Viet Nam Tuesday accused the United States of "intervention" in South Viet Nam and demanded the immediate withdrawal of all American military personnel and equipment from the country.

The Communist demand came while President Kennedy's special military adviser, Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, was flying to South Viet Nam to survey the situation and recommend measures to cope with the increasing Red menace there. He is expected to arrive in Saigon Wednesday after a brief stopover in the Phillippines.

Two Convicted By IDC Forced To Move Room

In the two cases considered by the Inter-Dormitory Council Court last week both defendants were sentenced to immediate transfer from their original dormitories to others for at least one semester.

The charges against these defendants were disorderly conduct and abuse of social room privileges and destruction of dorm property, respectively.



NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV

K Offers To Erase Treaty Deadline

(United Press International)

MOSCOW — Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev offered Tuesday to withdraw his year-end deadline for a peace treaty with East Germany on condition the Allies showed "readiness" to negotiate .Then he said Russia would explode a 50 megaton bomb—the biggest in history—On Oct. 30 or 31.

Khrushchev told 4,799 delegates to the 22nd Communist Party Congress in a six hour and 20 minute Kremlin speech that President Kennedy and other Western leaders in preliminary talks appeared ready to settle the Berlin crisis on a "mutually acceptable basis."

"If the Western powers show readiness to settle the German problem," he said, ". . . then we shall not insist on signing of the peace treaty before Dec. 31, 1961." But he repeated his demands for a "free demilitarized West Berlin."

Khrushchev said the Soviet Union would end its nuclear test series at the end of the month by exploding a 50-megaton bomb—equal to 50 million tons of TNT and 2,500 times bigger than the one that incinerated Hiroshima. He said Russia had perfected a 100-megaton bomb but "God grant that we never have to explode it because we might then blow in our windows."

Reaction Cautiously Optimistic

The first world reaction to Khrushchev's statements on Berlin and Germany was one of extremely cautious optimism. The United States withheld comment. British Foreign Secretary Lord Home said he was encouraged. West Germany said he had said the same thing before. France observed tartly that Khrushchev now apparently prefers negotiations in order to obtain his objectives.

Khrushchev made only passing reference to Soviet space achievements but said Russia had an arsenal of intercontonental missiles, anti-aircraft rockets for the land, sea and air forces, and a fleet of nuclear submarines armed with ballistic and homing rockets.

He repeated his demand for a three-man "troika" secretariat to run the United Nations, insisted that Communist China be admitted with two Germanies—East and West—to repair the U.N. machinery he said had grown rusty in the cold war years and was operating fitfully.

He denounced the Albanian Communist party, bringing the Soviet feud with Albania into the open for the first time, and said it was trying to draw back into the Stalin era. He dismissed Yugoslavia as having been led into a bog of revisionism by its leaders. Neither country was represented at this congress.

Four From UNC Join Peace Corps Study

The Peace Corps will be studied by UNC representatives at a regional conference in Washington, D. C. this weekend. Student Body President Bill Harriss and four other students, faculty and administration members will attend from Carolina.

Recently the Corps has been a subject of considerable controversy in Nigeria, West Africa, where 1,000 Nigerian college students demanded that Peace Corpsmen be deported. The trouble resulted from an "insulting" letter written by a female Corps member.

In addition to Harriss, the following persons from UNC will attend the conference: Anne Queen, YWCA director; Prof. James Blackman, representing the faculty; Jim Wagner, chairman of the campus Peace Corps group; and Both Warren and Jarrell are notmember.

The conference will bring together "leaders of business, farm, labor, civic, professional and educational groups who have indicated an interest in the Peace Corps," said Dean of Students Charles Henderson.

Nigerians Urged Not To Condemn Peace Corps

LAOS, Nigeria (UPI)—The government, newspapers and a student organization Tuesday urged Nigerians not to condemn the U.S. Peace Corps because of one "irresponsible" act.

The reaction was to the furor touched off by a Peace Corps volunteer, Margery Michelmore, 23, who referred to the "primitive living conditions" in this Negro republic on a postcard to a friend back home.

Miss Michelmore, of Foxboro, Mass., has apologized and offered to resign. But officials involved adopted a "go slow" policy on the question of her resignation and return to the United States.

Miss Michelmore's postcard was intercepted, reproduced and distributed among Nigerian students at the university in Ibadan where she was in training for service as a school teacher here.

Demand Corps' Ouster

The students demonstrated and demanded the expulsion of the entire 40-member Peace Corps contingent.

Reports from Ibadan Tuesday said the students who circulated the copies will be "disciplined." There was no elaboration.

A government spokesman said that while it was "perfectly right that the students . . . should be incensed and indignant, the views expressed are not shared by other members of the Peace Corps."

"The friendly and cordial relations between Nigeria and the U.S.A.," he said, "must not be jeouardized or affected by the foolish writings of one irresponsible student."

Appeals To Students

The university's Student Christian Movement also urged the student body "not to be hostile" to Peace Corps members who are studying for volunteer services throughout Nigeria.

"Miss Michelmore must not be taken as the voice of America," the movement said. "It is the sin of an individual person, and is a symptom of racial sin which dictates the attitude of the white races of the world toward the black races."

Newspapers also called for calm and restraint.

White House Begs Khrush Hold Bomb

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The White House Tuesday night appealed to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev not to go through with his announced plan to explode a 50-megaton nuclear bomb late this month.

A White House statement said the United States has had the technical know-how since 1957 to produce bombs in the 50 to 100 megaton range—equal to 50 million to 100 million tons of TNT.

Exploding such a bomb by the Soviet Union "could only serve some unconfessed political purpose," the statements said.

"We call upon the Soviet Union to reconsider this decision, if in fact it has been made," the statements said. Khrushchev told the 22nd Communist Party Congress in Moscow Tuesday that Russia would conclude its current test series wit ha 50 megaton explosion.

The White House said people throughout the world would join the United States in asking Russia not to go ahead with such a test.

Testing the giant nuclear weapon would add "a mass of additional radioactive fallout to that wihch has been unleashed in recent weeks," the statement said.

A 50 megaton detonation would be the largest known man-made explosion in history and would mean that the current Russian test series would dump more radioactive fallout on mankind than any previous series.

"We know about high-yield weapons," the White House said. "But we also know that such weapons are not essential to our military needs."

Anti-Gaullists Attack Moslems

ORAN, Algeria — A mob of Europeans, chanting the battle cry of the anti-Gaullist rightwing French extremists, rampaged against Moslems in this tense port city of western Algeria Tuesday.

Early reports said at least three Moslems were killed by the mob. Police said at least two Arabs were severely injured.

Violence erupted after European youths returned from the funeral of a French victim of last week's clashes between Europeans and Moslems.

The mob, estimated at about 1,000, stormed through the streets chanting the "Algerie Francaise."

Not Responsible For Plane Deal, Says Ike

NEWARK, N. J.—Former President Eisenhower said Tuesday the Kennedy administration made the decision to sell 130 jet fighters to Yugoslavia. But the White House replied that this was merely a continuation of Eisenhower administration policy.

Pierre Salinger, President Kennedy's press secretary, said in Washington that more than 500 U. S. military aircraft were given or sold to Yugoslavia during the years Eisenhower was in office.

Eisenhower was asked about his role in the controversial transaction because of Washington reports Monday that he had given Kennedy a specific explanation of the sale just before turning over office last January.

The former President told a news conference here: "I did not brief President Kennedy." He emphasized the word "not."

Nikita Boasts Of USSR Output Increase

MOSCOW—Premier Nikita Khrushchev said Tuesday agricultural output in the Soviet Union had increased 43 per cent in the past five years but he acknowledged the country still had shortages of some products, particularly meat.

Khrushchev told the 22nd Communist Congress that measures adopted by the party early in 1961 to increase output of farm products have not had their "full impact" but he predicted that agricultural output would show a "steep rise" before long.

The premier said the growth rate of agriculture was still lower than that of industrial production and still does not meet the growing requirements of the population.

Pi Kappa Phi Wins National Honors

UNC's Pi Kappa Phi was the recent recipient of two national awards, according to chapter historian Ernest Stepp.

The Housen Chapter Achievement Award, which is presented annually by the national office, was given to the house on the basis of their marked improvement in membership, scholarship, alumni relations, publications, and physical improvements of the grounds.

Also awarded was the Master Chapter Certificate, given to the top ten chapters as judged by the national office.

In addition, the chapter won the local Inter-Fraternity Scholarship Trophy for having improved their scholastic standing from 23rd to 14th out of a total of 24 campus social fraternities. The honor is based on the spring standing of 1961 as compared to 1960.

Air Cadet Rooney Makes Solo Flight

Cadet Capt. Michael J. Rooney, AFROTC, became the first cadet in the Flying Instruction Program at UNC to make a solo flight. Cadet Rooney made his successful 25 minute solo flight on Oct. 11 after six hours and ten minutes of dual flight training.

Cadet Rooney is one of six participating in the Flight Instruction Program this year. This program consists of 36½ hours of flight training and 35 hours of ground school. The flight training is conducted by a Federal Aeronautics Administration approved civilian flying school operator under contract with UNC and the Air Force.

Students in the Infirmary Tuesday were: Mrs. Linda Little, Carol King, Lucy Elem, Mary Johnson, Bonnie Barefoot, James Yount, William Marslender, Ray Lowry, Maxwell Holder, Allan Ostergren, Harold Cody, Dean Eidson, William Hancock, John Kloninger, David Clowell, Hugh Webster, Paul Barefoot, Bill Kohn, Clayton Smith, Barrie Postnoy, Fred Burney, Henry Anderson, and Frank Hill.

Guitarist Montoya Enjoys Performing Before Students

By Nancy Barr and Chuck Mooney

"Students are the hardest people in the world to play for, but the warmest if they like you," Carlos Montoya said yesterday, sitting on the front porch of the Carolina Inn with his wife.

"He feels that if students like you," Mrs. Montoya added, "you'll be a success anywhere."

Montoya, the first flamenco guitarist to experiment with concert solos, demonstrated his talent to UNC students last night in Memorial Hall.

"When I play, I don't see the people. I see only my guitar," Montoya said in a rich Spanish accent. "I play what I feel. Classical guitar is like one, two, three. You can't improvise on it."

"Not As Mechanical"

Mrs. Montoya explained that he likes the freedom of flamenco music because it is not as mechanical as classical guitar music. "He likes classical music," she said, "but it's not his cup of tea. He doesn't read music, he improvises from his mind."

"Flamenco is for all," he said. "When you play for a dance, you make more noise, more rhythm. For a concert you play softer," he added, gesturing with his long, sensitive fingers.

Montoya, who is presently on a North American tour before heading for Europe and his native Spain, has played flamenco all over the world. "When people ask me where he has played," Mrs. Montoya said, "I tell them 'ask me where he hasn't?'" In his travels Mr. Montoya has missed only South Africa and Australia, she explained.

Played In Moscow

"He's even played in Moscow," she said. "It was in 1934 during Stalin's peak." Mr. Montoya said he saw only the hotel and the theatre. "He had a shadow," she added.

"Russian and Spanish music are at odds," she said, "but he was well received."

Montoya, who said his favorite country other than Spain was the U.S., expressed amazement at the interest in the flamenco music in the United States. "One New York boy taught himself to play flamenco from listening to my records," he said, explaining that the boy came backstage to play for him. "Students here are very talented for non-Spaniards," he said.

"Dear Bobbo . . ."

Postcard Postscript

We don't know what the Nigerian rate for postcards to the U. S. is, but Margery Michelmore got her money's worth.

She, in fact, probably got a lot more than she bargained for—as did the United States, the Peace Corps and everyone else concerned.

Seldom have 158 innocently-intended words had such repercussions.

The U. S. received a diplomatic slap in the face, the Peace Corps received a serious setback and Margery will probably receive a ticket back home.

On top of all this, Margery's stateside beau, Robert V. Storer (Bobbo), didn't even get the card. We assume he did read about it in the papers, however, so all was not lost.

All things considered, it was a monumental effect to be wrought by a postcard. Of course, not everyone manages to pack 158 words onto a single postcard.

Perhaps the Peace Corps would have done better to have sent the literary young lady to surroundings more conducive to her particular bent. Her talents would perhaps have been more effectively utilized in describing wonders of East 52nd Street in Ne wYork City, for instance.

Or, if her flair for art parallels her flair for letters, perhaps she could have done portraits of the Cherokee Indians right here in our own state.

Or maybe she could have stayed home and taken up knitting, which might have been the most practical approach.

Actually, the fault for the unfortunate postcard does not lie any more with Miss Michelmore than with anyone else.

She went into Algeria unprepared for what she would find. The realization that all will not be roses for the Peace Corpsman has not yet been completely formulated. Nor does it seem to have been clear that the mere ability to cope with physical discomfort will not be enough.

Whether President Kennedy intended it to be or not, the Peace Corps delegate is a junior diplomat. Everything that he or she does falls under close and often highly critical scrutiny.

The reaction of many underdeveloped countries to the "assistance" of the Peace Corps is going to be similar to that of Nigeria. There is a basic distrust of wealthy countries like the U. S. among poorer countries. Many, like Nigeria, will see Peace Corps members as "agents of imperialism." That period in history which saw nations piously shouldering "the white man's burden" is not so far in the past that the nations of the world have forgotten it, or forgotten to distrust moves which, on the surface, appear similar.

So long as the Peace Corps is exclusively made up of Americans acting as delegates of the United States government, the similarity will exist. The image of the United States as a benevolent, protective and democratic nation is not so widely entertained abroad as Americans would like to think.

Communist propaganda is partly responsible for this, as is the attitude of many an American tourist who visits a foreign country exuding an air of condescension.

Carrying the American flag into underdeveloped countries is not a stated aim of the Peace Corps. Yet, in effect, this is what Peace Corpsmen will do. And in many countries, that flag is not completely trusted.

How can this disadvantage be offset?

One of the obvious things is the elimination of persons who will be shocked, dismayed, or even disgruntled at what they will find in some of the countries they visit. This is a difficult if not impossible task, but one which seems necessary.

Another, and more drastic approach, is to eliminate the United States version of the Peace Corps entirely, in favor of cooperation in a UN Peace Corps.

This would eliminate the detrimental effect of entering a country as representatives only of the U. S. The neutral flag of the UN would no doubt be a more welcome sight to small, underdeveloped nations which distrust the wealth and power of the United States. The fear of imperialistic overtures would be eliminated, making way for a friendlier and more effective relationship.

The idea of having agents of a powerful foreign country teaching, leading, and working on important projects is understandably awesome to tiny nations who fear foreign domination above all else.

The U. S. Ambassador to the UN, Adlai Stevenson, proposed a UN Peace Corps some time ago. As yet, nothing concrete has materialized from the proposal.

But it is still a possibility, and one which looks considerably more attractive after Miss Michelmore's fiasco in Nigeria.

We hope it will be attractive enough to the U. S. to have it pushed through by our officials.

Reflections on the "squalor" of the underdeveloped country might be less offensive on UN stationery than on a postcord to the boy back home.

Berlin: Spirit, Symbol Of Freedom

Since Berlin became the capital of the German Empire in 1871 in the time of Bismarck and Machtpolitik, it has been in the news. It was the instrument panel of German conquest for over eleven years out of a total of thirty-one in the first half of this glorious century.

Its importance to the German people has always been immense; its power has been felt and feared by most countries of the world.

Now Berlin is again on its knees, this time perhaps mortally wounded, not levelled by untold tons of bombs but caught in the death grip of an unprecedented situation, victim of a Twentieth Century diplomatic and psychological phenomenon known as "cold warfare."

Yet Berlin is ironically symbol and spirit of the very essence of freedom. Though powerless as never before, this city may be for the third time the firing pin of a world war, as paradoxical as it may seem.

* * *

EVERYONE who listens to newscasts is fairly well acquainted with the Berlin situation and its implications on the international scene. Amid the current jammer and clamor, one finds the direct antecedents can be traced to the Haval River city of Potsdam in 1945.

One hears numerous suggestions at solutions from all quarters, none of which seems to get to the heart of the matter. There appears to be nothing to do except to sit in fear and trembling and wait for things to go from worse to worst. But why write any more about it?

Perhaps it's to keep from screaming or, worse still, from crying. Writing is more easily reconsidereed than suicide. And why go to the trouble and mess involved in the latter? "There's still time brother."

This Writer's point is vague with no apologies, but so, too, is our century. The impending world destruction has been in the cards for a long time. Man has not dealt himself a losing hand in this game of the atom; he seems only to lack the ability to turn it into a winner. It is twilight, 1961, but there may be time yet before it gets too dark . . .

* * *

ONE STEP IN a new decade has been climbed or . . . descended, almost two. The "Frantic Fifties" are a matter of history; but their spirit lives on, embodied in the tensity of human affairs of which the many rocket-powered knitting needles now attempting to sew the universe together are but a symbol. At no time this side of Eden has man been at peace with his fellows. But now things are getting serious; peace is not only highly desirable; it is absolutely imperative.

The last half of a scientifically fantastic century has already been underway for ten years. The "Age of the Atom" is rapidly metamorphosing into the era of outer space. The world is becoming more and more mechanized, systematized, organized and, concurrently, alien to the most elementary considerations of humanity.

The century that began ostensibly with more promise for the future than any other may paradoxically cancel "future" as an earthly reality.

"Future" is an all-to-hastily constructed raft tossing on the oceans of international tension, trying to ride out tropical storm "Emotion" whose winds are approaching hurricane velocity.

* * *

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY has injected into its very life's blood a disease in which the afflicted experiences a process known as "atom-splitting." This malady offers man an easy way out of this whole hodgepodge, if he is not careful. Man has come of age insofar as science, mechanization and the like are concerned. Psychological and humanitarian adulthood is lacking however. For this lack man can find no substitute capable of combating the evils of the affliction and bringing beneficial elements to the fore. Ironically, not even the same sciences that have brought man to such a peak of materialistic civilization can produce the needed synthetic.

* * *

WE MUST RECOGNIZE ourselves as our own worst enemy. In the same way that the Curies have taught to protect ourselves from atomic radiation, so must we learn from Nagasaki and Hiroshima what this precarious situation means from a human standpoint.

If mankind realizes in time that the individual human being is our main concern above all others, then will there be no more need to fear the destructive might of the atom. There will be instead a genuine opportunity to utilize the unparalleled gift that we have presented ourselves. Experiment in the laboratory or in outer space!

This writer is neither pacificist nor idealist; he would, however, absolutely and unbendingly favor an active, positive reconsideration of humanity and an elevation of the human being to a respectable position in the world.

If the foregoing verbal concoction makes little or sense at all, it is no great wonder; emotionality is neither controlled by the rules of good composition nor the applied laws of physical science. It is uncontrollable as radioactive fallout and just as dangerous. It could develop at any time a short-circuit while purely mechanical guidance systems remain in perfect working order. This means . . . well . . .?

Turn to same page, same paper the next time the respective Berlin polizei forces start shooting at each other. There may still be time for a line or two of "I told you so's."

Huxley Appraises 'Brave New World' In Light Of Today

The horror novelized in 1931 with the writing of Brave New World may actually be upon us within a century, predicts the book's 67-year-old author, Aldous Huxley, in an undated, fairly recent revision of the book's foreword as published in paperback form by Bantam Book, Inc.

Taking the sexual promiscuity aspect of the book as an example, Huxley writes: "There are already certain American cities in which the number of divorces is equal to the number or marriages. In a few years, no doubt, marriage licenses will be sold like dog licenses, good for a period of twelve months, with no law against changing dogs or keeping more than one animal at a time."

* * *

HUXLEY ADMITS his prediction may be inaccurate, pointing out that "we are in the first phase of what is perhaps the penultimate revolution. Its next phase may be atomc warfare, in which case we do not have to bother with prophecies about the future."

But he also admits to a certain measure of optimism concerning the survival of humanity, noting that "it is conceivable that we may have enough sense, if not to stop fighting altogether, at least to behave as rationally as did our eighteenth-century ancestors," who, he writes, learned a lesson from the horrors of the Thirty Years War and modified their militarism.

"Assuming, then, that we are capable of learning as much from Hiroshima as our forefathers learned from Magdeburg, we may look forward to a period, not indeed of peace, but of limited and only partially ruinous warfare. During that period it may assumed that nuclear energy will be harnessed to industrial uses.

* * *

"The result, pretty obviously, will be a series of economic and social changes unprecedented in rapidity and completeness. All the exisiting patterns of human life will be disrupted and new patterns will have to be improvised to conform with the nonhuman fact of atomic power.

"Procrustes in modern dress, the nuclear scientist will prepare the bed on which mankind must lie; and if mankind doesn't fit—well, that will be just too bad for mankind. There will have to be some stretching and a bit of amputations—the same sort of stretching and amputations as have been going on ever since applied science really got into its stride, only this time they will be a good deal more drastic than in the past.

* * *

HOW DRASTIC? Very, he says: "These far from painless operations will be directed by highly centralized totalitarian governments. Inevitably so; for the immediate future is likely to resemble the immediate past, and in the immediate past rapid technological changes, taking place in a mass-producing economy and among a population predominantly propertyless, have always tended to produce economic and social confusion.

"To deal with confusion, power has been centralized and government control increased. It is probable that all the world's governments will be more or less completely totalitarian even before the harnessing of atomic energy; that they will be totalitarian during and after the harnessing seems almost certain. Only a large-scale popular movement toward decentralization and self-help can arrest the present tendency toward statism.

"At present there is no sign that such a movement will take place."

Russians Are Optimistic

Mr. Roberts has attended San Diego State College, Georgetown University, and Indiana University. It was at Indiana this past summer that he took concentrated Russian courses in preparation for a 32 day trip to Finland and Russia. Helped by a government fellowship he visited Helsinki, Leningrad, Moscow, Stalingrad, Rostov, and Kiev and thus returned with a considerable understanding of the Russians—their aspirations, their shortcomings, and their conception of man's place in society.)

* * *

The people of Russia today are optimistic with regard to the future. Conscious of the improvements since Stalin's time, they look forward to the day when food itself will be free. They respect the regime and are quick to give credit to the achievements which it has brought about.

Therefore, the flights of Gagarin and Titov have made an important impression upon the minds of Russians as well as those of us in the free world. Internally, the propaganda effect of these accomplishments cannot be ignored. The Russians clearly see these events as proof that their system is superior.

* * *

THAT THE Russians are ahead of us in this type of space travel is hard to ignore. It is only through their massve effort in this one field that this lead could have been achieved. This characteristic concentration on a few objectives is typical of many industrial, educational, and social activities of the Russians.

There is no question that the Soviets can produce high quality goods and services. Their subways are a classic example of this. On the other hand, it is still true that the excellent Soviet achievements in certain fields are accomplished only at the price of drastic economizing in consumer goods.

Clothing and shoes, for instance, are very expensive and often poorly made. Moreover, the supply is usually limited. Notably, there is a critical shortage of housing although the regime is building new apartments as fast as it can. Often, however, when new buldings are put up the basic structure is sound, but Russians themselves are quick to point out that there are many imperfections in the finishing of buildings. Doors will often fit badly or windows would let in the draught.

* * *

BUT GENERALLY the Russian people are not pessimistic. They are conscious that education is free and will impress this upon a visitor. The youth are ambitious and there is much competition to obtain advanced training.

The system differs considerably from the American school system. Before attending an institution of higher learning, students are often required to go in the world and use their knowledge.

This required period of practical work does not mean that the individual quickly falls into inactivity and will not undertake further education. On the contrary, Soviet society is very agressive in urging the individual to improve himself. There is great social pressure to enter the competition for places in the many Soviet technical institutes and universities; and from the individuals point of view, further education is regarded as a "ticket to a better life." Financial aid is provided by the government.

MOST STUDENTS between the ages of 15 to 25 join an organization known as Komsomol. If one does not belong to this, one is regarded as an outsider. The organization, among other things, is a means to gain access to the party.

From conversations with students it is easy to see how their thinking has been indoctrinated. Often when talking about America they mention obvious problems such as racial discrimination and unemployment without showing an understanding of the political and social structure of the United States. Information about America is strictly controlled by the regime, and any conception that the Russian people have of the United States is completely biased.

It is, moreover, often from the errors of omission that a false impression of the free world is built up, rather than by direct falsehoods, although the latter is by no means unknown.

* * *

THIS IS CLEARLY illustrated in their impression of the Berlin situation. The West Germans are pictured as Fascists who are under control of "revenge-seeking generals." The regime finds it easy to convince the people of this.

The Soviets have just released an important 20 year "Draft Program" which will do much to consolidate the regime. It is to be approved by the 22nd Party Congress which meets this month: it recognizes that at present Russia is in a state of socialism and that in 20 years Communism will begin. The Soviets impress the people by stating that the present generation will live under Communism.

Sensitive that their material level is below that of the United States, the Russian people are hopeful for the future and are satisfied that the regime will meet their rising expectations. It will be for our generation to witness these changes, and our responsibility to prove to the world that through freedom of action, individual choice, and indivdual initiative we can meet the needs of the Twentieth Century.

Space Pilot Walker Breaks Speed Record

X-15 Beats Mach 6 Over Calif. Sands

By Stanley Hall
(United Press International)

EDWARDS AFB, Calif.—A heat-seared X15 rocket ship Tuesday shot to a record 3,920 miles per hour—almost six times the speed of sound—and test pilot Joe Walker would have surpassed 4,000 m.p.h. if he hadn't put on the brakes.

National Space Agency pilot Walker, 40, took the X15 on a scorching ride over the Mojave Desert that saw him reach the record speed at an altitude of 110,000 feet. Temperatures reached 1,600 to 1,700 degrees on some metal wing expansion flaps in the stubby, black craft. The heat was comparable to that of an ingot in a steel mill, NASA spokesmen said.

Deliberately opening the speed brakes 10 seconds before his fuel was exhausted, Walker still broke the week-old record for manned aircraft by 273 m.p.h. At one point during the flight, he shouted a radioed "golly" in apparent awe over the near-perfect performance.

The X15 program has a speed goal of 4,000 m.p.h. and an altitude mark of 250,000 feet—50 miles—or greater.

Opened Brakes Early

"I'll go out on a limb," Walker said with a laugh after his flight. "If I hadn't opened up the speed brakes early, we would have been over 4,000—maybe by 50 miles per hour."

The speed brakes became near red hot in application—but functioned perfectly.

The braking was deliberate after 70 seconds of full power flight. Scientists wanted to study control problems in the speed range, with the original intention to fly the X15 at 3,885 m.p.h. Walker kept the engine open full throttle 10 seconds after applying the brakes.

Dropped From B52

The prime concern Tuesday on Walker's ninth flight in an X15 was control. He radioed the control tower about vibration, but later said it did not appear "critical."

The B52 mother plane dropped the X15 at 45,000 feet, and the tiny craft climbed sharply before reaching the speed goal on the 10-minute flight.

Maj. Robert White of the Air Force last week flew the plane at 3,647 m.p.h. to an altitude of 217,000 feet—41 miles high. The speed mark was unintentional on that flight, with altitude the prime goal.

JEANIE MacDOUGAL

Sheldon & MacDougal Head '62 Campus Chest Project

Charles Sheldon and Jeanie MacDougal, co-chairmen of the Campus Chest, yesterday announced plans for a "bigger and more original" Campus Chest Drive this spring.

The two, appointed by the Y Executive Board last spring, tentatively plan the Campus Chest activities for mid-March of this year. The Campus Chest is the only charity organization on campus. Last year the goal of the drive was $4,000. This money went to Goettingen Scholarships, National Mental Health Association, World University Service, and Heart Research at Memorial Hospital.

Sheldon, co-chairman of the Carnival Committee of last year's Campus Chest, is a Junior in Business Administration from Chattanooga, Tenn. He has served on the Elections Board and the Symposium Committee in addition to being a member of the varsity soccer team.

Jeanie MacDougal, also a co-vhairman of last year's Carnival Committee, is a senior transfer from Chatham College in Pittsburgh and is from Akron, Ohio. She also has served on the Symposium Committee.

The chairman announced that interviews for the Forming Committee, Carnival Committee, Auction Committee, Solicitations Committee, Publicity Committee, and other service projects which various organizations wish to donate will be held Tuesday beginning at 1 p.m. on the second floor of YMCA. Applications for the committees will be available at GM Information Desk, the Library, and YMCA. The co-chairmen for these committees will be selected at these interviews.

Sheldon said, "We hope to improve the ever-popular auction to make it more popular and successful. We do feel that there is a need to improve on solicitations. Last year the average student donation was 18c for 8,000 students."

MacDougal added, "we hope we can have a more original drive this year with many fresh ideas like last year's shoe-shining booth."

The chairmen said that there was a possibility that Campus Chest could provide some outside entertainment thereby aiding the Entertainment Committee.

According to the UNC School of Pharmacy, drug store sales last year amounted to nearly seven billion dollars.

Career Cues

"Hitch your wagon to a 'growth' industry—and grow with it!"

Douglas Leigh, President
Douglas Leigh, Inc.

"A growth industry is a new industry that is on the way up — moving quickly, expanding fast. When you join a company in one of the growth fields you have something extra working for you . . . you grow up with it. To find out which industry is right for you, try this: Ask someone in a good investment office to give you a list of the industries he considers 'growth industries'. Data Processing, plastics, and electronics are a few examples. Then pick the one you have a leaning toward, and get the names of the most progressive companies in that field.

One thing I'd like to point out from my own career is . . . a growth industry may also be an old business that's on the verge of new development. Shortly after leaving college I found this situation in the Outdoor Advertising field. What my associates and I did was to employ color, action and motion to dramatically personify the product, brand or services being advertised. In doing so, we developed the modern type 'Spectaculars' that talked, blew smoke rings, soap bubbles, etc. . . . signs that changed the face of Broadway and the famous Times Square area.

This is just one example. The really important thing to remember is this: When you set your sights on a career, aim for an industry that is going to grow, so you can grow with it. It's the difference between a rocket that blasts off, and one that just sits there. Good luck!"

Country Crossers Whip State For 3rd In Row

Everett Takes 1st In 17-40 Victory

Carolina's cross-country speedsters scored a clean sweep over the NC State harriers Tuesday afternoon winning both the varsity and freshman meets with ease.

Rhett Everett, Carmine Lunetta and Charlie Little finished 1-2-3 as the varsity trounced the Wolfpack, 17-40. Everett's winning time was 21:47 for the four-mile course. Lunetta and Little were clocked at 22:11 and 23:05 respectively.

The frosh meet was a three-team affair, Wake Forest High School joining the Tar Babies and Wolflets. State's Mel Woodcock took first with 10:32, but Carolina copped the next three places and took the meet, 25-49. Wake Forest High finished with 66 points.

In the varsity meet, Richard Edwards was State's top man, finishing in fourth with 23:13. Dave Brunson (23:42) and Charlie Tromba (23:54) took fourth and fifth for the Tar Heels, who have now won their first three meets.

A tough test faces the Carolina harriers at College Park on Saturday, when they meet the Maryland Terrapins. Coach Dale Ranson has said previously that this is the big one for his Tar Heel runners. All of the runners from last year's strong Terrapin squad have returned, and Maryland is considered the class of the ACC despite its 24-25 loss to Duke last Saturday.

The Tar Baby runners were paced by Jerry Smith, who finished second with 11:00, Paul Ryerson, who came in third at 11:08, and Dave Radford, who was a close fourth with 11:09.

Here are the top ten finishers and their times:

VARSITY: 1. Everett, UNC (21.47); 2. Lunetta, UNC (22:11); 3. Little (23:04); 4. Edwards, State (23:13); 5. Brunson, UNC (23:42); 6. Trombe, UNC (23:54); 7. Tyson, State (23:59); 8. Wilson, State (24:15); 9. Sullivan, UNC (24:28); 10. Green, State (25:02).

FRESHMAN: 1. Woodcock, State (10:32); 2. Smith, UNC (11:00); 3. Ryerson, UNC (11:08); 4. Radford (11:09); 5. Sharon, WFHS (11:30); 6. Stambley, State(11:37); 7. Graham, UNC (11:38); 8. Beal, WFHS (11:39); 9. Whichare, UNC (11:30); 6. Stambley, State (11:37);

UNC Made 6 Point Favorite

NEW YORK (UPI) — Michigan State, an impressive 28-0 victor over Michigan last week, Tuesday was named a 7-point favorite to halt Notre Dame's drive back toward National Football Prominence in one of next Saturday's top college football games.

Michigan State goes into this non-televised clash at East Lansing, Mich., ranked No. 2 in the nation by the UPI board of coaches while Notre Dame has moved with a steady rise to the No. 5 spot.

In the three regionally-televised games this week, the odds-makers listed Penn State a 1-point choice to rebound from its loss to Army by beating Syracuse on eastern TV screens, Alabama a 6-point choice over Tennessee in the south, and California a 6-point pick over Southern California in the west.

Mississippi, the nation's top-ranked team, is expected to have no trouble this week as a 28-point favorite over Tulane.

But third-ranked Texas is only a 4-point choice over defending Southwest Conference champion Arkansas in one of that area's top games of the season.

In addition to the Penn State-Syracuse game, the oddsmakers see one other contest as a 1-point affair—with Cornell the choice by that margin over Yale.

Otherwise, here's how the games are sized up:

Friday Night

Navy 7 over Detroit.

Saturday

East: Holy Cross 6 over Dartmouth; Princeton 7 over Colgate; Villanova 7 over Boston College.

South: Florida 6 over Vanderbilt; North Carolina 6 over South Carolina; Georgia Tech 7 over Auburn; Duke 6 over Clemson; Mississippi State 7 over Georgia North Carolina State 7 over Wake Forest; Louisiana State 12 over Kentucky.

Midwest: Indiana 3 over Washington State; Michigan 7 over Purdue; Ohio State 7 over Northwestern; Minnesota 12 over Illinois; Iowa 13 over Wisconsin; Missouri 7 over Iowa State; Colorado 19 over Kansas State. chairman of last year's Carnival over Nebraska; Kansas 6 over Oklahoma; Texas A. & M. 6 over Texas Christian; Baylor 12 over Texas Tech; Rice 14 over Southern Methodist.

Far West and Rockies: UCLA 6 over Pitt; Washington 7 over Stanford; Maryland 10 over Air Force.

NCAA Approves New Bowl Game

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Mercy Bowl Game in Los Angeles, a benefit for victims of the 1960 California Poly air disaster, was among 15 post-season football contests officially certified today by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, NCAA.

The total of 15 games equals the highest since the immediate post-war period, the NCAA announced. It was not certain, however, that all certified games would be played. Of the 15 games certified in 1959, 12 were played; and of 12 approved last year, one was cancelled.

NY Hopes Roberts Is Another Sain

By TIM MORIARTY
United Press International

The New York Yankees are hopeful that Robin Roberts will turn out to be another Johnny Sain.

In fact, it will be Sain, now the Yankees' pitching coach, who will he handed this major reclamation project next spring when Roberts reports to the world champions' training camp at Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Sain, you may remember, was purchased by the Yankees from the old Boston Braves in 1951 after slipping to a 5-3 record that year. The old Arkansas side-armer won 35 and lost 25 as a Yankee pitcher for four years helping them to pennants in 1951, '52 and '53.

The Yankees acquired Roberts for slightly more than the $20,000 waiver price Monday from the Philadelphia Phillies. The sturdy, 35-year-old Phillies with the Phils since 1948 after signing what was then a fabulous $25,000 bonus contract.

Won 234 Games

During 14 seasons with the Phillies, Roberts won 234 games and lost 199. He won 20 or more games in six straight seasons (1950-1955), reaching his peak in 1952 when he posted a 28-7 record. He has pitched 35 shutouts and a pair of one-hitters, and was named to the National League All-Star squad seven times.

The 200-pound six-footer from Springfield, Ill., reached a career low-water mark with the futile Phils this year when he pitched only two complete games in 18 starts and finished with a 1-0 record after injuring his right knee in mid-season.

Bob Carpenter, owner of the Phillies, admitted he was "sorry to see Robbie go, although it's no surprise to either of us."

"I told him if I had an opportunity to place him with a first place club, I would do so," said the prexy of the last-place Phils, who finished 46 games back of the NL pennant-winning Cincinnati Reds this year. "He certainly is getting that."

"I sincerely believe this will be another Sain case," Carpenter added.

Nothing To Lose

"We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by this purchase," said Yankee General Manager Roy Hamey.

Roberts apparently agreed.

"I would like to think I'm capable of pitching regularly and Philadelphia didn't appear to be the place to do it," Robbie said. "I just want a chance to work hard and be a part of the Yankee team."

The New York Mets also picked up another old NL pitching star Monday when they purchased Billy Loes from the San Francisco Giants for a reported $25,000 on a conditional basis. Loes, 32, was hampered by arm trouble during the past season when he posted a 6-5 record and will be returned to the Giants if he fails to impress Met's Manager Casey Stengel in 1956 season and remained with them until last year when he was traded to the Giants. His overall big-league record is 80-63.

Loes was with the old Brooklyn Dodgers from through 1955, helping pitch the Dodgers to pennants in 1952, '53 and '55. He went to the Baltimore Orioles early in the spring training.

ROBIN ROBERTS

Sell Five Others

In addition to Loes, the Giants sold pitcher Dick Denton to Springfield of the Eastern League and four other players to Tacoma of the Pacific Coast League. They also added 12 new players from minor league clubs, including shortstop Hal Lanier, son of former pitching great Max Lanier, and right-hander Gaylord Perry, who had an 18-8 record with Tacoma of the PCL this year.

The Phillies also asked waivers on veteran pinch hitters Elmer Valo, promoted 10 farmhands, released three regulars and lost infielder Ruben Amaro to the U. S. Army. Pitcher Ruben Gomez was among the trio released outright to Buffalo of the International League.

Parker Tops ACC In Total Yards Gained

GREENSBORO (UPI)—Sophomore quarterback Jim Parker of Clemson has taken over the leadership in total individual offense in the Atlantic Coast Conference with 490 yards.

It marks the first time since 1958 that a player other than N. C. State's Roman Gabriel or Wake Forest's Norman Snead has led in that department.

Parker ran and passed for 129 yards Saturday in a losing effort against Wake Forest, and moved ahead of Gabriel who managed only 98 yards against Alabama.

Parker now has 490 yards to Gabriel's 459.

But despite his having been replaced as total offensive leader, Gabriel continued to hold onto the passing leadership. He has connected on 45 of 82 attempts for 449 yards and four TDs. Maryland's Dennis Condie holds the ACC rushing lead, but is being pressed by Wake Forest's Alan White and North Carolina's Gib Carson. Condie has netted 231 yards on 61 carries.

White is far back with 86 yards but has carried only 24 times for a 7.8 per carry average, compared to Condie's 3.8 per carry mark.

Carson, in third place with 163 yards has carried 49 times in only three games and has a 3.3 yard average .

In the race for the total offense leadership, the big difference has been in the running of Parker. A 6-1, 194 pounder from Haverford, Pa., he has carried 30 times for 145 yards to go with his 345 yards on 20 of 40 completed passes. Parker has hit for three TDs.

But Gabriel, despite his big lead in passing yardage, has gained only 10 yards net in 31 rushing plays. Many of the rushing plays charged to Gabriel have been times when he has been trapped trying to pass.

Mizzou Coach Quits

COLUMBIA, Mo. (UPI)—Wilbur N. (Sparky) Stalcup, whose name had become synonymous with University of Missouri basketball during the past 15 years, announced his resignation as coach Monday to accept the position as the school's assistant director of athletics.

Stalcup, who made the announcement at a meeting of his squad said he will coach the coming season but give up his position on the bench in March to devote all his time to the new duties.

Death Still Rides Gridiron

NEW YORK (UPI)—Two of the four horsemen ride the nation's gridirons again today.

They are not of the backfield storied under the golden dome at Notre Dame. These are the originals.

Slaughter and Death.

And it is a tragic truism that they are invited guests, made welcome by a driving need for victory, commercial disdain and a lack of proper medical supervision.

More than 20 football players have died this year already. Why? Because of iron-hard plastic helmets with steel face guards which sacrifice safety for lightness. Because of metal-like shoulder pads which fall in the same category. Because of tackling techniques which place a caused fumble ahead of a player's neck, and, in some cases, because of shoddy medical attention.

"New techniques in coaching may be partially at fault," says young Tom Nugent, the Maryland coach. "But there should be equipment changes, too."

Speaks Out Bravely

Nugent speaks out bravely. Three years ago one of his players died in practice.

"It is one of the most horrible memories of my life," he recalls grimly.

The new technique he challenges is that of blocking and tackling by "putting your nose on the ball."

"This means," he explains, "that the player goes in with his head in a dangerous, upright position. The neck wasn't built for this kind of wear and tear. But it's a technique which is supposed to cause the ball carrier to fumble. The price, as you can see, can be fearful."

Nugent, admitting that "the manufacturers won't like it," calls for drastic helmet changes.

"The way they are," he asserted, "they are weapons instead of protective devices. They don't yield. I'd like to see them go back to yielding leather or even have the helmet covered with sponge rubber."

Rusk Says Khrush May Ease Tension

By Donald May

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of Sate Dean Rusk said Wednesday that Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's relaxation of his deadline for a German peace treaty "may serve to reduce tensions somewhat" in the Berlin crisis.

But the secretary said Khrushchev made "little if any" change in his Berlin demands—under which the West has refused to negotiate. Consequently, he told the news conference, it is impossible to say whether the prospects of war or peace have changed.

DEAN RUSK

Rusk said even if Berlin talks between Moscow and the West could be arranged, there was no guarantee they would succeed. However, he said, catastrophe was the only alternative to keeping the door open to such negotiations.

Russia Reaffirms Stand

Rusk spoke as Russia delivered new notes to the Allies in Moscow reaffirming the Kremlin's stand that the West can use air corridors to West Berlin only to supply its military garrisons. The United States, France and Britain insis they can use the corridors for whatever traffic they want.

In the first official U.S. reaction to Khrushchev's speech to the 22nd Communist Party Congress in Moscow Tuesday, Rusk said he believed the Soviet leader now understood the firm Western stand against Russia's Berlin threats.

But Rusk would not commit himself to early East-West negotiations. He said it was vital to continue exploratory talks to determine whether there was room for negotiations.

Turning to the other key point in Khrushchev's speech, Rusk renewed Tuesday night's White House appeal to Russia to abandon plans to set off a 50-megaton nuclear bomb late this month. Rusk said Khrushchev should consider the world reaction that such a blast might touch off.

Won't Win Admission

On other world issues, Rusk said:

—He thinks Red China will not win admission to the United Nations this year.

—The United States is impatient after four weeks of haggling over a successor to the late U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold. If agreement is not reached soon, this country may ask the General Assembly to name a successor over Russia's objections.

—The United States is giving thorough consideration to Peru's call for collective Western Hemispheric action against Cuba.

Rusk said the next exploratory discussions looking toward possible Berlin negotiations would be carried out by U.S. Ambassador Llewelyn Thompson in Moscow and perhaps by other Allied ambassadors there.

Police Check Dry Cleaning

All students who picked up their dry cleaning from Mike Barham after 9:35 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 6 were requested by Chief W. D. Blake yesterday to contact the Chapel Hill Police Dept.

They are checking for traces of spilled cyanide to see if any was brought into the room in Cobb and possibly what type it was.

The SBI is currently running tests on the boys' vitals organs and samples of vomit to determine the approximate time of death and the amount of cyanide used.

The two students, Mike Barham and Bill Johnson, were found dead in their room at about 11:30 Friday morning by a janitor. Both were lying in unnaturally straight positions in their beds with traces of foam on their faces.

Death by Cyanide

A corner's jury ruel the cause of death was cyanide poisoning. No traces of cyanide have been found in their room and the source of the cyanide is unknown.

Johnson made inquiries about a "fast acting poison" the day before the deaths according to police. Cyanide is very accessible in the many laboratories on campus. Police Chief Blake said that he believed the possibility of finding the source of the poison was small.

A student saw Barham collapse in the laboratory at 11:30 the preceding Thursday night. Several students carried Barham down to the room and placed him on the bed. Johnson, his roommate, said that if Barham didn't get any better he would call a doctor. Neither boy was seen alive again.

Laotian 'Neutral' To Form Cabinet

LUANG PRABANG, Laos (UPI) —"Neutralist" Prince Souvanna Phouma Wednesday won King Savang Vathana's permission to form a new coalition government with himself as premier provided all three Laotian factions agree on the division of cabinet posts.

The king has called for a truly neutral government that would reunite his country and put an end to the long-smoldering civil war between the Communist-backed rebels and the pro-western rightwing forces.

The monarch made known his wishes in an audience with Souvanna, the compromise choice of the rival princes as premier of the proposed coalition.

Souvanna, who heads the so-called neutralist faction supported by the Communist-backed pathet lao, scheduled conferences with Premier Prince Boun Oum, whose post he will take over if he succeeds in bringing the feuding factions together in a "government of national reconciliation."

Nikita Quarreling Wth Mao?

LONDON—In his sharp attack on Albania at the Soviet Party Congress Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev apparently was delivering a message to Communist China.

Soviet experts here interpreted his remarks as a warning to a potential rival rather than a mere dressing down of a small nation that counts for little in the Communist scheme of things.

One of Khrushchev's listeners Tuesday was Red Chinese Premier Chou En-lai, who was reported to have sat stony-faced during the attack on the tiny country that has been a strict follower of the Red Chinese tough Stalin line.

Soviets Accused Of Nuclear Murder

MUNICH, Germany—A private Western radio station said Wednesday Soviet scientists made a mistake in weather prediction during a nuclear bomb test four years ago and winds dumped radioactive fallout over a part of Kazakhstan causing a "high death rate."

The account of the fallout poisoning was beamed to the Soviet Union by Radio Liberty, a privately-financed station specializing in Russian language broadcasts.

French Deport Rioters

PARIS—The French government announced Wednesday it will deport to Algeria 1,500 of an estimated 30,000 Algerian Moslems who ran riot through Paris Tuesday night and virtually took over sections of the city for six hours.

The government ordered reinforcements of riot police to protect the capital from any recurrence of the rioting that broke out in protest against an unofficial curfew on Moslems in the Paris area.

Hits Capitalism For 'Softness;' Presents Plan

By Henry Shapiro

MOSCOW (UPI)—Premier Nikita Khrushchev on Wednesday promised the Soviet people a rosy future of a world without war and without want—a world in which he foresaw capitalism crumbling and communism supreme around the earth.

Khrushchev promised this utopia by 1980, if the world stays at peace.

And he told assembled leaders of world communism they can have every confidence of "preventing a world war"—because "the balance of world political, economic and military forces has changed in favor of the peace-loving Communist camp."

Speaking as first secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, Khrushchev presented his party "platform" to more than 5,000 delegates at the second day of the 22nd Party Congress inside the ancient Kremlin.

The six-hour speech — Khrushchev's second in two days—repeated the flowing promises published last July in the Kremlin's new 20-year program to give Russia a "peaceful" victory over the United States.

Invitation To Socialism

It also issued a special invitation to the underdeveloped nations of Latin America, Asia and Africa to "throw off the yoke of colonialism and enter on the road to socialism."

But his speech contained more of the bombshells of Tuesday's six-hour address in which he announced Soviet plans to explode a 50-megaton hydrogen bomb and tentatively lifted his year-end deadline for concluding a separate Soviet peace treaty with East Germany.

The Soviet chieftain Wednesday declared the principal aim of the Communist party foreign policy is: "No war, to banish it from the life of society in one generation."

"Once the Soviet Union will have become the first industrial power," he said, "once the socialist system will have become the decisive factor of world development, the scale will tilt and the barometer of international weather will show: 'clear,' the menace of world war is gone, never to return."

Will Strengthen Defense

In the meantime, Khrushchev said, the Soviets will maintain "the most up-to-date means for the defense of our homeland, atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons and rockets of every range . . . the strengthening of U.S.S.R. defense and the might of the Soviet armed forces."

Khrushchev told the delegates that "American capitalism has passed its prime and is on the decline" and said the United States is "the pepicenter of the capitalism's economic difficulties."

A weakness of the capitalistic powers, he said, is that war production has become a "permanent element" of their economy, with "15 to 20 per cent of the national income spent on armaments."

State Of Emergency Declared By South Viet Nam President

By STEWART HENSLEY

SAIGON, Viet Nam (UPI)—President Ngo Dinh Diem on Wednesday declared a state of emergency throught Communist threatened South Viet Nam. The declaration was timed to coincide with the arrival of Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor for an on-the-spot survey of the Red guerrilla menace.

Taylor's conclusions may determine whether President Kennedy commits U. S. combat troops to help stop communism from engulfing all Southeast Asia.

He lost little time in plunging into what he described as an "across-the-board assessment" of the situation. Almost immediately after his arrival Wednesday he held a round of conferences with Diem and top American military and diplomatic officials.

The state of emergency decree suspends the application of all laws as necessary during the duration of the emergency which will continue until "further notice."

It was a first step to rally the national resources for an all-out struggle against the Communists within and outside the frontiers.

The national assembly met to discuss a draft bill giving Diem "exceptional powers" and approval was a foregone conclusion.

Taylor began his appraisal of what military measures the United States must take to keep Communists from overrunning South Viet Nam with a three-hour briefing at the U. S. Embassy.

Confers With Officials

He was given a fill-in on the overall military, political, economic social and ideological situation by U. S. Ambassador Frederick Nolting, Lt. Gen. Lionel McGarr, head of the U. S. Military Advisory Group MAG, and other diplomatic and miiltary officials. During the afternoon, he met with Diem in the presidential palace for a general discussion of the South Viet Nam position caused by the increased Communists pressures. There was no immediate information on the details of the discussions.

On Friday, Taylor will leave for a two-day survey of various battle areas, including some where American military men are training anti-Communist rangers. He is scheduled to return to Saigon Sunday.

John Ehle's novel about Asheville, "Lion on the Hearth," is receiving rave reviews from book critics all across the country.

Ehle is at present a teacher of script writing for TV, radio and motion pictures at UNC.

Harper & Brothers, who published the book on September 27, has just released the following quotes from the first reviews received in their office:

"The mountain people, with their ancient ways and fierce pride, are vigorously portrayed in this book. . . . John Ehle, a native of Asheville, covers a 15-year span in this, his third novel, that includes the 1930's depression." — Chicago Sun-Times.

Wolfe's Eloquence

"There is Thomas Wolfe's own eloquence, and none of his discursiveness, in the evocation you will find here of sight and sound and smell, of the enchantment of the hills, of food and speech, and the facts and acts of love and the somber tones of death." — New York Herald Tribune.

"Mr. Ehle is to be congratulated for writing such a lucid book about so many diverse personalities. . . . The book will hold your attention until the last page." — Miami News.

Refunds Rubbish?

Student Legislature will have a chance to save $300 of student funds tonight.

That is the amount asked in a bill designed to reimburse the Orientation Committee for funds spent this fall—funds the Committee did not have to spend. The money was used to finance a dance held here for entering students.

The dance has been an annual affair. Each year, Student Legislature has approved funds for the event when the budget requests were made in the spring. Last year, however, the Orientation Committee decided to cancel plans for the dance because of the shorter orientation period. Naturally, the money was not budgeted.

During the summer, the bill states, "Upon the request of Deans" at Carolina and Woman's College, whose students are invited, the dance was reinstated as a part of Orientation Week.

The $300 was sought and finally appropriated by the Summer School Student Government. But Summer School Student Body President Hank Patterson vetoed the appropriation on the grounds that it did not apply to Summer School students.

Meanwhile, the Orientation Committee shifted some of the funds it already had and met the $300 expense.

Supporters of tonight's bill say that if Legislature doesn't get the committee out of its woeful financial situation, the Orientation program may be damaged.

It is not our point to oppose the Orientation Committee.

Our point is, that if Student Legislature bails out the committee by appropriating the money, it will be following a legislative precedent which is economically unsound: giving the go-ahead to other organizations to spend non-existent money with confidence that Legislature will somehow save them when the bills come due.

If the administration of Carolina and Woman's College thought that the dance should be held, and the Orientation Committee rescheduled it because of this, then let the two administrations pay for it. Or let the committee itself pay for going blandly ahead with an unsound policy.

In any case, we hope that Student Legislature will have the vision to avoid the precedent by defeating the bill, letting the action be a warning to other organizations not to spend money they don't have.

—Harve Harriss

(Editor's Note: We do not completely agree with the above view. Under the circumstances, the Orientation Committee acted unwisely, but in good faith. We do, however, hope the Student Legislature will take steps toward eliminating future occurences o fa similar nature. Student funds cannot continue to be used to underwrite irresponsible spending.—W.K.)

The Hungarian Revolt

On October 22, 1956, five years ago come next Sunday, students at the University of Technical Sciences in Budapest adopted a sixteen-point program which was the catalyst for the ill-fated Hungarian revolt.

The program included demands for "general elections, universal suffrage, secret ballot, and the participation of several parties for the purpose of electing a new National Assembly, freedom of opinion and expression, freedom of the press and a free radio."

This spark fired a flame which was drowned in blood by Soviet tanks. This student movement started the most widespread revolt against Soviet totalitarianism since its inception 44 years ago.

That the revolution failed is a matter of history. But the spirit of the Hungarian revolution has been kept alive and as someone put it, "is a continuing indictment of the opressiveness of Soviet control in East-European countries. It remains, in the inelegant phraseology of Premier Khrushchev 'a bone in the throat.' "

It remains "a bone in the throat" for Americans as well. It is not easy to forget the students who attacked the Soviet tanks with rocks and gasoline-filled bottles. Nor is it easy to forget that the many thousands who died in Budapest did not raise the Iron Curtain one inch.

The Hungarian revolt spoke more eloquently of freedom to the American people than a thousand lesser voices could have.

The tenets of democracy framed by the students in Budapest five years ago are basic, and stand as a democratic manifesto not only for Americans today, but we hope, as a goal for all mankind for all time.

Food For Thought

Army officials admitted yesterday that one o ftheir electronic brains went nuts and ordered $7.4 million worth of unneeded equipment sent to U. S. forces in Europe, UPI reported last night.

The army cancelled the order after discovering the mistake, but it was too late to stop a "few thousand dollars worth" of equipment from starting on it sway.

Not that we're alarmed by this, but has anyone checked the computer that figures grade averages here?

Rare Ones: Big Time Academicians

By Alan Goldsmith

There is said to be some rare creatures in this university that can only be found in the most deserted sections of the library.

The only time they see the light of the day is when they are attending classes or getting a bite to eat. The rest of their time is spent in deep isolated study. Here are the true scholars of this university.

Here are the true representatives of a complete and total academic life. And here are the new emerging heroes of this campus.

* * *

YES, WHEN BIG TIME college athletics are finally deemphasized out of sight by the liberal minded "we're for serious academic life" boys, our library dwelling scholars will replace the football and basketball stars as campus heroes.

What a day it will be for the university! One can just picture a classroom set up in the middle of Kenan Stadium with thousands of wildly cheering fans in the stands as these some what pasty looking scholars march bravely into the classroom with their slide rules and dictionaries to face a menacing looking prof. (who is hissed and booed by the fans in much the same manner as referees are.) Oh!

The excitement of it all! Each time our scholars correctly answer a question put to them by the wily, insidious professor the fans let out a tremendous roar of approval. Our heroes have made another first down.

* * *

OF COURSE SUCH big time academics would have to fall under some regulations. The RCVDC (remember Charles Van Doren Committee) would replace the NCAA in investigating academic scholarships, honor systems, and exams. But the thorn in the scholar's side would be that he had to pass physical education in order to remain eligible for participation in academic activities. This would be quite a problem for many scholars who had developed only the muscles in their brains. They would have to be given tudors and coaches to help them pass the difficult physical test such as push ups and touching one's toes without bending one's knees.

But these regulations would not stop big time academics from rising. Pretty soon the whole nation would be swept up in its enthusiasm. Instead of swapping pictures of baseball players, kids would be swapping pictures of Phi Beta Kappas. Academic prowess would become the nation's dream. Our universities would turn out mental giants and physical weaklings. Then our nation would be called with great pride, "the land of the mentally strong and physically wretched."

Dear Editor:

I beg your indulgence in the following comments upon the UNC-Clemson football game:

First, I should like to offer my unqualified apology to the person and his date who were offended by boisterous conduct toward that person in the closing moments of the game.

* * *

SECONDLY, BEING of the opinion that I reside in a democratic community, I should like to assert my belief that a man may cheer for whom he pleases. Due in the main to the fact that I happened to have been born an draised in that neck of the woods, I find that I am moved to boost in my own humble and meager capacity, the Tigers in each and every one of their endeavors.

I respectfully submit that this should be allowed; I do not remember signing any contract upon registration which recites that I shall without fail cheer for the UNC football team.

I have the utmost respect for the UNC team; in Saturday's game they may not have outshone the Clemson Tigers, but they surely did make their own fans look mightily poor.

* * *

THIRDLY, the best way to identify a winner is by examination of his capacity to lose. When in the fourth quarter it became obvious that the Tar Heels had little or no chance to rally—faced with a 27 point lead and a rapidly expiring clock—the UNC stands began to empty.

Little verbal distinctions which I dare not repeat were being uttered by the disgusted and angry students as they filed out of the stadium early to avoid the rush. In the UNC-State College game nary a one of said supporters left until the final gun had been fired. Of course not; we won the State game. I said that my apology to the young man and his date was unqualified.

It is. But I submit that it is a difficult task to contain an irrascible temper in the face of such mass desertion of a cause.

* * *

IN CONCLUSION the writer desires that this point be made: As we can see the team on the field; the team as well can see us in the stands, and most particularly in the final moments of a lost ball game. It seems to me to be a gross inequity that in the football games won the fans should have the honors to stand, reap the glory, shout and praise the team, and in the games lost to simply walk out and leave them down there to bear the pains alone! After all—especially as demonstrated in the game commented upon—the Tar Heels show a fine sense of sportsmanship, a clean competitive spirit, and always do justice to the Athletic Department of this University. I hope that the Tar Heels never again lose a game, but if they should, I sincerely trust that the student body will stay in the stands and let them know they have support, win or lose.

Peace Corps Praised

Peace Corps director R. Sargent Shriver has said that within two years his organization will have done more for American education than any other group.

"The Peace Corps perhaps can be more helpful for Americans who take part than for the countries getting help."

He said the Peace Corps volunteers will be able to help the U.S. State Department, American foreign aid and businesses that are expanding overseas. "Labor needs people like that too," he said.

Shriver is a brother-in-law of President Kennedy.

HUAC Book Review: Subversive

Monday night's showing of the controversial "Operation Abolition," and Martin L. Wilson's recent blast at HUAC—opponent Frank Donner, offer a good setting for a closer look at Mr. Donner and the House committee he hates so bitterly.

* * *

One late summer 1961 day Congressman Francis E. Walter (D.-Pa.) rose on the floor of the House to give his fellow solons an extended book review.

The book: Frank Donner's "THE UN-AMERICANS."

The subject of the book: the House Un-American Activities Committee, of which Rep. Walter is chairman.

Rep. Walter's comment on the book: subversive.

That the HUAC chairman was disturbed by Donner's brutal condemnation of his committee is not surprising. Nor is it surprising the terms which Walter used in his denunciation:

"In calling this mendacious volume to the attention of the House, I do so with a degree of reluctance, for I have no desire to swell the coffers of the Communist Party by stimulating its sale . . ."

"This venomous item, which strikes frantically like a cornered viper . . ."

The book—billed, not too objectively, "the first fully documented account of the notorious House Committee on Un-American Activities . . . how their abuse of power is being met by a growing opposition"—is even today the center of controversy across the nation. Other congressmen, including HUAC member and John Birch high official Gordon Sherer (D-Ohio), have taken the House floor for the purpose of denouncing Donner and the book publishers. (Ballantine Books, 101 Fifth Avenue, New York 3, N. Y.—paperback, 60 cents)

It is unfortunate for the abolition cause which Mr. Donner supports that the book was handled as it was. The subject matter itself was controversial, and Donner's treatment—which only rarely slips into objectivity—serves to further antagonize persons who might not agree with him. This means objective consideration of the book by persons on opposite sides of the HUAC fence, nearly impossible.

Nevertheless the book is well-written and interesting — whether it pleases the reader or enrages him. Mr. Donner may be a Communist, a fellow traveler or neither—this political affiliation does not, in itself, make his book helpful in protecting American freedoms or instrumental in accomplishing the overthrow of the nation. His statements are not proved right or wrong by his degree of "pinkness."

Donner does not try to confine himself to narrow points of disagreement in the book. He levels his verbal guns at: (1) the constitutional and ethical validity of the committee. In other words, should propaganda be investigated? (2) He traces the historical steps by which the Committee was set up, the manner in which it became a permanent standing committee (Donner claims Rep. Walter voted against HUAC in 1945).

(3) Donner details the groups which he believes support HUAC and the relationship between the committee and national "patriotic" groups . . . also, the growing resentment against the committee's practices.

(4) The usurping of power from the executive and judicial branches of government, which Donner claims has occurred, are detailed.

(5) Donner, who has been called before the committee and a constitutional lawyer once with the National Labor Relations Board, outlines the rights of the witness, treatment of friendly witnesses ("informers"), and the general conduct of Committee hearings.

* * *

The next "ATTITUDES" column will detail further the personal background of Donner, and Rep. Walter's condemnation of him.

Dear Sir:

When my wife and I arrived here last month from Massachusetts (to enroll in the UNC Graduate School), we were prepared for and not overly shocked by the quite obvious segregation in the restrooms at the Raleigh-Durham Airport.

We were appalled, however, to hear the Governor of North Carolina, in this evening's broadcast of his weekly press conference, answer one reporter's question as to whether evidences of segregated facilities would be removed from the airport prior to President Kennedy's arrival with the bland assurance that, to the best of his knowledge, no such evidences existed. Can it be true that Governor Sanford's familiarity with his state does not extend as far as the airport that services its capital?

Or is his statement really indicative of some general absence of simple honesty in a man that the electorate of North Carolina has chosen to fill its highest office? We're frankly curious.

No Competition With Business?

As a prospective buyer rambles through Chapel Hill stores, he is struck with the uniformity of prices and lack of variety.

There is no such thing as competition among the merchants. This is a well-known fact, but it is also the real reason why merchants favored Orange County's Blue Law. Sunday is the biggest day for discount houses—the thing that fat pompous merchants could not stand up to.

After decades of sucking the University community dry with "suggested retail prices" they are not about to work for a living.

Chapel Hillians pay more than Northerners would for the same item, while on the average they make 30 per cent less in salary. For students with fixed incomes the situation is even worse. Only Durham and Raleigh offer respite to consumers, but some of what they save in these competitive towns is reduced by transportation costs.

* * *

OF ALL TOWN merchants, Kemp Battle Nye stands as the model of what a merchant should be. He knows merchandising and is a competitive seller who shares little of his market with his competitors. And notably Kemp is not a member of the town merchants association.

If you are wondering what a discount house would mean to Chapel Hill picture keeping 25 cents of every dollar you spend on everything except food. Merchants make at least a 40 per cent markup on everything they sell. In drugs, cosmetics, jewelry and furniture it's 100 per cent. Discount houses sell name-brand electric razors for $20 instead of $30; nylons for 75 cents instead of $1.35 and the list is endless. A monthly allowance of $100, for instance, would be increased in value to at least $25 with a discount house.

* * *

NO NEED to bemoan that Blue Laws are here. We accept the fact, especially since the Supreme Court refused last week to reconsider its previous decision on the constitutionality of Blue Laws. But we can hope that some investors will see that a Chapel Hill discount house could be of great service to the town and still turn over a decent profit without being a leech or a parasite.

Huge Blast Rips Chicago Factory

By Duncan Frazier

CHICAGO (UPI) — A chemical explosion ripped a cosmetics factory Wednesday and showered glass, flying debris and hydrochloric acid fumes over a northwest side industrial and residential neighborhood. At least 190 persons were injured.

The blast shattered the chemical mixing plant at Helene Curtis industries as employes, alerted by an evacuation warning, ran for their lives.

It blew out 350 windows at a Zenith Corp. factory a half-block away, shattered glass in a 20-block area, rocked a vast area of northwest Chicago and was heard in Evanston nine miles away.

Alarm Saves Many

The ringing of an automatic alarm bell and the fact that only eight men were working in the immediate area of the blast apparently saved workers from death or mangling injuries, authorities said.

Seven hospitals treated at least 190 persons for injuries, most of them caused by flying glass.

The bulk of the injured went to St. Anne's Hospital, which threw into effect a disaster plan prepared after it was flooded with burned and injured children from the Our Lady of the Angels School fire in December, 1958.

Officials at St. Anne's said three of 24 persons hospitalized there were in serious condition. One suffered third degree burns, one a slashed artery in his neck and one an eye injury.

St. Anne's treated 165 persons, Walter Memorial Hospital, 8, Franklin Boulevard Hospital 6, St. Mary's Hospital 4, Belmont Hospital 3, and Garfield Park and Norwegian American Hospitals 2 each.

Others received first aid treatment at the scene or went to private doctors.

Willard Gibwitz, president of Helene Curtis, and Dr. Samuel Grant, research director, blamed the blast on a "mixture of alcoholics." They said all employes of the company had been accounted for.

Blast Mangles Building

The explosion reduced one section of a long, 1½-story building—one of 16 buildings in the cosmetics plant—into a mass of twisted structural steel, bent pipes, ruptured chemical tanks and splintered lumber.

William Day, 22, one of eight or ten men working in the section, said the alarm gave a few seconds' warning and he dashed for the door. Day, who suffered burns, said he was just outside the building when the blast occurred.

"I guess God was on my side," he said. "Boards and bricks were falling all around me. Debris was flying and I saw one large flame shoot up."

Joseph Mileski, a first floor worker at the Zenith plant nearby, said "We all ran to the window to look when we heard two men screaming and running for their lives down the street."

"I saw liquid pouring from a tank at Helene Curtis," Mileski said. "Then the whole thing blew up and the glass in our windows blew into our faces. I don't remember anything after that."

Fumes from hydrochloric acid used in making permanent wave preparations and detergents spread through the neighborhood. Some residents fled from their homes ahead of the choking fumes and firemen for a time considered evacuating the area.

Ambulances, police squadrons and private cars ferried the injured to hospitals. St. Anne's Hospital summoned student nurses from classes, set up cots in its auditorium and was treating the injured within 15 minutes.

All of the 1,250 Helene Curtis employes who were not injured or had not already fled the plant were sent home. Production at the Zenith plant, which employs 3,500, also was halted for the day. Both plants expected to resume at least limited production Thursday.

A fire marshal estimated damage to the cosmetics factory at $250,000. Company officials had no immediate estimate. Zenith officials estimated damage there at $50,000.

Manly, Touts, Grimes, Alex Have Rough Time Advancing

By John Montague

The defending champion Manly Riverrats, along with the Town Touts, the Alexander Playboys and Grimes all advanced in the dorm play-offs Tuesday, but none had an easy time in doing it.

Manly won its first-round contest over the Avery Addicts, 12-6, on touchdowns by Jim Norton and George Seastrom. Phil Adams was the lone point-maker for the Addicts. The Riverrats now advance to the quarter-finals against the Joyner Jocks, who drew a first round bye.

All the other action came in quarter-finals contests. Ruffin, which had beaten the Mangum Mavericks in a slight upset on Thursday, saw its championship hopes go down the drain as it absorbed a 19-14 defeat at the hands of Grimes.

Sonny Simpson led the Grimes attack with a pair of TD's, with teammate Bill Freund picking up the other. Terry Maultsby made the extra point. Ruffin TD's were by Ron Hensen and Frank Potter, and PAT's were by Tom Grant and Lamar Reid.

The Town Touts withstood a tremendous second-half surge by Winston and left the field with a narrow 15-14 decision. The Touts dominated the first half, scoring all of their 15 points on TD's by Bob Watkins and Bob Roahes, a point-after by Bob Felton and a safety by Felton.

Winston bounced back in the second half, but their 14-point output fell one short of the Touts' first-half accomplishments. Ben Clifton and Dick Blackmon were the touchdown makers for the losers, B. Hicks being credited with a safety.

The Touts will meet the winner of the Manly-Joyner clash in the semi-finals, tentatively set for next Thursday.

In a game played under protest, the Alexander Playboys edged out Aycock, 14-13, on Jim Beaver's extra point. If the score stands, the Playboys will take on Grimes in the semi-finals.

Bobby Cornwell and Bobby Cox were the TD-makers for Alexander, with Richard Rabb getting the other point-after. Bill Brown and Jim Sanders notched TD's for Aycock, while Tom Henley made the PAT.

In the graduate circuit, the Dental School emerged victorious over the Law Blue by the somewhat unusual score of 7-4. Two safeties, one credited to Sam Poole and the other on an incomplete pass, accounted for the four Law points. Tom Ward's touchdown was more than enough to offset this, however, with Wallace making the PAT.

Entries Are In For Track Meet On Wednesday

All entries are in for the Intramural track meet next week. Preliminary heas will be held on Tuesday with the finals on Wednesday (Oct. 25).

A detailed program of the events will be released tomorrow. Contestants who do not appear at the scheduled time will be scratched.

Competition will be in three divisions, dorm, fraternity and grad, and will include nine events in each division. The events are: 60-yard dash, 100-yard dash, ½-mile run, 440-yard relay (shuttle), 880-yard relay (shuttle), discus, shot put, high jump and broad jump. A shuttle relay is run back-and-forth on a straightaway rather than continuously around a circular track.

Individuals may enter only two events plus the relays. Organizations may enter only three men in each event. No substitutions will be allowed at the meet with the exception of the relays.

Small plaques will be awarded to the individual winners, with winning teams receiving large plaques. Track is a point activity and a total of 130 points may be scored by the winning team. An organization must have at least eight men participating to receive entrance points. No ringers are allowed.

Any varsity or freshman letter winner in track is ineligible, regardless of the event they participated in while earning their letter. Any bona fide member in freshman or varsity track is ineligible to compete, as are cross-country and letter and numeral winners. This rule, however, does not apply to the grad division.

Six men will qualify for the finals in each of the running events, with the exception of the ½-mile run, which will be run only one time, on the second day. Only one score is necessary in the field events unless there is a tie for first place.

Cavayearlings Come Back To Top NC Freshmen, 6-5

By Martin Krumming

In a bitterly fought contest marked by rough play and sloppy ball control, Carolina's freshman soccer squad saw a 3-1 halftime lead go by the boards as it bowed 6-5 to the University of Virginia at Charlottesville on Tuesday.

The Tar Heels started rolling in the first period as left wing John Schlacter drilled a hard shot into the upper left-hand corner, and minutes later lanky center forward Jim Talbot arched a high head shot past the helpless Cavalier goaltender.

After a heated first half, the third period opened with both teams unable to control the ball for any length of time. The Tar Heels' defense started to collapse and before Coach Lemary realized it, Virginia's freshmen had struck for three straight scores. By this time play was becoming noticeably rough and the officials were forced to issue warnings for tripping, illegal blocks, and roughing the goalie. Carolina registered the equalizer with Talbot taking a pass from Schlacter and pushing it beyond the reach of the Virginia cager.

THE DATING SEASON

I have recently returned from a tour of 950,000 American colleges where I made a survey of undergraduate dating customs and sold mechanical dogs, and I have tabulated my findings and I am now prepared to tell you the simple secret of successful dating.

The simple secret is simply this: a date is successful when the man knows how to treat the girl.

And how does a girl like to be treated? If you want to know, read and remember these four cardinal rules of dating:

1. A girl likes to be treated with respect.

When you call for your girl, do not drive up in front of the sorority house and yell, "Hey, fat lady!" Get out of your car. Walk respectfully to the door. Knock respectfully. When your girl comes out, tug your forelock and say respectfully, "Good evening, your honor." Then offer her a Marlboro, for what greater respect can you show your girl than to offer Marlboro with its fine flavor and exclusive selectrate filter? It will indicate immediately that you respect her taste, respect her discernment, respect her intelligence. So, good buddies, before going out on a date, always remember to buy some Marlboros, available in soft pack or flip-top box in all 50 of the United States and also Cleveland.

A girl likes to be taken to nice places

2. A girl likes a good listener.

Do not monopolize the conversation. Let her talk while you listen attentively. Make sure, however, that she is not herself a good listener. I recollect a date I had once with a coed named Greensleeves Sigafoos, a lovely girl, but unfortunately a listener, not a talker. I too was a listener so we just sat all night long, each with his hand cupped over his ear, straining to catch a word, not talking hour after hour until finally a policeman came by and arrested us both for vagrancy. I did a year and a day. She got by with a suspended sentence because she was the sole support of her aged housemother.

3. A girl likes to be taken to nice places.

By "nice" places I do not mean expensive places. A girl does not demand luxury. All she asks is a place that is pleasant and gracious. The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, for example. Or Mount Rushmore. Or the Taj Mahal. Or the Bureau of Weights and Measures. Find places like these to take your girl. In no circumstances must you take her to an oil-cracking plant.

4. A girl likes a man to be well-informed.

Come prepared with a few interesting facts that you can drop casually into the conversation. Like this: "Did you know, Snookiepuss, that when cattle, sheep, camels, goats, antelopes, and other members of the cud-chewing family get up, they always get up hind legs first?" Or this: "Are you aware, Hotlips, that corn grows faster at night?" Or this: "By the way, Loverhead, Oslo did not become the capital of Norway till July 11, 1924."

If you can slip enough of these nuggets into the conversation before dinner, your date will grow too torpid to eat. Some men save up to a half million dollars a year this way.

Dean Perry Presents Records To Sylvia Mullins

The Frank Porter Graham Chapter of the Student National Education Assoc. has received five LP records from the Escuela Normal Superior of Mexico City.

The records are a part of the information exchange sponsored by the Interinstitutional Affiliation Project of the U.S. State Department and the Americain Assoc. of Colleges for Teacher Education.

Warren Describes Revolutions In Poetry For Jarrell Tribute

"Revolutions in poetry are made by new poems not by repudiating old ones," said Pulitzer Prize-winning author and critic Robert Penn Warren at Randall Jarrell's Tribute Wednesday night.

Speaking to a packed crowd at Hill Hall and a television audience, Warren presented an address, "Poetry and Our Moment," in honor of Randall Jarrell, North Carolina's winner of the 1961 National Book Award for his volume "The Women at the Washington Zoo."

Jarrell sat mildly on the stage and listened to the tribute to him and when the applause forced him to speak he said, "I certainly am grateful to you. I really don't know what to say."

The convocation, sponsored by UNC Press and the Historical Book Club of North Carolina, had many distinguished guests in honor of the poet including playwright Paul Green and Consolidated University President William B. Friday.

Robert Penn Warren spoke for the poetry of a new era. He said in reference to movements in poetry, "There is an organic necessity for revolt." Whenever insight fails when the fluidity of life puddles and hardens into orthodoxy, when personal style becomes period style, then the time is ripe for a change."

The characteristic of modern poets said Warren is their conscious passion for style. Warren throughout his speech emphasized that the end of an era of poetry is near and the dawn of a new one is coming. He said, "When a new poetic period dawns it always dawns with a prophetic urgency."

He closed his speech with a plea for a new revolt in poetry, what he called a "Servile revolt."

U. S. Firmly Opposes Red China In UN

WASHINGTON—President Kennedy declared Thursday that the United States firmly opposed the admission of Communist China to the United Nations or any part of the world organization.

In a statement issued under unusual circumstances, he said this country has always looked upon the Chinese Nationalist regime as "the rightful government representing China" in the United Nations.

The statement was made public just 24 hours after Secretary of State Dean Rusk predicted at a news conference that Red China would not be admitted to the United Nations this year.

Latest Red Move In Berlin Dismissed

WASHINGTON—The State Department Thursday dismissed with a figurative shrug Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's latest challenge to Allied activities in Berlin.

The department said there was nothing substantially new in Soviet notes charging that the Western powers are misusing the air corridors to Berlin. The notes were delivered Wednesday to the United States, Britain and France.

Russia claimed the Western powers could use the corridors only to move their own military personnel and supplies into Red-encircled Berlin. The Western powers insist they may use the corridors in any way they wish.

Congolese Clash With Katangese

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo—Radio Katanga Thursday reported that Central Congolese troops entered Katanga Province from South Kasai Wednesday and clashed briefly with Katangese forces.

There were no reports of casualties on either side.
